PROCEEDINGS AND DEBATES OF THE SIXTY-FOURTH CONGRESS, FIRST SESSION.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES.

SUNDAY, April 16, 1916.

The House met at 12 o'clock noon, and was called to order by Mr. NEELY as Speaker pro tempore.

The Chaplain, Rev. Henry N. Couden, D. D., offered the following prayer:

Eternal God, our heavenly Father, we praise and magnify Thy holy name for all the gifts Thou hast bestowed upon us which differentiate man from all Thy creative acts by his intellectual, moral, and spiritual endowments, which hold him close to Thee, and fill him with longings, hopes, and aspirations which lift him even to the throne of Thy divinity. For faith, hope, love, "faith the substance of things hoped for, the evidence of things not seen"; hope, the polar star which guides the traveler on his way"; love, the bond which time nor space can sever, the earnest of the immortality of the soul.

We meet here to-day because our hearts have been touched by the untimely death of a noble man, whose life was fraught with great thoughts and great deeds; a patriot, a philanthropist, a follower of the Jesus of Nazareth, a man beloved by all who knew him; wise in his counsels, tender in his affections, a friend to those in need; a man of affairs, untiring in his duties on the floor of this House. He will be missed in his home, in his community, his district, his State, his Nation. We mourn his going and would record on the pages of history his life, character, and deeds, that his example may be a beacon light to guide us and those who shall come after us to high and noble living. May his colleagues and friends, his bereaved, beloved wife and daughters find solace in the blessed promises of the immortality of the soul, and look forward with bright anticipations to the larger life beyond the confines of the now, where there shall be no more parting, and where God shall wipe all tears from all faces and love be the ruling passion forever and aye, in Jesus Christ, our Lord. Amen.

THE JOURNAL.

Mr. KITCHIN. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that the reading of the Journal be postponed until Monday.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from North Carolina asks unanimous consent that the reading of the Journal be postponed until Monday. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

LEAVE TO PRINT.

Mr. KITCHIN. Mr. Speaker, since many Members thought these ceremonies would take place next Sunday instead of to-day, I ask unanimous consent that any Member have the privilege of extending remarks in the RECORD on the life, character, and public services of our deceased colleague, the late Representative BROWN, of West Virginia.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from North Carolina asks that all Members have leave to extend remarks in the RECORD on the life, character, and public services of our deceased colleague. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

THE LATE REPRESENTATIVE BROWN OF WEST VIRGINIA.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Clerk will report the special order for the day.

The Clerk read as follows:

On motion of Mr. NEELY, by unanimous consent, Ordered, That Sunday, April 16, 1916, be set apart for addresses upon the life, character, and public services of Hon. WILLIAM G. BROWN, Jr., late a Representative from the State of West Virginia.

Mr. LITTLEPAGE. Mr. Speaker, I offer the following resolution and move its adoption.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from West Virginia offers a resolution which the Clerk will report.

House resolution 204.

Resolved, That the business of the House be now suspended, that opportunity may be given for tributes to the memory of Hon. WILLIAM G. BROWN, jr., late a Member of this House from the State of West Virginia.

Resolved, That as a particular mark of respect to the memory of the deceased, and in recognition of his distinguished public career, the House, at the conclusion of these exercises, shall stand adjourned.

Resolved, That the Clerk communicate these resolutions to the Senate.

Resolved, That the Clerk send a copy of these resolutions to the family of the deceased.

The resolution was agreed to.

Mr. LITTLEPAGE. Mr. Speaker, we are assembled in this Hall of the House of Representatives in the Capitol of this Nation to pay our last tribute to the life's efforts and the memory of a distinguished member of this American Congress, who departed this life on the 9th day of March, 1916.

In the death of Hon. WILLIAM G. BROWN, the second district of West Virginia suffered an irreparable loss. In fact, the entire State of West Virginia and this Nation thereby suffered a very great loss. I had the honor to enter this House as a Member and to take the oath of office as a Representative from the third congressional district of West Virginia at the same time Mr. BROWN entered as a Representative from the second district of West Virginia. Prior to that time, while we knew each other, our acquaintance was not as close as it became from the beginning of our service here, and in paying this last tribute to the memory of this good man, sentiment and justice impel me to say that I found him during all the vicissitudes, the turmoil, and pleasures of his busy official life a thorough, polished gentleman, a hard worker, a faithful friend, and an industrious public servant.

He was indeed a very charitable man, especially to the poor and unfortunate. His public relations here with the membership of this House have always been of the most cordial, courteous, and elevating character. He loved his district, his State, and his Government. He was essentially an American; yes, an American in the broadest sense of that great word. His love for his Government and his Government's institutions, as shown by his course as a public man, was uppermost in his mind and heart. The Members of this House, regardless of partisan politics, looked upon him as a friend and loved him as a just, patriotic man.

Our official relations and personal friendship improved from the first day of our service in this House until that friendship ripened and became one of affection. Our offices were in the same corridor of the House Office Building, and I know something about the way he labored for the people who honored him by electing him to Congress three consecutive times, and I know he was an honor to the people not only of his district, but all of the people of his State and mine. Late and early have I seen him at work. His office was a beehive of industry—hundreds of his constituents coming and going to see him; and to every one, whether they voted for or against him, he extended the glad hand of welcome. I have known of many of his constituents whom he befriended in more ways than one, often in a financial way, and I have no doubt, from his known qualities of liberality, that it will require many thousands of dollars to tell the true story of his charity.

WILLIAM GAY BROWN was born on April 7, 1856, in Kingwood, Preston County, W. Va., and died in the Capital of his Nation. He leaves a widow and infant daughter, and also a daughter by a former marriage.

One notable and characteristic feature of his usefulness and noble life was the great love he constantly bore for his mother. She lived to quite an old age at the old family homestead in Kingwood. He often talked with me about his mother before her death, which occurred on the 8th day of February, 1913, and he talked with me about her since her death. By her death he was dealt a staggering blow and seemed never to have gotten over it.

I had the honor to be chosen as a member of the committee to go with his remains from this city to Kingwood, where they were buried, and had the membership of this House and the people who knew him here witnessed the outpouring of his neighbors and the sadness which seemed to pervade the whole community, and heard the expressions of friendship, good will, and love cherished for him by his neighbors and those who knew him best, I am sure the respect for him here would, if possible, be increased.

It is sad to contemplate, Mr. Speaker, that he was taken from us so suddenly, and that he has gone forever. In the midst of a busy and a useful life he was cut down and fell like a mighty oak of the forest to arise no more. No more shall we hear his voice in this chamber; never again will we be able to grasp his friendly hand. He has gone to his final reward, leaving a memory cherished as few have been. His splendid spirit, so worthy, so noble and inspiring, has taken its flight to a better world, there to dwell with his loved ones gone before. Tender memories cluster around his empty chair in this house of sadness to-day, and these sacred memories, in part compensating for his loss and absence, will be cherished evermore by those who knew him, and to have known him was to love him.

He was prepared and not afraid to die. His only concern in this respect was for his loved ones left behind. With hearts full of sorrow and sympathy for his widow, who was so faithful to her distinguished and beloved husband even unto death, and to his two children, we, in this hour of distress and genuine sadness, offer our condolence and renew our promise and bond of friendship to and for them while life lasts.

Mr. FOSTER. Mr. Speaker, it was my good fortune to serve on a committee of this House with Hon. WILLIAM G. BROWN, late a Representative from the State of West Virginia. He was known by all the members of the committee as a faithful, honest, hard-working Representative.

Mr. BROWN was most respected by the people with whom he was best acquainted and where he had lived all his life. Close association and frequent meeting of a man under the varied conditions of life shows best what there is in him, and he is best judged by what he does in everyday life. Mr. BROWN'S life was an open book to those who knew him, and no one had complaint to make of his action as a representative of the people by whom he was so much honored and respected. He was faithful and devoted to the people of the congressional district which he represented in this House. He was always unassuming and went about his work in a quiet way, determined to give the most efficient service that was possible. He was a man of whom it could be truly said the world was better because he had lived a good and useful life and it was a loss when he was taken away.

On March 27, 1916, the committee on which he was a member passed resolutions with reference to the life, character, and services of this distinguished man, and I ask that these resolutions be read from the Clerk's desk.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Clerk will report the resolutions.

The Clerk read as follows:

WILLIAM G. BROWN, Jr., Representative of the second congressional district of West Virginia, in the National House of Representatives, was born at Kingwood, Va. (later West Virginia), April 7, 1856, and died in Washington, D. C., stricken in the midst of his varied legislative duties, March 9, 1916. One of his official connections as a Member of this House was an assignment to the Committee on Mines and Mining, which committee, profoundly sensible of its loss and reflecting on the valuable services and affable companionship of the deceased Member, at a meeting held considered and adopted the following resolutions for presentation to the House April 16, 1916:

"Whereas death, on swift and silent feet, unheralded and unannounced by any warning, has come to this committee and taken away one of its most highly valued and beloved Members; and

"Whereas, in the passing from among us of the Hon. WILLIAM G. BROWN, Jr., this committee experiences a sense of shock and bereavement and loss by his death: Be it, therefore,

"Resolved, That this committee, in so far as it is able to translate its feelings of personal loss through the medium of the written word, lay this sincere but all too insufficient tribute upon the altar of the cherished memory of a colleague whose services to his country and to this committee were of a high order, whose genial and whole-souled personality, whose gentlemanly qualities and uniform courtesy at all times won him a warm and affectionate regard and esteem in the hearts of the members of this body. "Junior" BROWN, as he was lovingly called by all who knew him, as a Member of the Sixty-second, Sixty-third, and Sixty-fourth Congresses showed to his newly made associates those sterling qualities of mind and heart which enabled him to achieve success in the financial, political, and social life of his native State and gave him a commanding and heroic place in the hearts of his fellow West Virginians. He was a popular and highly respected figure throughout his own State, as he was a Member of the House and of this committee. He brought to his official duties in Congress a broad experience, a matured, equably balanced judgment, a high sense of honor and integrity, and a lofty patriotism which quickly gained for him the recognition and appreciation from his colleagues that he so richly deserved.

"Resolved, therefore, That these resolutions be communicated to the House and that a copy thereof be transmitted to the family of the deceased."

Mr. CULLOP. Mr. Speaker, WILLIAM GAY BROWN, Jr., late a Representative from the State of West Virginia, was one of the most genial and lovable men I have ever known. He was a prince among men and a courtly knight among women. His affable manners and pleasing disposition made him a favorite in every assemblage in which he formed a part.

Born of good parentage, reared amid pleasing environments, surrounded with the advantages of culture and refinement, trained in business affairs by parents who had earned success as the result of ability, industry, and sagacity, he was well equipped for the battles of life, and prepared to successfully grapple with the questions he would necessarily be called upon to meet and solve in his career.

His father was a noted lawyer in his day in the community in which he lived, a man of strong will power, courage, and determination, shrewd in business affairs, and popular among his people. He served several terms in Congress, was the author of the enabling act creating West Virginia a sovereign State, and because of this distinguished service was often called the "Father of West Virginia."

His mother was a most admirable person, a strong character, sagacious in business affairs, and a most lovable woman. Mr. BROWN often spoke of her in the most affectionate manner.

I first met Mr. BROWN at the opening of the Sixty-second Congress, the beginning of his congressional service. We became warm friends and associates at once and so remained until his death, which I keenly felt and which came as a great shock to me.

When I last saw him, about five weeks before his death, he was in splendid spirits, having just recovered from a temporary illness. He appeared as one who had the assurance of regained health and a long and useful life. He impressed me on that occasion as a supremely happy and contented man. As he appeared at that time no one would have suspected the end of life with him was only a few weeks distant.

I doubt if any Member of this House enjoyed the loyal friendship of his constituency to such a degree as he did. He represented a district with at least three thousand majority opposed to his political faith, and yet despite this large majority in a united party he was elected three times in succession to a seat in this body when in each race the strongest man the opposition had was pitted against him. This is ample proof of his popularity, his high standing among the people of his district, and the regard in which he was held by them. Because of his attractive personality and strong individuality men, irrespective of party, were bound to him as with bands of steel. To know him was to admire him; once his friend always his friend.

I have seen men from his district meet him here and greet him with manifestations of fondest regard and affection. At times it was touching to see and hear their manifestations of regard for him. He had a warm place in their hearts, and they were ever ready to show evidence of their confidence in and display their loyalty to him. Here is the explanation for his success at elections, the reason for his strength. His popularity was easily understood when you once knew him. It was earned by his warm and generous nature, his uniform kindness to all with whom he came in contact, his broad and liberal views, courteous conduct, and unselfish disposition.

Generous to the needy, devoted to the welfare of all, he earned and won the confidence of the people he served, because he served them well, and in him they knew they had a loyal and devoted friend, a champion of their cause.

In life he added to the joys of humanity, and were everyone, this day, for whom he did some kind service to bring flowers to his grave, it would be hidden beneath a mountain of the richest and rarest blossoms.

Life is a short span between the cloud-covered peaks of two eternities. Beyond them we know not. No one has ever heard the voice of one who has journeyed across the perilous divide, and no being has ever returned from the eternal abode to tell of its mysteries, but a sublime faith in the wisdom of our Creator as the great architect of the universe convinces us of the immortality of the soul, and that when freed from the earthly casement which imprisons it here it joins the band of immortals in eternity.

Death is a tragedy. The more impressive was this tragedy in the death of our late colleague because life was so attractive to him. He was in the zenith of his power and the opportunities for usefulness were opening their various avenues for him to enjoy the rare facilities at his disposal. Before him were opportunities for public service, wherein he could earn great reputation and better the condition of his people who loyally confided in him. But while in the enjoyment of all these pleasing environments, surrounded by his loved ones, enjoying health, in full possession of all his powers, mental and physical, like an assassin in the night, without warning, the messenger of death touched him with his fatal dart and he fell to rise no more.

The kind gentle voice was hushed, the stalwart man in the fullness of his strength was paralyzed, powerless to rise again, and his earthly career was ended.

In the daily conflicts of life, where man was pitted against man, in daily affairs as they would come and go, success had crowned his efforts, but when he met the unconquerable foe of life, death, he fell a captive, surrendered to his fate, the same which must sooner or later be the common heritage of us all.

In his demise his constituency have lost a faithful public servant—true, honest, and courageous in the discharge of every public duty; his associates, a most agreeable companion; and his family, an indulgent and loving father and husband; the country, a manly man.

And this his epitaph shall be,
When ended are his days;
None knew him but to love him,
None named him but to praise.

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. Mr. Speaker, various things bring men into close friendship and confidential relationship in this House—place of birth, residence, similarity of tastes, political faith, committee work, and so forth.

It so happens that I lived for two years in West Virginia and learned to love her people. Consequently I have always cultivated the acquaintance and friendship of her Senators and Representatives. From his first entrance upon this scene, Hon. WILLIAM G. BROWN and I were close friends, a fact which I most highly appreciate. I found him true as steel, kind, intelligent, firm, affable, and attentive to his public duties. He was a dependable man—not brilliant but dependable, which is far better. Having made up his mind deliberately that a certain course was right, he pursued it without shadow of turning. He could be neither bullied nor coaxed out of it. Such men are the most valuable public servants.

He was grandson of James Brown, an Irish immigrant, who in 1789 settled at Kingwood, in that part of the Old Dominion which subsequently became West Virginia. It is a wonderful State—the Switzerland of America—inestimably rich in natural resources. To this James Brown was born in 1800 a son, Hon. William G. Brown, sr. He enjoyed the peculiar distinction of serving in Congress from two different States—Virginia and West Virginia—though he lived all his life in the same town wherein he was born—Kingston. So our friend WILLIAM G. BROWN, jr., having an Irishman for a grandfather and a Representative in Congress for his father, naturally and inevitably had a penchant for politics, in which he succeeded admirably. The quality of success in him was hereditary. He succeeded in business as well as in politics. Having accumulated a competency by industry, capacity, and honest methods, he concluded to walk in his father's footsteps, which led to this Hall. We are all glad he did so; otherwise we would not have enjoyed the pleasure of knowing him.

None knew him but to love him;
None named him but to praise.

Mr. RUSSELL of Missouri. Mr. Speaker: The most valuable compensation that comes to one who serves in this House is the strong enduring friendships that are formed between him and his colleagues with whom he is intimately associated, and the saddest experiences of our public service is when death suddenly severs the strong ties that have bound us together, leaving only a saddened but a sweet and an unfading memory of the pleasant hours of the past when our common tastes, similar ambitions, and mutual sympathies drew us together as associates and cemented our affections into a bond of undying friendship. Another of these ties has been broken in the death of WILLIAM G. BROWN, jr.

I did not know my departed friend until he came here five years ago this month as a Member of the Sixty-second Congress. During his five years' service in Congress we lived at the same hotel. Our personal relations were always friendly, sometimes confidential, and to me always delightful.

I have sometimes said in his lifetime, and as it is no discredit to his memory, I repeat now, that he was by nature one of the most genial companions and superb hosts I have ever known. He loved his friends and gave more of his time and means to entertain them than any one of the Members of this House that I have observed. His hospitality was not cold and formal, but genuine and whole hearted. He illustrated well the teaching of the Proverb, "It is better to give than to receive." From many close observations of his generous entertainment of his friends I know I can truthfully say that he considered it a privilege and not a burden to be permitted to extend courtesies to his constituents and others whom he loved.

As a Representative in this House he was industrious, vigilant, and faithful to the constituency that honored and trusted him. In my last conversation with him he thanked me for some little assistance that I had rendered to him in securing a favorable consideration of a special bill he had introduced for the relief of a destitute and deserving old soldier. This only illustrates his earnest desire to serve well even the humblest of those he represented.

I was pained as we all were when we heard that our colleague had passed away, and this House on that day adjourned out of respect to his memory. I was appointed by the Speaker as a member of the committee to attend his funeral at his former home, and did so.

Knowing him here as we did, and appreciating so well his many manly qualities and noble impulses, those of us who accompanied his remains home were not surprised to find that among the people who knew him the longest and the best he was universally respected an devotedly loved by all. The people of his home city in the full realization of the great loss they had sustained spoke grievously of his death and in praise of the many virtues of the distinguished dead, and feelingly of their own personal sorrow.

We often hear repeated the familiar quotation from the Bible, "A prophet is not without honor save in his own country." The thought intended to be expressed is that a man can not reach high places of distinction and honor among those who have known him intimately all the days of his life. I believe there is in a measure some justification for the use of the quotation. New things are often attractive, and strange faces with the mysteries of life behind them sometimes stimulate an imagination of superior virtues and wisdom that may lead to the admiration and approval of the unknown by a confiding public. Upon the other hand we are sometimes prone to overlook or fail to appreciate the truly great men who have lived their entire lives in our midst. If this familiarity is in fact an abstruction to the successful aspirations and ambitions of men, it was completely overcome by WILLIAM G. BROWN, Jr. He and his father before him were born in the little city where he now sleeps in death. He never had any other home; every man, woman, and child there knew him intimately; many of them knew him and observed almost his daily life from the cradle to the grave, and to his eternal credit it may be truthfully said they all respected and loved him. They delighted to honor him in life and they all now revere his memory.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Speaker, we are assembled on this bright and beautiful spring day to pay our tribute of affectionate remembrance to one of the best and noblest Members of this Congress.

At the beginning of every Congress the old Members attempt to take the measure of each new member with whom they come in contact. I noticed Mr. BROWN on the floor of the House shortly after he came into the Sixty-second Congress, and was attracted by his many worthy qualities. Several summers ago Mrs. Mann took a cottage up at Deer Park. I used to spend my week ends up there, and on a number of occasions traveled with Mr. BROWN on the train going there or returning. We had many very interesting conversations, and I became peculiarly and affectionately attracted to him, because of the sweet qualities he exhibited on those rides, so that I gave more than passing attention to him in the House. I learned that among all the Members of the House there was, I think, no other one with more genial, kindly, capable, earnest, and sincere qualities than Mr. BROWN.

A year ago Mr. and Mrs. Brown, Mrs. Mann and myself, and a number of others of this body and of the Senate were on our way to Hawaii. We traveled across the continent to San Francisco and from there by boat to Honolulu and around the islands. There were, I believe, in that party 49 members of the House and Senate, many with their families and some friends. It is on such occasions that we really learn to know the personal side, the tender side, the endearing side of men and women. Mrs. Brown was the life of that party, and I am sure no one in the party was happier and more filled with enjoyment from day to day than was Mr. BROWN; and the two added so much to our pleasure that they became affectionately regarded by all our hearts.

When the statement came in the House one morning that Mr. BROWN had passed away I felt as though I had lost a brother. He was a Democrat, I was the Republican leader of the House when he came in. It is one of the beautiful features of American politics, particularly exemplified in this House, that the aisle on one side of which sit the Democrats and on the other side the Republicans is not a dividing aisle between the hearts of men. Friendships do not cease at the center aisle. We have on our side of the House just as warm personal friends on the other side as we have on this; and I counted it a great pleasure to know that I on my side could enjoy the friendship of Mr. BROWN, as I believe he enjoyed our friendship from his side. He and I were the same age. He has passed away, just at a time when probably it was the hardest for him to go. A man close to 60, he had just become the father of a little daughter. With all the reasons for living that loving pleasure could give, he was stricken down. Yet, Mr. Speaker, I feel, and I presume I will continue for the balance of my life to feel, as though I had lived a full life, and done perhaps that share of work which I might easily have expected would be more than I could complete. He was willing to go if he could have done so without leaving sorrow behind him. I would be willing to go at any time.

Mr. HAYES. Mr. Speaker, it was my pleasure to become acquainted with WILLIAM G. BROWN, jr., or as he was known universally by the people of his own county, and probably of his district, and by those who knew him familiarly, simply as Junior, when he entered the Sixty-second Congress and received as a Member of this body an assignment for service on the Banking and Currency Committee of which I was then and am still a member. I was immediately impressed with the ability and versatility that he brought to the discharge of his high duties as a member of that committee and of this House, and with his experience as a man of large business affairs, and a banker for many years. His judgment and ideas of the things that should be embraced in legislation were generally, according to my standard, eminently sound and practical. I think one of his most distinguishing characteristics was his absolute loyalty to his own conscience and sense of what was right and best for the people, not only of his district but of the whole country.

As illustrating this I beg to repeat a little instance that occurred during the present Congress at a meeting of the Banking and Currency Committee. I perhaps ought first to say that it is in the sessions of the various committees of the House where Members of this body come best to know each other personally and intimately. The informality of procedure in committee gets men very close together, and they come to know each other's personal peculiarities and characteristics as they could not know them by meeting only on the floor of the House during its sessions. I came very soon to know Mr. BROWN as a man most loyal to his obligations as a Member of the House and to his sense of what was right and proper in legislation.

In the last Congress, in the consideration of the rural-credit bill which was then under consideration, Mr. BROWN, upon a very important matter in connection with that legislation, took a strong position in favor of one proposition in the bill and maintained it to the close of the Congress. In this Congress the same matter was again before the Committee on Banking and Currency, and a most exhaustive discussion upon both sides of the proposition was participated in by members of the committee, of course without any regard to politics. At the end of the discussion Mr. BROWN announced to the committee that the discussion had satisfied him that he was wrong in his former attitude on that proposition and that he should vote contrary to what he voted in the last Congress, and when the vote was taken he did so vote.

I regard that, Mr. Speaker, as a very strong indication of the strength of character of our late colleague, Mr. BROWN, and an exhibition of real moral courage which, alas, Members of the House do not always exhibit. Mr. BROWN was a man who would rather be right than be consistent.

I was appointed a member of the committee which attended the funeral of our late colleague, and I was glad to attend the services which took place in his home town. While in that community I discovered that not only the people of his own town but of the country at large regarded him in a way that any man should be proud to be regarded by his neighbors where he had lived all his life. They regarded him as a personal friend who entered with a sympathetic heart into all their struggles and trials. He could call them, as I am informed, and even their children, by name, and if disaster came to them he truly sympathized with them in their trouble.

I was advised, and I have no doubt it is true, that in his last will and testament he left directions to his executor that in the distribution and settlement of his estate no man who owed him—and many in his district did—was to be pressed or forced to pay his obligations until he could do so without sacrifice. That exhibited another beautiful and most estimable and praiseworthy element of the character of Mr. BROWN. He sympathized with the community, with his neighbors, and with those with whom he came in contact to an extent that was well-nigh all embracing. I believe such enlightened human sympathy to be one of the most beautiful characteristics of any human life.

Mr. Speaker, such a life as that of our late colleague, which blessed the world with usefulness, geniality, and sympathy, has not ended. It has only been transferred to another sphere of activity and usefulness. Human life is continuous and is not bounded by the few years of our mortal activity here. It reaches not only from the cradle to the grave but from the cradle to the farthest stretches of eternity. That WILLIAM G. BROWN, Jr., is just as conspicuous in the great beyond for optimism and all the admirable and lovable traits of his character as he was in this world, I have not a doubt, and in the not distant future I expect again to meet him and know him and love him even as I knew and loved him here.

Mr. HEFLIN. Mr. Speaker, it was my pleasure to know and to be intimately associated with W. G. BROWN, the distinguished Member of Congress from West Virginia. We come together to-day to pay our tributes of respect and esteem to the character and public services of this fellow Member who has gone, one in whom the elements of gentility and sincerity blended in beautiful form. He was popular as a Member of Congress and loved by all who knew him. He carried in his heart a warm affection for the people who honored him with a seat in this House, and he honored his district with the nobility of his character and by the splendid services that he rendered here. He was an energetic, conscientious, and able Member of Congress, and served his district and the country faithfully and well.

Mr. Speaker, although he had not been in the best of health for the last year or two, yet he was cheerful and bright and happy, carrying sunshine and good cheer wherever he went. He loved life, and he enjoyed it to the full. In his happy home circle he was the ideal husband and father, loving and beloved by his dear ones there. He was a splendid type of American manhood, a patriotic citizen, a loyal friend, and a faithful public servant.

Mr. Speaker, we miss his hearty hand-grasp; we hear no more his cheerful voice and we see no more his pleasing, winsome smile. He has answered his last roll call, and has fallen asleep in the midst of a happy, busy, and useful life. So in the process of that long and mysterious slumber that must come to us all he has passed into a higher state of living. Just as sleep is necessary to refresh and build anew the body for life's little day, so is the final sleep necessary in the plans and purposes of immortality, for that bright day that has no night. He has gone the way that we must go when we have done with the clattering discords of time.

Let us remember the many noble traits of his beautiful character. And, Mr. Speaker, let us, who served with him so pleasantly, here emulate his virtues, and so live that when the final sleep shall come to us we will be able to meet it as courageously and as sweetly as did the friend we mourn to-day.

Mr. SAUNDERS. Mr. Speaker, Once more death has found a shining mark and with relentless stroke quenched the activities of a busy and useful life. Even now it is hard to realize that our colleague is dead. The news that he had been fatally stricken and that his life hung by a thread that the passing day might sever came with the sudden and unexpected quality of a lightning flash in a clear sky. Only a night or two before a company of friends had gathered at his house to enjoy the gracious hospitality that he was wont to dispense. They parted with no premonition of impending calamity, no foreknowledge that they would never see their host again in life, or that within a few brief hours his mobile face would be stilled forever in the calm and awful serenity of death. JUNIOR BROWN, as he was affectionately styled by his friends, was so full of cheery optimism, his handshake was so cordial, his smile so winning and compelling that he and death seemed things apart. His generous nature rejoiced in the comradeship of his fellows. He radiated sunshine. He was frank, sincere, warm-hearted, sympathetic, tender, and true as steel in all the relations of life. To know him was to love him. Such was the universal testimony of his friends, and they were legion.

Confronted anew with the realization that the grim reaper lurks at every elbow, ready to strike an unexpected blow, we mourn to-day an untimely death, and with his memory still green in our hearts we reject for the time the comforting thought that this mortal has put on immortality and the soul of our comrade has exchanged the limitations of its fleshly tabernacle for the splendors of the temple not made with hands.

But while JUNIOR BROWN possessed all those lovable qualities which attracted and constrained the affection of his fellows, he was far more than a sincere, warm-hearted, genial, and agreeable companion and friend. He was every inch a man, strong in character, industrious in habit, austere in integrity, firm, resolute, energetic, and able. He was sound in judgment, keen and sagacious in perception, wise in council, fertile in resource, steadfast in action. He was generous in a large way, but not ostentatious in his charities, keeping ever in mind the injunction that the one hand should not be acquainted with the action of the other. Born to a fortune, the qualities that I have described enabled our colleague to escape the numbing effect that wealth too often exercises upon its possessors, inaptly described as fortunate. Basking in fortune's lap and caressed by her smiles, they are content to see others win the prizes of life, while they loll on beds of flowery ease that great riches have provided. Lacking the sharp spur of necessity, they are not moved to strenuous endeavor or to live laborious days. But our friend was made of sterner stuff. He was not willing to play an ignoble and petty part. As a youth he prosecuted with diligence and success his studies in the schools of his native State, and later, in the full flush of vigorous young manhood, he graduated at the University of West Virginia. Admitted early to the bar, he practiced his profession with success until called to the charge of administering the affairs of a great estate.

In time he felt the lure of politics, but his first venture was not successful. Nominated for Congress in a doubtful district, he was defeated in 1896 by Judge Dayton. Later he was nominated in 1910 and was successful. This election established his hold upon the people of his district and he was elected again in 1912, and still again in 1914. Had he lived, he would have been nominated without opposition for a fourth term, and triumphantly elected. Our colleague's chief work in the House, of which he was an esteemed and well-beloved Member, was on the Banking and Currency Committee.

In this work his experience as a banker served him in good stead, and he rendered conspicuous service in the preparation of the Federal reserve act. At the time of his death, he was a member of the subcommittee engaged in framing a rural-credits bill. For this work his training and experience as an expert banker, and successful man of affairs, conspicuously fitted him, and his premature death was a distinct loss not only to his colleagues with whom he was collaborating, but to the agricultural interests of the entire country which are so greatly concerned in the outcome of this important measure. Our comrade was not a frequent speaker in this body, but when occasion demanded, he spoke clearly and impressively, with vigorous emphasis and cogent argument.

While no man was more beloved in the House, this affectionate regard for our deceased friend was equaled if not surpassed in the district where he lived and dispensed his generous and unobtrusive benefactions. This regard was abundantly attested by the presence of the vast throng that, undeterred by untoward weather, gathered from every quarter to attend his funeral exercises. For hours an apparently unending stream of sorrowing friends passed by the casket that contained all that was mortal of WILLIAM GAY BROWN, and after one long look at that once mobile face, there stilled in death, turned mournfully away. The room was embowered in flowers. A great orator, speaking of his brother, once said that if every one who had received some act of kindness at his hands would drop one flower on his grave he would sleep under a wilderness of blossoms. Appropriately this thought came to my mind when I stood in the room consecrated to death, and saw on every hand, banked high in glorious profusion, the flowers that loving hearts had provided for tender hands to place upon the grave of our friend. The sun was sinking low in the west when we started on our return to Washington, leaving our comrade to sleep among the people whom he knew and loved, and who knew and loved him.

Musing sorrowfuly over the experiences of the day, fond memory recalled the lines that have brought comfort to others when oppressed with the solemn mystery of death:

He is not dead, but sleepeth; well we know
The form, that now lies mute beneath the sod,
Shall rise, when time the golden bugles blow,
And pour their music through the courts of God.

Mr. SUTHERLAND. Mr. Speaker, it is a sad thing for those left behind even when one who has reached the utmost limit of old age is called upon to enter "that bourn whence no traveler e'er returns," but when one is stricken down in the full power of his mature manhood, and that person is one with whom we have been daily associated, and in whose life is combined the elements of essential strength, power, success, and practically everything that makes life full and complete, there is a shock and a sense of loss that overpowers us and bids us pause and consider the issues of life. It was a severe shock to the membership of this House, and particularly to his West Virginia colleagues, when, almost without warning, our friend, the late WILLIAM G. BROWN, was stricken. Upon this sad occasion when we are assembled to pay the last tribute of respect to his memory, I desire briefly, but in sincere affection for the memory of our departed friend, to add my voice to those who at this time are giving testimony to their appreciation of the life, character, and services of "Junior" BROWN, as he was affectionately called by his constituents and friends in West Virginia.

Speaking from a personal acquaintance with my departed colleague of nearly 20 years, I can say in sincerity and in truth that few men in West Virginia have been more beloved for the very best traits of a rugged, yet kind and sympathetic, manhood than he has been by a large and ever-widening circle of friends. Born and reared among the rugged mountains of West Virginia, he had the strength that comes to the hardy outdoor dweller in the life-giving atmosphere of his native State. He was fortunate in having an ancestry of sturdy pioneers who had likewise lived.

Early in life he formed the resolution to represent his congressional district in Congress, as his father had done, and his successful attainment of that worthy ambition upon three successive occasions as a Democrat in a normally Republican district, after having once many years earlier been defeated, shows the determination of the man and the friendship held for him by his neighbors and friends in the second congressional district of West Virginia.

As the representative in Congress of that splendid constituency he met the highest expectations of his friends, and as a colleague in the work of this body and a resident of the same congressional district in which he lived, and being of opposite political faith I can truthfully say that he was always ready and alert to discharge every obligation to his constituents without regard to political lines, and I shall always cherish as one of the pleasantest personal friendships I have enjoyed during the Sixty-third and the present Congress that which I have had the pleasure of enjoying with my deceased friend and colleague, JUNIOR BROWN, and I, in common with all the Members of this House who knew him well, give this tribute of my affectionate regard to his memory.

Mr. CANDLER of Mississippi. Mr. Speaker, it is with a heart full of sadness that I rise to participate in the services upon this solemn occasion. I met Mr. BROWN when he first came to Congress at the beginning of his term in the Sixty-second Congress. From the time when I first met him until the last moment of his life he and I were close and good and affectionate friends. I loved him devotedly, as he loved me, and on many occasions when I had difficult questions confronting me he was the one among all others to whom I went and with whom I discussed these matters, in order that I might arrive at a solution of them which would be just and right.

No man ever had a better friend or a safer counselor than when he had JUNIOR BROWN as a friend and counselor in times of difficulty, in times of struggle, in times when it was necessary to exercise the very best judgment and to have wisdom which would lighten up the pathway and lead to a conclusion that was pure, honest, and just.

He was a patriot. He came from a sturdy stock that were pioneers in blazing the way amidst the forests then, that have become fertile fields since; a stock that has brought to us and furnished to us the beauty and the sunlight and the grandeur of the civilization which we enjoy.

We of this generation owe much to those early pioneers. They clung to that which was honest and just and right as between man and man; and in their cabin homes, dotted on the hilltops and sprinkled through the sequestered valleys of this beautiful land of ours, they laid the foundation that has sustained the enduring superstructure of this the greatest Nation of the world.

It was from stock like this that JUNIOR BROWN came, and he was a fit exemplar of the principles which they loved, because he clung until the end to the same just principles of righteousness and truth which they advocated and ever maintained and sustained with their lives, their property, their possessions, in the interest of mankind, and for the glory of this country. That was the kind of patriot he was. A self-sacrificing, devoted patriot who placed country above self and public welfare above private interest.

His affection, while it went out in all its fullness and tenderness to those by whom he was surrounded in his immediate district and State, was not confined to them alone, but went further; it went to the extremities of this great country; and he loved his country and admired its grandeur and glory, and brought a consecrated devotion to it in the service he rendered in this House, not only for the advancement of the interests of his district and his State, but looking always to the welfare and prosperity of this great Nation as well.

He was not only a patriot, Mr. Speaker, but he was a citizen who measured up to the very highest standard. He had the highest conception of the duties and responsibilities of American citizenship, and he pursued that course, in private and official life, as a citizen of the Republic and of his State and district, that shed brilliancy and brightness everywhere he went.

Do you know that one of the highest conceptions which any man can have in all this world is to aspire to that lofty and high standard exemplified in patriotic American citizenship? I have sometimes said that I believe that the highest position any man can hold in all this country is the position of a true American citizen who, by his life and example and purposes and desires, carries to as near perfection as possible the great purposes of this Nation, as exemplified in the bedrock principles upon which it is founded. As such a citizen Junior BROWN sought during all his illustrious career, from his young manhood down to the day he left us, to erect such a standard and to maintain it among the people who knew him; and he thereby secured their affection and confidence, which was evidenced in their loyalty and devotion to him to the hour of his untimely death. While these characteristics of this great and good man are to be and are supremely admired, still the sweetest and the noblest and the best element of his nature and of his manhood was his devotion, his tender affection to his friends and to his loved ones.

No man could be with him as his friend but could feel the pulsations of his heart that beat in unison with yours, if he loved you; and if you were indeed and in truth a sharer in his affection and friendship, you would feel that he stood right beside you, and that you did not have to reach out to determine at any time whether he was there; whether the darkness or the sunshine was round about you, his friendship was extended to you in such force and affection that you always knew, especially if you needed him, that he was there, ready to uphold and sustain you. His devotion to his mother and all his loved ones was sublimely beautiful. Often did he speak of his father, his mother, and his dear ones, and their happiness was his supreme joy.

It was my good fortune to be with him and his family in his home at the last meal, I presume, he ever partook of upon this earth. My wife, my daughter, and myself, with his family, gathered around the table in his home and partook with him of his most delightful hospitality. After dinner he and I went in his library, while my wife and daughter with his wife and sister-in-law and mother-in-law, and the sweet babies were in another room. He talked to me about some great public questions which were then pending, showing the earnestness and desire of his heart above everything to do that which was right and best in their solution. That evening as we sat and discussed them, as he sought from me what little advice I might be able to give him in the solution of them, his face would light up as we studied them and tried to find out that which was best; and when we came to the conclusion which would have been enunciated by his vote upon the following day, I shall never forget the happiness which was expressed in his face, in the realization that he believed at least he had arrived at a conclusion that was for the welfare of the people he represented and the glory of his country.

In the fleeting years which may come and go I shall never forget the scene as he went down the steps that night with us when we left his house to the curbstone and placed us in his automobile to send us back to the hotel and stood there with the brightness and gladness and happiness that were expressed in his face as he bade us a cheerful good-night, and then, closing the door, as he turned away, waved his hand and said, "Zeke, I will see you to-morrow." To-morrow did not come with him so as he might meet with me upon this earth. That night he was stricken. The hours went by, and God called him. He responded. His white soul went into the presence of the great God of the universe, through the pearly gates, along the golden streets, and, as I believe, into the mansion prepared for him, eternal in the heavens. To-morrow did not come here, but to-morrow will come in the brightness of the perfect day, and I hope to meet him, and with the glad clasp of his hand and the warmth of his heart and the brightness of his face we shall rejoice together again in the happier day that knows no ending but which shall roll on through the ages of eternity itself; and in no association which I shall have in yonder world, among all the friends with whom God has blessed me in my career, shall I be happier than with JUNIOR BROWN.

He was faithful and true in all the walks of life, as a patriot, a citizen, a public servant, a son, a husband, and father, and it can be said truthfully of him, well done—enter into peace eternal. May God bless, comfort, keep, shield, and protect his dear wife and his little baby and all his loved ones, and may we all by and by meet together in the eternal home above, where there shall be no good-bys and no to-morrows but all be ever present with the Lord in the perfection of happiness and glory in the "Golden City."

Mr. LITTLEPAGE took the chair as Speaker pro tempore.

Mr. NEELY. Mr. Speaker, death, the ruthless reaper, with icy hand that never tires, and sickle keen that never turns its edge, has severed from earth and earthly things the Honorable WILLIAM G. BROWN, our late distinguished colleague, our willing fellow worker, our loved and loving friend.

While on the mountain top of success, in the very heyday of manhood, while all the tides of life and joy and hope were flowing full and fair, from a home of affluence, love, and peace, he was abruptly summoned to take his journey to that "undiscovered country from whose bourn no traveler returns." Without a murmur and without a moan he passed from the restless land of the living into the silent empire of the dead.

JUNIOR BROWN, as he was affectionately called by those who loved him best, was noble, patriotic, generous, able, and just. He faithfully discharged his every official duty, lavishly gave to every meritorious cause, loyally served his country, and sublimely cherished his family and his friends.

His death is a loss to the Nation, a misfortune to his State, and a calamity to his constituents.

Only a little while ago he was one of the most active Members of this House. It seems but an hour since his merry peals of laughter filled the air and the melody of his voice filled our hearts with its sweet, seductive strains. But now his seat is vacant, his tongue is silent, and his name is called in vain. In the hush that pervades the sanctuary of our dead we realize that our faithful friend has sailed the sad and solemn sea that separates the narrow shores of time from the boundless kingdom of eternity. He has passed beyond the limits of earthly vision. His shadowy form can not be seen through the telescope of science or the tears of grief.

As we stand face to face with the marvelous mystery of death, we are impelled to ask anew the world-old question propounded by the Man of Uz: "If a man die, shall he live again?" But unlike the afflicted patriarch, we do not inquire in vain. We simply turn from this perplexing question of the Old Testament to find it answered in the New by Him who came 15 centuries after Job and said: "Be thou faithful unto death, and I will give thee a crown of life."

Thanks to the hallowed hope that springs forever in the Christian breast, we believe that the separation from our beloved one is but for a night and that in the morning we shall meet again. A divinity within whispers with still, small voice in the listening ear of love, "The grave is not the end of all."

In the thought of another: If the everlasting Father condescends to animate with divine power the cold and unresponsive heart of a tiny seed and make it burst forth from its captive cell, to grow into a various fabric of root and vine and flower, will He leave forgotten in the grave the immortal soul of man? If He stoops to give to the humblest plant that clings to cliff or crag the promise of another springtime, will He withhold the pledge of hope from His children when the blasts of winter come? If insensate matter, though changed through the processes of nature into multitudinous forms, can never die, will the spirit of man sink into oblivion when it leaves its lowly house of clay? A million voices answer "No."

In this moment of melancholy our hearts are filled with grief and our eyes are dimmed with tears. "Thoughts of the last bitter hour come like a blight over our spirits," but even now, when earthly help and sympathy seem vain, we look beyond the cloud that hangs above us like a pall, and there, through faith, we see the star of hope still shining on. In the lustrous light of that constant star we read the assuring promise of the Savior of the world, "I am the resurrection and the life; whosoever believeth in Me, though he were dead, yet shall he live; and whosoever liveth and believeth in Me shall never die."

In this promise we put our trust. While dogmas perish and creeds crumble, while agnosticism decays and atheism dies, we shall continue to lean upon the everlasting arm, believing that the twilight here is but the dawn of a grander day upon some other shore, believing that the feeble flame that flickers here for a little while will at last leap into a bright and shining light when the spirit of man has winged its flight back to Him that gave it birth.

God pity the man who doubts the existence of another life in another land—

> Who hopeless lays his dead away,
> Nor looks to see the breaking day
> Across the mournful marbles play;
> Who hath not learned in hours of faith
> The truth, to flesh and sense unknown,
> That Life is ever lord of Death,
> And Love can never lose its own.

We are consoled by the thought that there is no skeptic such as this among those who mourn the loss of him whose memory we commemorate to-day.

In a new-made grave, beneath the stately pines of a West Virginia hill, we have tenderly laid to rest the mortal remains of JUNIOR BROWN.

Let us with sacred symbolism strew that grave with flowers. Let us lay with loving hands upon the turf that shields our dead the imperishable amaranth, the fadeless emblem of immortality. Let us wreath the ivy, the floral metaphor of devoted friendship, the token of brotherly love, above his silent dust. And upon the mournful monument that marks the tongueless tomb in which our departed calmly awaits the purple dawn of the resurrection morning let us inscribe that beautiful supplication:

Warm southern sun, shine kindly here;
Warm southern wind, blow softly here;
Green sod above, lie light, lie light;
Good night, dear heart, good night, good night.

[Mr. KITCHIN addressed the House. See Appendix.]

Mr. BYRNES of South Carolina. Mr. Speaker, it was my good fortune to come to this House at the same time as did my good friend Mr. BROWN of West Virginia. We were both appointed to serve on the Banking and Currency Committee, and in the Sixty-second Congress we were appointed to a subcommittee to investigate the so-called Money Trust. That investigation continued for nearly a year, during which time Mr. BROWN and myself were together almost daily, and I learned to know him and to love him. The members of that committee soon learned the ability of our deceased friend, and his experience in the banking world was of great value to us during that investigation. He was a wise counselor, and a zealous, indefatigable worker. The investigation conducted by that subcommittee contributed in great measure to the sentiment which made possible the Federal reserve act passed in the Sixty-third Congress. Mr. BROWN, as a member of the Banking and Currency Committee, also participated in the forming of this Federal reserve act, to-day recognized as a piece of constructive legislation.

To few men is it given to possess the happy faculty of making friends, and holding them, as did our deceased friend. He loved his friends and was ever at their service. I presume that he knew intimately as many Members of this House as any other man, and among them all he had not one enemy. I recall that upon the last occasion I saw him, he had gathered about him at the hotel at which we resided, 11 of his constituents. To them he introduced me, and from them I quickly learned that he possessed the affection of those whom he represented, just as he did ours. Happy as he was that evening as he dispensed his generous hospitality to his friends from home, little did I dream that within a few short days death would claim him. His was a lovable character. He brought sunshine to many, and sorrow into the life of no man. He is dead, but his memory lives, and will ever live in the hearts of those who knew him.

Mr. LITTLEPAGE. Mr. Speaker, I present a resolution, adopted by the West Virginia Society of the District of Columbia, and ask unanimous consent that it be incorporated in the RECORD.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from West Virginia [Mr. LITTLEPAGE] presents a resolution which was adopted by the West Virginia Society of the District of Columbia with respect to Mr. BROWN, and asks that it be incorporated by unanimous consent in the RECORD. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Following is the resolution referred to:

Gen. W. W. Scott, first vice president of the West Virginia Society of the District of Columbia, presented the following memorial at a meeting of the society Friday evening, April 7, 1916, at Pythian Temple, Washington, D. C., which was unanimously adopted, spread upon the minutes of the society, and a copy transmitted to the widow of the deceased:

"Mr. President and members of the West Virginia Society: On March 8, 1916, WILLIAM G. BROWN, jr., a Member of Congress from the second congressional district and a member of the West Virginia Society, died in this city.

"Mr. BROWN was born at Kingwood, Virginia, now West Virginia, April 7, 1856, in the same place where his father was born in 1800. He obtained his education in the common schools of the State and at the university, and at an early age was admitted to the bar and practiced the profession of law and engaged in the banking and farming business up to the time of his death at the age of 60.

"In Mr. BROWN'S death the State has lost a true citizen and eminent statesman, and those who knew him a loyal friend. One of Mr. BROWN'S characteristics was his loyalty and faithfulness to his friends, and it is doubted if any man ever lived who loved the friendship of his fellow men more than did Mr. BROWN; and no one, either in public or private life, could count so many friends as could "Junior" BROWN, as he was lovingly known by his friends throughout the length and breadth of his State.

"Those who knew "Junior" BROWN well know of a tender side he had to his character and which was irresistible to everyone with whom he came in contact, for

"'None knew him but to love him,
None named him but to praise.'"

HENRY S. BAKER,
President.
WM. T. GEORGE,
Corresponding Secretary.

Mr. TAYLOR of Arkansas. Mr. Speaker, in the great Allegheny Mountains of West Virginia, one time old Virginia, at the town of Kingwood, in the year 1856 a man child was born, and they named him WILLIAM G. BROWN, Jr. From the day of his birth to the day of his death he walked under the shadow of the brow of our great Master as a charitable, chivalric, upright, honorable man. His ancestors were of the old Virginia stock. When Mr. BROWN grew to young manhood he became a lawyer and at the same time a business man, and so conducted himself among the people with whom he lived that they not only honored and loved him but sent him to the Congress as their Representative as a Democrat, although his district was Republican.

Mr. BROWN was one of the first Members with whom I became acquainted when I entered the House. He so impressed me by his kindly manners that I even remember where I first met him. He was standing just over there, Mr. Speaker, in the doorway of the Speaker's lobby, where we were introduced to each other. I shall never forget the warm and hearty greeting he tendered me and at the same time offering to do whatever he could for me as a new Member. As time passed on we grew to be very close friends. Soon after this we were walking together from the Capitol over to the House Office Building, when he said: "Everybody at home calls me Junior; what is your first name?" I replied, "Sam." He then remarked, "From now on I want you to allow me to call you Sam and I want you to call me Junior"; and this we did.

The Speaker of the House appointed me, among others, to attend the funeral of our departed friend at Kingwood, where he was born and where his body is peacefully sleeping in the beautiful cemetery of that little city among the great mountains of West Virginia. When at Kingwood I heard nothing of his life from his fellow citizens but praises touching the big-heartedness of this lovable man. When we arrived on the train at Kingwood our committee was conducted to a hotel to wait for the funeral services. A young man of that community was at the hotel and approached me, introducing himself, said, "Did you know Mr. BROWN?" I said, "Yes; he was my friend," and I asked him if he knew him. He replied, "Yes; I have known Mr. BROWN all the days of my life. He was a friend of our family. My father is yet living, and I have five grown brothers, and all of us always supported Mr. BROWN." I then said, "Of course, you come of a Democratic family." He replied, "Oh, no, sir; we are Republicans; but we could not have been induced to cast a vote against our friend, Mr. BROWN. He was so kind and good to all of our people that we could not think of casting a vote against him. Whenever his name was on the ticket we let politics go to the wind."

Leaving this young man at the hotel, I walked alone upon the streets of Kingwood, and after a while met an old man with long gray beard, standing in the snow, and, speaking to him, I said, "Do you live here?" "No," he said, "I live about 50 miles from this town. I am here to-day to look for the last time into the cold, still face of one of the best men that ever lived, my long-lived friend, JUNIOR BROWN."

You could see upon the face and in the eyes of this old man that his heart was bleeding with grief over the loss of his friend. He had come over the mountains and through the snow and over the rough hills to be present at the funeral service of this distinguished man. His words spoke volumes to me touching the life and character of poor Junior BROWN. He knew that a great man had fallen, that a friend of the people had passed off the earth. In further conversation the old gentleman said, "You do not know what Mr. BROWN was to our people and how we loved him." I listened intently to the words of this dear old man, who, continuing, said: "Stranger, to show you something of the character of Mr. BROWN I will relate an incident which came under my observation. One day Mr. BROWN was passing from his office by the courthouse over there, and, being attracted by a crowd of people who had gathered in front of the courthouse door, he observed that the sheriff was selling at execution sale a horse. Mr. BROWN walked into the crowd and asked whose horse was it that was being sold. Some one informed him that it belonged to 'that old man standing over there.' Mr. BROWN walked over to the owner and asked, 'Can you not pay the debt?' The old man answered, with a distressed face, 'No, sir; I have no money with which to pay it. The debt is a just one, and now they are selling my horse to pay it.' 'Have you other horses?' asked Mr. BROWN. The old man answered, 'No; this is the only one I have.' At once big-hearted Mr. BROWN became a bidder, and became the highest bidder and purchaser of the horse. Taking the horse by the bridle, he walked over to the old man and said to him: 'Here, take him and go home. God bless you! You now have your horse back, and if anyone undertakes to take him away from you, let me know.'"

Instances of this sort were referred to and mentioned to nearly every Member of the House in the funeral party as to Mr. BROWN'S charitable soul. Surely, Mr. Speaker, God smiled when he saw this charitable deed of Mr. BROWN in purchasing the horse and delivering him to the good old man. I will not speak longer. I feel more like silence than words. Members have spoken this afternoon kindly and beautifully on the life, the character, and public services of our deceased friend. Words are but empty things on occasions like this.

We are told that "charity is the paramount virtue; all else is but as sounding brass and a tinkling cymbal." Surely, Mr. Speaker, these words apply to the great man who rests near the spot where he was born and where he was laid by hundreds of devoted and loving friends. The funeral service was conducted in the house where he was born. On the walls hung the painting of his great distinguished father and his sainted mother, whom he loved so devotedly and whom he so often mentioned. The parlors and halls were filled with charming floral offerings from schools, churches, and lodges, and from the rich and the poor, and in the midst of these on the stairway over the body of our deceased friend stood a man of God, who among other things said: "Our friend is gone." At this expression tears gushed from the eyes of all present, and it made me know that the preacher had spoken directly from the hearts of his people.

I had a great affection for Mr. BROWN. I could not help it. I have often wondered whether this good man had an enemy in the world. The gentleman from North Carolina [Mr. KITCHIN] a few moments ago said that the deceased was one of the most likable men he ever knew. These words were fitly spoken, because everybody who was acquainted with the late Member of this House knew that Mr. KITCHIN spoke the truth. I hope, my friends, that when the heart of JUNIOR BROWN ceased to beat in the city of Washington that his great, big, loving soul plumed its wings for everlasting and eternal flight to that blessed land where the storm never drifts its darkness and where the sun never goes down.

ADJOURNMENT.

Mr. KITCHIN. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House do now adjourn.

The motion was agreed to; accordingly (at 1 o'clock and 56 minutes p. m.) the House adjourned until to-morrow, Monday, April 17, 1916, at 12 o'clock noon.

SENATE.

The Chaplain, Rev. Forrest J. Prettyman, D. D., offered the following prayer:

Almighty God, we come to Thee for those gracious influences that fit and qualify us for noble service to our fellow men. Without Thee our lives and hearts are self-centered and cruel. Without Thee we can not feel the divine impulse leading us to noble self-sacrifice, leading us to carry the burdens of others to help uplift the world. From Thee come not only the gifts that surround us in Thy providence, that minister to our daily needs, but from Thee come the higher impulses of the spirit that fit us for service to our fellow men. Thou hast committed to our hands great power, so that we fear no mortal man. We pray that Thou wilt give us grace which will sanctify the use of power, that we may use it for the uplift of the world and for the accomplishment of Thy will. For Christ's sake. Amen.

The Journal of the proceedings of the legislative day of Friday, April 14, 1916, was read and approved.

PRICE OF GASOLINE.

The VICE PRESIDENT laid before the Senate a communication from the Attorney General, acknowledging receipt of a resodution adopted by the Senate on the 11th instant requesting reports, etc., relating to the investigations of the oil interests of the United States and stating that, in his opinion, it would be incompatible with the public interest to send to the Senate the reports made to him by his assistants, which was ordered to lie on the table.

Mr. KENYON subsequently said: Mr. President, 10 days ago a resolution was adopted by the Senate calling upon the Attorney General to submit, if not incompatible with the public interest, certain reports with reference to the oil and gasoline situation. I understand that a communication from the Attorney General on that subject has been received. I ask that it may be read for the benefit of the Senate.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Chair laid the communication before the Senate this morning.

Mr. KENYON. Are we not entitled to have it read?

The VICE PRESIDENT. Yes; it will be returned from the Secretary's office and will go into the RECORD.

Mr. KENYON. I should prefer to have it read. I am not going to take the time of the Senate to discuss the proposition, but I will do so at some future time. I think the report of the Attorney General is somewhat comforting, even though he declines to send the information, because if there were no information there showing criminality on the part of these people certainly it would not be incompatible with the public interest to give that information to the country.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Secretary will read the communication.

The Secretary read as follows:

DEPARTMENT OF JUSTICE,
OFFICE OF THE ATTORNEY GENERAL,
Washington, D. C., April 12, 1916.

The PRESIDENT OF THE SENATE,
Washington, D. C.

SIR: I have the honor to acknowledge receipt of the resolution adopted by the Senate on the 11th instant requesting the Attorney General, "if not incompatible with the public interest, to send to the Senate any reports in his department of any investigations of the oil interests of the United States, including the Standard Oil Co. and other companies affiliated therewith or independent thereof, the same to cover all reports of investigations made by the Department of Justice relating to said subject or to gasoline or oil since the decree of dissolution of the Standard Oil Co."

For some time past conditions in the oil trade, especially as affected by the decree in the case under the antitrust act against the Standard Oil Co., have been under observation and consideration by the Department of Justice.

As the matter is still actively pending, I am of the opinion that it would be incompatible with the public interest to send to the Senate the reports which have been made from time to time by my assistants engaged in this work.

I have the honor to remain,
Respectfully, yours,

T. W. GREGORY,
Attorney General.

LABOR CONDITIONS IN HAWAII.

The VICE PRESIDENT laid before the Senate a communication from the Secretary of Labor, transmitting, pursuant to law, the fifth report of the Commissioner of Labor Statistics on labor conditions in the Territory of Hawaii, which, with the accompanying paper, was referred to the Committee on Printing.

THADEUS P. JACKSON V. THE UNITED STATES (S. DOC. NO. 406).

The VICE PRESIDENT laid before the Senate a communication from the chief clerk of the Court of Claims, transmitting a certified copy and findings of fact and conclusion filed by the court in the cause of Thadeus P. Jackson v. The United States, which, with the accompanying paper, was referred to the Committee on Claims and ordered to be printed.

THE HOLLAND SOCIETY OF NEW YORK.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Chair lays before the Senate a communication addressed to the Senate from the recording secretary of the Holland Socity of New York, transmitting an engrossed testimonial resolution unanimously passed at the thirty-first annual meeting of the Holland Society of New York, held April 6 last. The communication and accompanying resolution will be printed in the RECORD.

The matter referred to is as follows:

THE HOLLAND SOCIETY OF NEW YORK,
90 West Street, New York City, April 11, 1916.

The SENATE, Washington, D. C.

GENTLEMEN: I have the honor to transmit herewith an engrossed testimonial resolution unanimously passed at the thirty-first annual meeting of the Holland Society of New York, held April 6 last.

Respectfully, yours,

EDWARD VAN WINKLE,
Recording Secretary.

At the annual meeting of the Holland Society of New York, held April 6, 1916, the following preamble and resolutions were adopted:

"Whereas the Holland Society of New York, founded in 1885, adopted in 1887 as a part of its badge the medal 'Les Gueux,' introduced in 1566 by Count Brederode and his colleagues as a badge of the patriotic and self-denying movement by the Netherlands for popular rights and freedom in religious belief, which John Lathrop Motley, the historian, has rendered immortal; and

"Whereas the medal 'Les Gueux' declared, in symbol and motto, loyalty to the Government, even to beggary; and

"Whereas in the crisis which now threatens our country through the introduction of ideas of intolerance and military domination in Europe, such as confronted the Netherlands in the time of William of Orange, it behooves the descendants of citizens of that little country, who brought here principles fought for in the 80 years' war, to support their native land, America, in the maintenance of the same fundamental ideas which our Dutch ancestors stood for—principles which are universally recognized as foundation stones of the civil and religious liberty of this country:

"Resolved, That with European militarism threatening individual rights, the sacredness of treaties, international law, humanitarian axioms, and even the national map of the world, the Holland Society of New York tenders, in the spirit of its badge, to the Federal Government at Washington its earnest sympathy and support in the maintenance of the traditions, the dignity, and the honor of our native land, the United States of America.

"Resolved, That an engrossed copy of this minute, duly attested by the seal of the society and certified by the president and secretary, be transmitted to the President, Senate, and House of Representatives of the United States at Washington."

[SEAL.] SEYMOUR VAN SANTWOOD,
President.

MESSAGE FROM THE HOUSE.

A message from the House of Representatives, by J. C. South, its Chief Clerk, announced that the House disagrees to the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 12207) making appropriations for the legislative, executive, and judicial expenses of the Government for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1917, and for other purposes, asks a conference with the Senate on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses thereon, and had appointed Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee, Mr. SISSON, and Mr. GOOD managers at the conference on the part of the House.

The message also announced that the House had passed the concurrent resolution (S. Con. Res. 20) authorizing the appointment of a representative of the United States Government to appear at the celebration of the landing of Sir Francis Drake on the coast of California, with amendments, in which it requested the concurrence of the Senate.

The message further transmitted to the Senate resolutions on the death of Hon. WILLIAM G. BROWN, Jr., late a Representative from the State of West Virginia.

REPORTS OF COMMITTEES.

Mr. CHAMBERLAIN, from the Committee on Commerce, to which was referred the bill (S. 1697) to declare Ollala Slough, in Lincoln County, Oreg., nonnavigable, reported it without amendment and submitted a report (No. 355) thereon.

Mr. WARREN, from the Committee on Military Affairs, to which were referred the following bills, reported them each with amendments and submitted reports thereon:

S. 739. A bill to remove the charge of desertion from the military record of James F. Cole (Rept. No. 353); and

S. 743. A bill to remove the charge of desertion from the military record of Moses Chauncey (Rept. No. 354).

Mr. SMITH of South Carolina submitted a report (No. 352) to accompany the bill (H. R. 10384) to regulate the immigration of aliens to and the residence of aliens in the United States heretofore reported by him.

SOUTHERN STATES LUMBER CO.

Mr. MYERS. Mr. President, on the 10th day of this month at the request of the Senator from Florida [Mr. FLETCHER] I introduced for him in his absence the bill (S. 5439) for the relief of the Southern States Lumber Co., which was referred to the Committee on Claims. I understand that a like bill in the House of Representatives was referred to the House Committee on Public Lands and that other bills of this nature have generally been referred to the Committee on Public Lands of the Senate.

I ask unanimous consent that Senate bill 5439 be withdrawn from the Senate Committee on Claims and that it be referred to the Senate Committee on Public Lands. This is done at the request of the author, the Senator from Florida [Mr. FLETCHER].

The VICE PRESIDENT. Is there objection? The Chair hears none, and it is so ordered.

SNAKE RIVER BRIDGE.

Mr. SHEPPARD. From the Committee on Commerce I report back favorably with amendments the bill (S. 5310) to authorize the county commissioners of Walla Walla and Franklin Counties, Wash., to construct a bridge across the Snake River between Pasco and Burbank, and I submit a report (No. 351) thereon. I ask for the immediate consideration of the bill.

There being no objection, the bill was considered as in Committee of the Whole.

The amendments were, in line 8, after the words "Snake Rivers," to insert "at a point suitable to the interests of navigation," and in line 10, to strike out the word "streams," and insert the word "waters," so as to make the bill read:

Be it enacted, etc., That the county commissioners of Walla Walla and Franklin Counties, Wash., are hereby authorized to construct, maintain, and operate a bridge and approaches thereto across the Snake River over the southern end of Strawberry Island about 2 miles above the confluence of the Columbia and Snake Rivers at a point suitable to the interests of navigation, in accordance with the provisions of the act entitled "An act to regulate the construction of bridges over navigable waters," approved March 23, 1906.

SEC. 2. That the right to alter, amend, or repeal this act is hereby expressly reserved.

The amendments were agreed to.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendments were concurred in.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

Mr. CHAMBERLAIN. From the Committee on Military Affairs I report back favorably without amendment the joint resolution (S. J. Res. 119) to permit the issuance of medical and other supplies to the American National Red Cross for a temporary period, and I ask for the immediate consideration of the joint resolution.

There being no objection, the joint resolution was considered as in Committee of the Whole. It provides that the provisions of section 1 of the joint resolution approved May 8, 1914, authorizing the issue of military and naval equipment to the American National Red Cross be so extended as to permit the issue of the same to the American National Red Cross for the instruction of persons who may volunteer to receive training by that association from May 1 to June 1, 1916.

The joint resolution was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

ADJUDICATION OF PRIVATE CLAIMS.

Mr. DU PONT submitted an amendment intended to be proposed by him to the bill (H. R. 6918) to relieve Congress from the adjudication of private claims against the Government, which was referred to the Committee on the Judiciary and ordered to be printed.

AMENDMENTS TO APPROPRIATION BILLS.

Mr. KENYON submitted an amendment proposing to amend section 2, chapter 389, Thirty-seventh United States Statutes at Large, approved August 24, 1912, so as to include newspapers published weekly, semiweekly, and triweekly, intended to be proposed by him to the Post Office appropriation bill (H. R. 10484), which was referred to the Committee on Post Offices and Post Roads and ordered to be printed.

Mr. GALLINGER submitted an amendment proposing to appropriate $238.024.08 for the relief of Prof. William H. H. Hart, principal of the Hart Farm School and Junior Republic for Dependent Children, as payment in full for his costs, losses, damages, etc., intended to be proposed by him to the general deficiency appropriation bill, which was referred to the Committee on Appropriations and ordered to be printed.

RURAL CREDITS.

Mr. ROBINSON submitted two amendments intended to be proposed by him to the bill (S. 2986) to provide capital for agricultural development, to create a standard form of investment based upon farm mortgage, to equalize rates of interest upon farm loans, to furnish a market for United States bonds, to create Government depositaries and financial agents for the United States, and for other purposes, which were ordered to lie on the table and be printed.

NATIONAL DEFENSE.

Mr. BANKHEAD submitted an amendment intended to be proposed by him to the bill (H. R. 12766) to increase the efficiency of the Military Establishment of the United States, which was ordered to lie on the table and be printed.

Mr. ROBINSON submitted an amendment intended to be proposed by him to the bill (H. R. 12766) to increase the efficiency of the Military Establishment of the United States, which was ordered to lie on the table and be printed.

Mr. REED submitted an amendment intended to be proposed by him to the bill (H. R. 12766) to increase the efficiency of the Military Establishment of the United States, which was ordered to lie on the table and be printed.

Mr. BRANDEGEE submitted an amendment intended to be proposed by him to the bill (H. R. 12766) to increase the efficiency of the Military Establishment of the United States, which was ordered to lie on the table and be printed.

Mr. LANE submitted an amendment intended to be proposed by him to the bill (H. R. 12766) to increase the efficiency of the Military Establishment of the United States, which was ordered to lie on the table and be printed.

RIVER REGULATION AND CONTROL.

Mr. NEWLANDS. Mr. President, I submit an amendment intended to be proposed by me to the river and harbor bill, embracing the recommendations of the Secretaries of the Interior, Agriculture, and Commerce to the President of the United States, regarding a full and broad system of river regulation and control. These recommendations were recently transmitted to me by the President of the United States in a letter, which, with the accompanying recommendations, were at my instance recently printed in the RECORD. They were recommendations made by an interdepartmental committee appointed by the President two years ago, consisting of the Secretaries of War, Interior, Agriculture, and Commerce. Owing to a vacancy in the War secretaryship the recommendations were signed only by the three other Secretaries, but I am informed that the recently appointed Secretary of War is in harmony with them. The letter of the President and the recommendations of the Secretaries will be found in the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD of April 11. I ask unanimous consent that it be printed in the RECORD and referred to the Committee on Commerce.

There being no objection, the amendment was referred to the Committee on Commerce and ordered to be printed and to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

Amendment intended to be proposed by Mr. NEWLANDS to the bill (H. R. 12193) making appropriations for the construction, repair, and preservation of certain public works on rivers and harbors, and for other purposes, viz: Add, at the end of the bill, the following:

"SEC. —. (a) That a national waterways council, hereinafter called the council, consisting of the President of the United States as chairman, the Secretary of War as vice chairman, the Secretary of the Interior, the Secretary of Agriculture, and the Secretary of Commerce, is hereby created, which is authorized and directed to investigate or cause to be investigated, with respect to all watersheds in the United States, questions relating to the development, improvement, regulation, and control of navigation as a part of interstate and foreign commerce, including irrigation, forestry, fisheries, swamp-land reclamation, clarification of streams, regulation of flow, control of floods, storage and conservation of water for agricultural, industrial, municipal, and domestic uses, utilization of water power, prevention of soil erosion and waste, cooperation of carriers by rail and water, and promotion of transfer facilities and sites, and to formulate as early as practicable and to report to the Congress comprehensive plans and specific projects for each watershed, with estimates and recommendations for the development of waterways and water resources of the United States for every useful purpose, either independently by the United States or through such cooperation between the United States and the several States, counties, municipalities, communities, corporations, associations, and individuals, both in financial support and in coordination of agencies, as will secure the highest development and utilization of the waterways and water resources of the United States.

"(b) That to assist in carrying out the purposes aforesaid the council may utilize the various agencies of the Government, and there is hereby created a water-control board, hereinafter called the board, which shall consist of four assistant secretaries, to be appointed as hereinafter provided, one of whom shall be designated by the council as chairman, and such additional members as the council may from time to time appoint. Each such assistant secretary shall receive a salary of $10,000 per annum and said additional members of the board such salaries as the council may from time to time fix. Subject to the direction and control of the council as to general policy and procedure, including investigations, plans, estimates, and expenditures, it shall be the duty of the board, under rules and regulations prescribed from time to time by the council, to ascertain in detail the work in progress and obtain plans, recommendations and estimates of the work contemplated in the general field of water control and utilization by the various agencies of the Government, States, counties, municipalities, communities, corporations, associations, and individuals, and on the basis of such information and the results obtained by its own investigations to prepare for the consideration of the council a general and comprehensive program of water and waterways regulation, development, and utilization, extending through a number of years, with specific projects, estimates, and recommendations, involving independent work by the United States and the combining of resources and energies of the various public and private agencies aforesaid; to coordinate and bring into conference the various agencies of the Government, and to examine, compare, adjust, allot, assign, and supervise their work, to the end that duplication may be avoided and the highest efficiency obtained; by agreement to assign to the various cooperating agencies the work to be done by them within their respective spheres; to accept, on behalf of the United States, from such agencies contributions of money and property of any kind to be used for carrying out the purposes authorized by this act; to make field inspection of all work done or contemplated under this act by the Government and its cooperating agencies; and to employ such engineers, transportation experts, experts in water development, constructors, and other employees, and to construct such buildings and works as may be necessary for those purposes. Contributions received under this section shall be used by the board, under the direction of the council, for carrying out the purposes of this act. Money so received shall be deposited in the Treasury of the United States, shall constitute a special fund, which is hereby appropriated for such purposes, available until expended, and shall be paid out in the manner specified in section 4. Subject to the approval of the council, the board is authorized to enter into such contracts as may be necessary for carrying out the purposes of this act, within the limits of appropriations or contributions which shall be made hereafter from time to time, or as may be necessary for executing projects under this act within the respective limits of cost thereof approved by the Congress, the funds for which shall have been provided by the Secretary of the Treasury in accordance with the authority conferred by this act. Subject to the approval of the council, the board may also employ the various agencies of the Government in carrying out such purposes or executing such projects.

"(c) That each head of a department named in this act is authorized to appoint, with the approval of the council, for service as a member of the board, a highly qualified representative, who shall be an assistant secretary in the department in which he is appointed, shall devote his time primarily to the work authorized by this act, shall have, subject to the direction of the head of the department, such general supervision and control as may be necessary for the purposes of this act of the agencies within the department engaged upon such work, shall serve during good service and behavior, and shall be removable by the head of the department only for good cause.

"(d) That for all expenses of investigations and formulation of plans and projects by or under the direction of the council or the board, including rent and the employment of labor and of technical and clerical assistance in the District of Columbia and elsewhere, salaries of the assistant secretaries in the departments, and of the additional members of the board appointed under this act, supplementing the annual appropriations for the various agencies of the Government, to the extent approved by the council, when called upon by or under the direction of the council for services under this act additional to their regular and usual duties, and all other necessary expenses, including emergency work, there is hereby authorized to be appropriated the sum of $15,000,000, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, available until expended, to be paid out on warrants signed by the chairman of the council, or by an official designated by him in writing, drawn on the Secretary of the Treasury.

"(e) That to provide for carrying out the projects formulated under this act, the appropriation hereafter of such sums as may be necessary is hereby authorized. At any time that the Secretary of the Treasury shall determine it to be necessary or advisable, in order to provide revenues to execute a project under this act, which shall have been approved by the Congress, he may issue and sell, or use as a means of borrowing money, bonds in the necessary amount, in accordance with the provisions of the act of August 5, 1909 (36 Stats. L., 11, 117), the act of February 4, 1910 (36 Stats. L., 192), and the act of March 2, 1911 (36 Stats. L., 1013). The sums appropriated or provided by the Secretary of the Treasury pursuant to this section shall be available until expended and shall be paid out in the manner specified in section 4.

"(f) That the work now in progress under the Mississippi River Commission shall not be interrupted, but shall proceed substantially in accordance with existing plans, under the supervision of the council, with such improvements and enlargements, if any, as may be suggested by the commission or the board and approved by the council, and the work of other agencies under this act shall be adjusted with reference thereto. For carrying on the work under the Mississippi River Commission there is hereby authorized to be appropriated, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, the sum of $45,000,000, available immediately and until expended.

"(g) That all money made available for carrying out the purposes of this act, including appropriations, contributions, and proceeds of bonds, shall be carried on the books of the Treasury as the waterways fund, but may be credited to the separate items to which they respectively appertain and need not be commingled."

ADDRESS BY SENATOR SMOOT (S. DOC. NO. 405).

Mr. LODGE. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent to have printed as a public document an address delivered by the senior Senator from Utah [Mr. SMOOT] before the City Club, of Boston, Mass., on Thursday, April 13, 1916, on certain policies of the present administration and their effects.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Without objection, that will be done.

POTOMAC POWER PLANT.

Mr. WILLIAMS. I should like to have inserted in the RECORD without reading a couple of editorials from the Saturday Evening Post of April 1, one entitled "Secret government" and the other "Unsightly smokestacks," both relating to the central power plant question.

There being no objection, the matter referred to was ordered to be printed in the RECORD as follows:

[From the Saturday Evening Post, Philadelphia, Apr. 1, 1916.]

SECRET GOVERNMENT.

The people of the United States know only a little more about what goes on at Washington than about what goes on at the seat of British Government. A few outstanding exceptional things are briefly reported—especially those things charged with a sporting interest, like the differences between the President and Congress over armed merchantmen. News of a tariff bill, a banking act, or a shipping bill gets circulated, but so does news of the big outstanding things that happen at Westminster. We get a good deal of gossip about what is likely to happen in connection with big measures, but of the actual doings of Government little is known outside the walls of the Capitol and of the departments.

For example, a great many people are much interested in the appearance of the National Capital. They hope it is going to live up to its opportunity of being one of the most beautiful cities in the world. From no selfish motive, but from national pride and out of a reverent sense of the value of beauty, architects, sculptors, langscape gardeners, painters, and engineers have especially watched and furthered plans to ennoble and adorn the Capital. Competent bodies have given much study to the subject—always with a long look to the future splendid city of which L'Enfant dreamed when he drew the first plans for the first President.

In February of this year the American Institute of Architects suddenly discovered, with amazement and dismay, that the Government was on the point of erecting a huge power plant near the Mall—a great, dauby splotch right in the middle of the picture. Remember, this subject of a beautiful Capital is one in which a great number of people have long been especially interested. The act authorizing this power house was passed in June, 1913. Plans had been drawn and contracts for the construction actually signed. Yet the country had not heard of it.

The architects, in spite of their special interest in the subject and the special attention they had given to it, did not know of it. It seems to have been news to the President himself when a committee hastily waited on him to protest. Of course some congressional committeemen knew and some officials of the Treasury Department knew; but the public had no more knowledge of it than as though it had been done by the Government of China.

It is no use blaming the newspapers. They say the public is not interested in the proceedings of the Government except as to a few overshadowing and exciting details, and probably they know. But to argue for public diplomacy when so much else that the Government does is essentially secret sounds like poppycock.

UNSIGHTLY SMOKESTACKS.

The site chosen for the power house that the Government purposes building in Washington is not far from the Washington Monument. The plans call for four smokestacks reaching 195 feet above water level and competing with the Monument for the visitor's attention. From the Virginia shore, from Potomac Park, on which much money is being spent, and to all those who enter the Capital from the south, this power house would be one of the most conspicuous objects. It would be in plain view from the Capitol.

Of course a power house so situated would be an egregious mistake—blotting the view and marring the plans for a beautiful city as long as it endured. There is still time to prevent this mistake. The plans should be modified.

There is no need to blame anybody in particular for the mistake. Time out of mind the business of housing the Government at Washington has been done, in part, piecemeal and hand-to-mouth. The long-range planning has always been inadequate to the Government's needs. The surplusage has been taken care of any old way on a policy of anything to meet the demands of the hour. In that case such an error as this power house might easily occur.

But the mistake has been discovered in time. It should be frankly acknowledged and corrected. A few people resent the effort to correct it, as though it involved some reflection upon them. They even intimate selfish motives on the part of those who have taken the lead in saving the Capital from this blot. As between their excited sensibilities and four one-hundred-and-odd-foot smokestacks in the middle of the picture there is no room for argument. The project should be abandoned and another site chosen.

PRICE OF GASOLINE.

Mr. THOMPSON. I ask to have printed in the RECORD an editorial from the Washington Post of Saturday, April 1, 1916, on the unjustifiable increase of gasoline prices.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Without objection it is so ordered. The matter referred to is as follows:

[From the Washington Post, Saturday, Apr. 1, 1916.]

UNJUSTIFIABLE INCREASE OF GASOLINE PRICES.

Now that the attention of the public and of Congress has been sharply directed to the rise in the price of gasoline it is to be hoped that the speedy relief of consumers will follow. Action by Congress leading to the investigation of the unprecedented increase of price may be followed by the manufacture of gasoline by corporations or by capitalists interested in automobile manufacture. Already one such corporation is under way. The promoters assert that gasoline may be profitably manufactured at 15 cents a gallon.

Neither the demands of Europe nor the crude oil situation justifies the enormous increase in the price of gasoline. Europe is not taking such quantities as to make a serious shortage, nor is there such a curtailment of crude oil production as to force prices to such a height.

The rise in gasoline prices was most noticeable soon after the administration suggested that a tax be levied upon the product. For a time the administration was insistent upon the imposition of this tax, the President even recommending it in his address to Congress. Lately little has been heard of this revenue plan, and it may have been dropped on account of the widespread protest against it. But the manufacturers apparently seized upon the threat of a tax as an excuse for raising prices, and, not being brought to task, they have been raising prices ever since on one excuse after another.

It is probable that gasoline manufacturers have discounted future demands in raising prices. They are aware of the prodigious increase in automobile manufacture and have taken advantage of this growth by making it an ostensible reason for high prices.

The year 1916 is proving a notable one in the automobile business. Carefully compiled reports from leading manufacturers show that automobile production will be 100 per cent greater this year than last. Taking July 31 as the end of the automobile year, the production in 1915 was 700,000 cars, and in 1916 it will be 1,400,000. The six leading companies report the following output for 1916: Ford, 500,000; Willys-Overland, 200,000; General Motors, 120,000; Chevrolet, 95,000; Studebaker, 75,000; and Maxwell, 70,000. There are 448 automobile manufacturers in the United States, many of them turning out more than 5,000 cars annually. In spite of the increased cost of materials the average prices of cars have been reduced without reducing profits of manufacture, this result having been reached by manufacturing in greater quantities.

Necessarily this astonishing increase in the number of automobiles will affect gasoline production and cost. But the price of gasoline has more than doubled, and the fact that automobiles have multiplied is not a valid excuse for further price increases.

The public is being squeezed without justification. Congress can well afford to go into the subject and provide relief.

WOMAN SUFFRAGE (S. DOC. NO. 408).

The VICE PRESIDENT. If there are no concurrent or other resolutions, the morning business——

Mr. DILLINGHAM. Mr. President, I hold in my hand a matter of morning business, and I was attempting to get the attention of the Chair. It is a brief, an argument, called "The Case Against Woman Suffrage." I am informed by Mr. Robert V. Turner, for the National Anti-Suffrage Committee that this is regarded by the National Anti-Suffrage Committee as the best and most complete presentation of the antisuffrage cause that has yet been prepared. I have been requested by a committee of estimable women, who are opposed to suffrage and who look upon this paper as being the best presentation of their views, and as bearing directly upon the Susan B. Anthony amendment, so called, which is now pending in Congress, to ask that it be printed as a public document. I make that request.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Without objection it is so ordered.

REPORT OF COMMISSION ON INDUSTRIAL RELATIONS.

Mr. POINDEXTER. I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of the joint resolution (S. J. Res. 98) to print as a public document the final report and testimony submitted to Congress by the United States Commission on Industrial Relations. A favorable report has been pending in the Senate for a considerable period, and I suppose every Senator has a great deal of correspondence about it—I know I have—requesting copies of this document. It requires considerable time to answer such letters. It will require no more time, if the joint resolution is acted on and the document printed, to send the document to the citizens of the country who desire it. I take it for granted that ultimately the joint resolution will be passed and that this information which has cost so much money to obtain will be made available. I therefore move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of the joint resolution.

Mr. REED. Will the Senator withhold that motion long enough for me to present a petition which I desire to have read?

Mr. POINDEXTER. I yield for that purpose.

THE NATIONAL GUARD.

Mr. REED. I send to the desk and ask to have read a communication in the nature of a petition.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Is there objection? The Chair hears none, and the Secretary will read.

The Secretary proceeded to read the communication and was interrupted by,

Mr. ASHURST. Mr. President, I merely want to ask the length of the document which the Secretary is reading? I fear its reading will take up so much of the morning hour that there will be very little of it left in which to discuss the motion of the Senator from Washington [Mr. POINDEXTER]. I ask that the reading of the document be suspended and that it be incorporated in the RECORD.

Mr. REED. Mr. President, I object to that. The document is being read by unanimous consent, which unanimous consent has already been granted.

The Secretary resumed and concluded the reading of the document, which is as follows:

THE CHARGES AGAINST THE NATIONAL GUARD.

Many of the statements made by the Senator from Idaho in his speech before the Senate on Saturday concerning the alleged misapplication and misappropriation of public funds by the National Guard are wholly incorrect and some of them convey a false impression. The items and figures as read in the form by him presented appear in no report published by the War Department. They could come from but one source. Curiously enough, this source is the very agency in the War Department charged with the control of the Federal funds appropriated for the support of the militia and with the direction of the disbursement of such funds.

Let us take up these misstatements:

1. Reference is made to the sum of $8,000,000 as annually appropriated for the militia. This is a mild exaggeration, involving an expansion of 50 per cent. As a matter of fact, the annual appropriations for the militia amount to just $4,000,000, half of which is appropriated under section 1661, United States Revised Statutes as amended, and the other half under the act of May 27, 1908. A special appropriation of $1,250,000 has been made each alternate year for the expenses of militia participating in joint maneuvers with the Regular Army. These latter funds so appropriated are expended wholly through the agencies of the Army and for maneuver purposes solely. In 1915 certain special items for Artillery equipment were appropriated for, not a part of the current militia appropriations, but, including these items and the maneuver expenditures, the total sum expended for and in connection with the militia totaled only $4,847,744.91, as shown on page 45 of the Report of the Chief of the Division of Militia Affairs for the year 1915.

2. Of the two militia appropriations of $2,000,000 each, the one made under the act of February 27, 1908, is used only to cover the cost of arms and camp equipments and ammunition issued to the militia of the several States upon the requisition of their governors. The appropriation under section 1661, United States Revised Statutes, is alloted for "equipments and camp purposes," and that allotment may be used to obtain supplies or to cover the expenses of field service and for the "promotion of rifle practice," which allotment is used for the acquisition of rifle ranges, their construction and operation, expenses of teams participating in rifle competitions, and other authorized expenses in connection with rifle practice. A portion of the militia appropriation is retained "unallotted" by the Secretary of War and applied to cover expenses of the Division of Militia Affairs, the cost of equipping new organizations, and other purposes. The only appropriation under which funds may be obtained for disbursement for authorized purposes by State officers is under section 1661 above referred to. Let us see how these disbursements are made.

3. The following regulations are prescribed under the War Department Regulations for the Organized Militia, 1910:

(a) Before a State may use Federal funds its militia must equal in strength 100 for each Senator and Representative in Congress; unless specially excused each unit of its militia must have participated in field exercises for not less than five days, and each company or other unit must have assembled for drill, etc., not less than 24 times; the militia must have been inspected by a Federal Officer during the year. (See par. 148, Mil. Reg.)

(b) The governor of a State must designate to the Secretary of War an officer to act as disbursing officer, who must give a good and sufficient bond in such sum as the Secretary of War may direct. This disbursing officer must submit a detailed account, with all vouchers covering expenditures, at the end of each month through the Division of Militia Affairs to the Auditor for the War Department. (See par. 149, Mil. Reg.)

(c) Federal funds are obtained upon the requisition of a governor, accompanied by detailed estimates showing the purposes for which the funds are to be used, and, if for camp purposes, the number and grade of officers and enlisted men, period of proposed duty, etc. (See par. 160, Mil. Reg.)

(d) The specific purposes for which the use of Federal funds is authorized are set out in paragraph 170, Militia Regulations. To expend them for any other purpose special authority would be required.

(e) It should be borne in mind that Federal funds are not handled or disbursed by any State officer other than the duly appointed and bonded disbursing officer, and attention is invited to the rules governing him as prescribed in paragraphs 146 to 220, United States Militia Regulations, 1910.

4. Most of the comment as to payments to commissioned officers which are now deemed excessive have to do with duty performed by officers as members of State teams participating in and being trained for the national matches. Federal funds for this purpose are used under the allotment for the "Promotion of rifle practice." In the early days of these matches great latitude was allowed in the expenditure of funds for this purpose. It was considered necessary and important to stimulate interest in rifle shooting. The national matches, which are still held each year, are designed to bring together the most expert marksmen in the country. In many States the policy of training officers for the State team was adopted upon the theory that by this means capable and enthusiastic instructors were being trained to the highest degree, and that the information and experience gained in this way would later be communicated through them to their commands, whereas the training of a private soldier to such degree of expertness as to fit him for membership on a team meant merely the training of a single marksman, at a cost out of proportion to the benefit derived. This idea as to the selection of officers for the State teams still obtains, and the rules now prescribe that a team may be composed half of officers and half of enlisted men. It did happen, however, that in certain cases funds were extravagantly used. They were by no means the rule; but to prevent such abuses the War Department finally fixed a limit as to the number of days pay which would be allowed, the grades of officers who might serve on teams, etc. This could have been done at any time in previous years when abuses were noted.

5. Instances are cited where it is alleged that during encampments thousands of dollars were paid to officers and only a few hundred dollars for pay of enlisted men. It need only be stated that there are fixed rules governing the conduct of encampments which prescribe the number and grade of officers who may appropriately participate with organizations in field service, the number of enlisted men who must attend with each organization, etc. Unless these rules are observed Federal funds could not be used. When Federal funds are used the base pay of the Army is given, and no payment could be made or has ever been made to any officer or soldier except at this rate fixed by law. The pay of a private at that rate is 43 cents. In some States they place a higher value upon the services of these men, and by State law and State appropriations they have provided a higher rate of pay, running anywhere from $1 to $2 per day. In these States it is customary to pay the officers from Federal funds, as the rate for them is the same under both the Federal and State laws, but to pay the enlisted men from State funds. This is understood and provided for by the War Department, and in the standard form of pay roll issued for the use of the militia appear columns to show payments from United States funds and columns from State funds. (See form of Pay Roll, D. M. A., No. 368.) The injustice and malicious intent of citing cases of this sort as implying improper use of Federal funds requires no comment.

6. Mention is made also of encampments where a comparatively small number of persons have participated, most of whom were officers. It is not explained, however, that under the rules of the War Department "camps of instruction for commissioned officers" are not only authorized but required; that these camps are held anuually in advance of the regular encampments attended by the full enlisted personnel; and that at these camps for officers only a few enlisted men (limited by the rules of the War Department) can attend, and they do so to furnish the necessary clerical assistance, serve as orderlies, trumpeters, etc. For the information of the Senate, D. M. A. Circular No. 15, series of 1916, prescribing the classes of encampments and field service which may be held and the conditions under which Federal funds may be used, is submitted herewith and requested to be placed in the record. This is the latest circular upon the subject.

7. If all Federal funds used by the militia have at all times been handled by one officer in each State, namely, the disbursing officer, if that officer has been bonded and required to make monthly accounting to the proper agency of the Treasury Department; if no disbursements could be made by such officer except such as are provided for under regulations and specially authorized by the Secretary of War; if all of these things are true (and they are) and abuses have occurred, then it is perfectly obvious that they could have been avoided by the application of intelligent and proper administrative methods. None of these alleged abuses could have occurred under the rules and regulations now in effect for the government of the Organized Militia. The most serious charge made is that in former years payments were made to an excessive number of ornamental but useless staff officers. It is a well-known fact that until within the last few years a custom had existed in many States of appointing such staff officers. No payments could be made to that class of officers under the Federal regulations to-day in effect; it should not have been permitted before.

8. Reference is made to the embezzlement of funds by an officer of the National Guard. This is no doubt an authentic case; there may be others, but it is a fair assumption that if there were they would have received the same liberal advertisement that has been given this one. It can hardly serve as a fair basis for the indictment of the hundred and odd thousands of men in the National Guard who are entitled to the presumption of honesty. Let us consider the wide and continuous publicity given this particular instance of theft by a militiaman in connection with the rule applied by the War Department that general orders publishing court-martial proceedings in the Army shall be carried in a separate series, not for general distribution, for the very proper purpose of escaping unpleasant notoriety for that service.

The members of the National Guard resent this injustice. There are other cases of embezzlement recorded at the War Department, and it may not be amiss to list them all for reference and comparison. The fact stands out that even after the most careful research and expert arrangement the sum total of the alleged peculations and losses of the militia, extending over a long period of years, but slightly exceeds the accomplishment of a single efficient officer who was tried and convicted at Savannah some years ago. Yet no fair-minded man would seek to indict the entire standing army because of the dishonesty of this single individual.

9. It is charged that public military property to the value of more than a million dollars has been lost and remains unaccounted for by the States. A list of this property, or the value of it, and the States so charged may be found on pages 60 to 64 of the last report of the Division of Militia Affairs. Much of this property was, of course, lost through carelessness; but these losses have extended over a long period of years, and in some cases occurred at the time of the Spanish-American War, when proper transfers were not made, owing to inefficient methods of accounting. Such losses could not occur under the system of property accounting proposed in the pending bill, and which have been recommended to Congress by the representatives of the National Guard in the tentative bill submitted by them to the Senate Military Committee and printed.

If the launching of these wholesale charges against the National Guard has accomplished anything, it has been to focus attention upon the source of the opposition to the plan of Congress for better developing that arm of the military service for national defense. The frenzied indorsement of these slanders by former officials of the Government, whose attempts to change the military policy of the Nation have been repudiated, will not give them support, for it will be recognized that this is but a further expression from the same element which has been and is seeking to destroy the National Guard and supplant it by a strong Federal military force centrally controlled and officered.

This memorandum furnished by the executive committee of the National Guard Association of the United States.

Mr. BORAH and Mr. POINDEXTER addressed the Chair.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Senator from Idaho.

Mr. POINDEXTER. Mr. President, I rise to a point of order.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Senator from Washington will state his point of order.

Mr. POINDEXTER. It is that the motion which I have made to proceed to the consideration of Senate joint resolution 98, reported by the Committee on Printing, is not debatable. It is now pending before the Senate and should be submitted.

Mr. BORAH. Mr. President, if the Senator will yield to me, I will not take more than a minute.

Mr. POINDEXTER. I prefer, Mr. President, in view of the great amount of time which has been occupied by the reading of the document which was sent to the desk and which I had no idea was of such length, that the vote on my motion be taken. That will only require a few moments, and then I will be glad to yield to the Senator from Idaho.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. I think it will take a little more than a few moments.

Mr. BORAH. Mr. President, if the Senator's point of order is well taken, of course I yield the floor gracefully. If it is not, I should like to say a word.

Mr. POINDEXTER. If there is any doubt about the point of order, I should like to refer to the rules.

Mr. BORAH. The point of order is not debatable, I understand.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Morning business is not yet closed.

Mr. POINDEXTER. The Chair announced, I understood, that it was closed.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Chair got halfway through when Senators began to rise and introduce bills.

Mr. BORAH. Mr. President, I will say to the Senator that I merely desire to say a word, and I will not take more than a moment.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Chair will recognize the Senator from Washington immediately on the close of morning business.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. Mr. President, then I object to the consideration of the motion of the Senator from Washington until morning business is closed. I shall not object to it after that, and I do not intend to endeavor in any manner to do anything to delay action on his motion. I will oppose the motion, but I will not endeavor to prevent the Senate voting on it.

Mr. POINDEXTER. I appreciate the Senator's attitude. I was aware that the Senator was opposed to the printing of the report, and for that reason I put my request in the form of a motion, and did not ask for unanimous consent. I saw that the Senator was present. I have been very much under a misapprehension if the Chair did not make a very distinct announcement—of course, I yield to the statement of the Chair—that morning business was closed. I was listening for that announcement in order to make the motion which I did make.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Chair was proceeding to make the announcement when Senators arose with bills and other morning business in their hands, and the Chair did not complete the announcement, although he intended to do so. The Chair will recognize the Senator from Washington immediately on the close of morning business. Are there any other communications, bills, or resolutions to be presented?

Mr. POINDEXTER. I do not understand that there are any more, Mr. President.

Mr. McCUMBER. Mr. President, I have here a letter in the form of a general statement of questions pertaining to the National Guard, by T. H. Tharalson, adjutant general of the State of North Dakota. It embraces less than four pages and is quite important. I have cut out the portion that makes any personal references, and I ask that it be printed as a Senate document. (S. Doc. No. 407.)

The VICE PRESIDENT. Without objection, it is so ordered. If there are no further reports——

Mr. BORAH. Mr. President——

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Idaho rise to morning business?

Mr. BORAH. I presume it is morning business. If the Senate will indulge me for about a moment, I will not delay the Senator from Washington.

Mr. POINDEXTER. If I have the floor, I will yield to the Senator from Idaho for a moment, and then I desire to renew the motion which I have made.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Chair does not know whether this is morning business or not, and recognizes the Senator from Idaho. Any Senator can object if he desires to do so.

Mr. BORAH. Mr. President, the communication which has just been read—if the Senate will indulge me for a moment—is based upon the theory that the Senator from Idaho made some general charges against the National Guard, so called, or the State militia.

I invite those who shall be interested in the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD, and the people of the country generally, to read the charges which I did make and to read the generalizations which are contained in the reply. The Senator from Idaho made no general charges. He made specific charges. He gave names, dates, and amounts, and the Senator from Idaho challenges the lobby here representing the National Guard, or anyone else, to controvert the specific facts which the Senator from Idaho gave.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Now, morning business——

Mr. POMERENE. Mr. President——

The VICE PRESIDENT. Is there further morning business?

Mr. POINDEXTER. I understand not.

Mr. POMERENE. Mr. President, I have here, on the very subject to which the Senator from Idaho has referred, a letter from the adjutant general of the State of Ohio, and I should like to have it read.

Mr. POINDEXTER. Mr. President, I submit that that is a matter which should be presented when the Army bill is taken up. It is a part of the discussion on that measure; it is not properly morning business, and I request the Senator from Ohio to defer the matter until the Army bill is taken up.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Is there objection to the reading of the communication?

Mr. POINDEXTER. I object.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Then, the question is, Shall the communication be read? [Putting the question.] By the sound the noes seem to have it.

Mr. POMERENE. I ask for a division.

Mr. ASHURST. I suggest the absence of a quorum.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Secretary will call the roll.

The Secretary called the roll, and the following Senators answered to their names:

Ashurst	Hollis	Myers	Smith, Ga.
Bankhead	Hughes	Nelson	Smith, Md.
Beckham	Husting	Norris	Smith, Mich.
Borah	Johnson, Me.	O'Gorman	Smith, S. C.
Brandegee	Johnson, S. D.	Oliver	Smoot
Broussard	Jones	Overman	Sterling
Burleigh	Kenyon	Page	Sutherland
Chamberlain	Kern	Phelan	Taggart
Chilton	La Follette	Pittman	Thomas
Clapp	Lane	Poindexter	Thompson
Culberson	Lea, Tenn.	Pomerene	Tillman
Cummins	Lewis	Reed	Underwood
Curtis	Lodge	Robinson	Warren
Dillingham	McCumber	Shafroth	Weeks
du Pont	McLean	Sheppard	Williams
Gallinger	Martin, Va.	Sherman	Works
Hardwick	Martine, N. J.	Smith, Ariz.

Mr. CHILTON. I desire to announce the absence of my colleague [Mr. GOFF] on account of illness. I will let this announcement stand for the day.

Mr. KERN. I desire to announce the unavoidable absence of the senior Senator from Florida [Mr. FLETCHER] and the junior Senator from Maryland [Mr. LEE]. This announcement may stand for the day.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Sixty-seven Senators has answered to the roll call. There is a quorum present. The Senator from Ohio [Mr. POMERENE] has asked that a certain document with reference to the National Guard may be read as part of the morning business. [Putting the question.] The Chair is unable to determine. Those in favor of the reading of the document will rise. [A pause.] Those opposed will rise. [A pause.] The Secretary will read the document.

The Secretary read as follows:

STATE OF OHIO,
ADJUTANT GENERAL'S DEPARTMENT,
Columbus, April 16, 1916.

Hon. ATLEE POMERENE,
Senator from Ohio, Washington, D. C.

MY DEAR SENATOR: Certain statements and charges were made, according to my information, on the floor of the Senate on Saturday, April 15, 1916, which, in justice to the Ohio National Guard, I believe should be covered by a statement of the exact facts in connection with the charges made.

According to my information, the charge was made that the officers of the Ohio National Guard had shamefully and disgracefully wasted and in some instances had actually embezzled Federal funds allotted to the State.

These charges could not possibly be true, for the reason that Federal funds allotted to the State of Ohio, or any other State, were necessarily expended under authority of and under rules and regulations laid down by the War Department. All such funds are paid out through a United States disbursing officer for the particular State and under proper orders issued by the adjutant general of the State for pay, transportation, and subsistence of officers and enlisted men, and within such limitations as laid down and promulgated by the orders of the Secretary of War.

In addition to this all disbursements made by the disbursing officer are audited by the War Department and the Comptroller of the Treasury, and if an unauthorized payment is made by the United States disburing officer he becomes individually liable therefor.

The assertion is therefore made that it would not be possible to "shamefully waste" or "embezzle" Federal funds, as charged.

In addition to the Federal allotments each year to the State of Ohio, it appropriates annually for the maintenance of the Ohio National Guard the sum of $476,712.10. The use of Federal allotments, as heretofore suggested, is limited and restricted by such rules, regulations, and orders as the War Department may see fit to impose.

The natural result of this condition is that Federal funds are utilized for the purposes clearly laid down in orders of the War Department and that State funds are utilized to pay for the additional cost of the necessary and practicable maintenance charges for the guard.

Privates may receive 52 cents per day from Federal funds and may receive $1 per day under Ohio statutes out of State appropriations.

In order that enlisted men can be better paid, the practice is, and has been for years, to pay enlisted men out of State funds. For instance, in the year 1911 the State paid enlisted men for camp pay the sum of $52,175.67, as is shown by exhibits hereto attached. In the year 1915 our records disclose the following facts: Every officer, noncommissioned officer, and private in the Ohio National Guard had a tour of camp duty, and in addition thereto infantry officers to the number of 100 attended an officers' school camp of instruction. Practically all the officers in the State last year received their pay from Federal funds. Out of the Federal allotment the pay of officers amounted to $25,973.95 and out of Federal funds enlisted men were paid $24,803.99. In addition to this amount the enlisted men were paid for camp services in 1915 from State funds approximately $40,000.

In addition to this amount the enlisted men during the year 1915 were paid for drill pay (officers receive no drill pay) from State funds approximately $70,000.

The War Department during the last 10 years has encouraged and promoted rifle and pistol practice. This was particularly so during the years 1909, 1910, 1911, 1912, and 1913. During those years the national and international rifle and pistol competitions were, on numerous occasions, held at Camp Perry, Ohio, which is one of the best rifle ranges in the world. The teams representing the various branches of the service in the United States Army and Navy gathered the members of their various teams from all over the country and prepared those teams for the national and international matches for months. To compete with these teams Ohio, necessarily, had to develop its team from year to year and spent a great deal of money in this development. This was encouraged and approved by the War Department.

They call attention to the fact that the team of 1911 was composed entirely of officers. This is true because those officers from practice and development had proven themselves to be the best marksmen and, naturally, they become members of the team to represent the State in competition with the Army, Navy, Marine Corps, Military Academy, and the teams of other States. The persons, however, who furnished the Senator from Idaho this information failed to mention the fact that Ohio's team in 1913 in the national and international matches was composed entirely of enlisted men. Further than this, it will be found upon investigation that the cost of development of Ohio's rifle team in any year, including pay, subsistence, and transportation, if compared with the cost of the development of the United States Army, Infantry, or Cavalry team of the same year, including pay, transportation, and subsistence, will show that this State has expended far less money on its team than was expended upon either of the other teams.

There is no merit in the contentions of the persons who have furnished the Senator with the information he used on the floor of the Senate, and the charges are most unfair, particularly in the veiled insinuctions that are calculated to give the impression of irregular and dishonest practices and activities in the Ohio National Guard.

I beg to be,
Very respectfully,

BEN W. HOUGH,
The Adjutant General, Ohio.

Mr. POMERENE. Mr. President, I now send to the desk a statement of the funds which were raised for the Ohio National Guard by taxation in the State, as well as a statement of the funds which were apportioned to the State out of the Federal appropriations during the years 1911 and 1915, inclusive. This statement also shows the amount which was paid to the officers as camp pay and to the men as camp pay out of the Federal funds, and the amount which was paid to the men as camp pay out of the State funds. I ask that that may be read.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Is there any objection?

Mr. POINDEXTER. I object.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is, Shall the document be read?

Mr. ASHURST. I call for the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President, will not the Senator from Ohio have the document printed in the RECORD without reading? The statement which he first sent to the desk has been read.

Mr. POMERENE. Mr. President——

Mr. SMOOT. If the Senator objects, that is all I shall say.

Mr. POMERENE. I certainly do object, in view of the seriousness of the charge.

Mr. BORAH. Mr. President, I trust that this communication will have some reference to the charge which has been made. The other communication had no reference whatever to it.

Mr. POMERENE. Mr. President, I have not finished the statement I shall have to make on this subject, and I think I shall be specific before I shall have concluded.

Mr. BORAH. I hope so. It is a characteristic of the Senator.

Mr. POMERENE. I usually am. In that respect I think I am somewhat like the Senator from Idaho.

Mr. POINDEXTER. I make the point of order that this request is not in order under Rule VIII; that the introduction of petitions and memorials has been passed by; that this is nothing more nor less than a part of the argument on the Army bill and is not morning business.

The VICE PRESIDENT. It seems to the Chair that this is in the nature of a memorial to the Senate of the United States. The Senator has a right to introduce it in the morning hour if he chooses to do so. The Chair had hoped that it would not come in until the Army bill was before the Senate, but over that the Chair has no control. The Chair believes it fairly comes within the category of morning business.

Mr. POMERENE. Mr. President, perhaps I can make a suggestion. If I may be permitted to have 15 or 20 minutes to discuss this matter, I have no desire to interfere with the matter that the Senator from Washington desires to have considered.

Mr. BORAH. If the Senator has that privilege, I should be glad to share it.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Nobody can have that privilege under this unanimous-consent agreement while the present occupant of the Chair is here.

Mr. POINDEXTER. I request the Senator from Ohio to withhold his request for the presentation of these certificates until the Army bill is taken up.

Mr. POMERENE. There have been some very serious charges made here; and while I do not question the good faith of the Senator from Idaho, he has been misled.

Mr. BORAH. The Senator from Idaho has not been misled.

Mr. POMERENE. Well——

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Chair hates to enforce the rule, but the Chair must enforce it. This is a question that is to be determined without debate. The yeas and nays have been called for and ordered, and the Secretary will call the roll.

Mr. REED. What is the question?

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is, Shall the document be read?

The Secretary proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. DU PONT (when his name was called). I have a general pair with the junior Senator from Kentucky [Mr. BECKHAM]. I do not know how he feels on this question, so I will withhold my vote.

Mr. SUTHERLAND (when his name was called). I inquire whether the senior Senator from Arkansas [Mr. CLARKE] has voted?

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Senator from Arkansas has not voted.

Mr. SUTHERLAND. I have a pair with that Senator, and therefore withhold my vote.

Mr. TILLMAN (when his name was called). I transfer my pair with the junior Senator from West Virginia [Mr. GOFF] to the senior Senator from Nebraska [Mr. HITCHCOCK] and will vote. I vote "yea."

Mr. UNDERWOOD (when his name was called). I have a general pair with the junior Senator from Ohio [Mr. HARDING]. I transfer that pair to the junior Senator from Tennessee [Mr. SHIELDS] and will vote. I vote "yea."

Mr. WILLIAMS (when his name was caled). Transferring my pair with the senior Senator from Pennsylvania [Mr. PENROSE] to the senior Senator from Tennessee [Mr. LEA], I vote "yea."

The roll call was concluded.

Mr. BRADY (after having voted in the affirmative). I have a general pair with the senior Senator from Florida [Mr. FLETCHER]. He is absent from the Chamber, and I therefore withdraw my vote.

Mr. SMITH of Michigan. I desire the RECORD to show that my colleague [Mr. TOWNSEND] is absent on account of illness in his family, and is paired with the junior Senator from Florida [Mr. BRYAN].

Mr. CHILTON. I transfer my pair with the Senator from New Mexico [Mr. FALL] to the Senator from Delaware [Mr. SAULSBURY] and will vote. I vote "nay."

Mr. CURTIS. I have been requested to anounce that the senior Senator from Rhode Island [Mr. LIPPITT] is paired with the junior Senator from Montana [Mr. WALSH].

The roll call resulted—yeas 48, nays 15, as follows:

YEAS—48.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Secretary will read the document presented by the Senator from Ohio.

The Secretary read as follows:

Section 1661—Ohio.

	Allotment.	Camp pay officers, Federal funds.	Camp pay men, Federal funds.	Camp pay men, State funds.
1911	$67,434.04	$26,011.04	$426.50	$52,175.67
1912	66,442.34	23,906.40	16,112.98	31,830.11
1913	64,489.34	20,701.25	15,199.96	45,109.90
1914	85,871.47	17,423.02	11,300.12	42,095.50
1915	86,134.53	25,973.95	24,803.99	43,607.08
Total	370,371.72	114,015.66	67,843.55	214,819.16

These Federal funds may be expended under supervision and by authority of the Chief, Division of Militia Affairs, for pay and transportation of officers and enlisted men and for subsistence of men at joint camps and maneuvers, camps of instructions, and rifle camps of instruction; for the purchase of arms and equipment, for the promotion of rifle practice, and the rental of rifle ranges.

Annual State appropriation for the National Guard, $476,712.10.

Mr. POMERENE. Mr. President, I have some other data here which I expect to have read into the RECORD later, but I feel that there is a courtesy due to the Senator from Washington in this matter and I will defer presenting it until later.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The morning business is closed.

PRESIDENTIAL APPROVAL.

A message from the President of the United States, by Mr. Sharkey, one of his secretaries, announced that the President had, on April 17, 1916, approved and signed the following act:

S. 1424. An act incorporating the American Academy of Arts and Letters.

LEGISLATIVE APPROPRIATIONS.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Chair lays before the Senate the action of the House of Representatives disagreeing to the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 12207) making appropriations for the legislative, executive, and judicial expenses of the Government for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1917, and for other purposes, and requesting a conference with the Senate on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses thereon.

Mr. MARTIN of Virginia. I move that the Senate insist upon its amendments and agree to the conference asked for by the House, the conferees on the part of the Senate to be appointed by the Chair.

The motion was agreed to; and the Vice President appointed Mr. MARTIN of Virginia, Mr. OVERMAN, and Mr. SMOOT conferees on the part of the Senate.

REPORT OF COMMISSION ON INDUSTRIAL RELATIONS.

Mr. POINDEXTER. I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of the joint resolution (S. J. Res. 98) to print as a public document the final report and testimony submitted to Congress by the United States Commission on Industrial Relations.

Mr. MARTINE of New Jersey. I desire to ask if we are still in morning business?

The VICE PRESIDENT. No; we have finally closed morning business.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. Mr. President, before the Senate votes upon the motion of the Senator from Washington I wish to call attention to the fact that the House has passed and sent to us a concurrent resolution providing for printing the report. That was sent to the Committee on Printing. I wish to ask, as a question of practice, whether it would be in order, if we take up this Senate joint resolution, to substitute the resolution which the House passed? If we should take up the Senate joint resolution with the House resolution passed, we create a state of confusion. Would it be in order, if we take up the Senate joint resolution, to substitute the resolution sent here by the House and amend it and perfect it and practically terminate action?

The VICE PRESIDENT. There is not any doubt about that. When the joint resolution comes before the Senate it can be amended by offering the resolution of the House as a substitute. The question is on the motion of the Senator from Washington.

The motion was agreed to, and the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the joint resolution.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. As a substitute for the joint resolution reported by the committee, I move that we concur in the House resolution, which has been passed and sent to the Senate.

Mr. GALLINGER. Mr. President, that can not be done.

Mr. POINDEXTER. I make the point of order that the motion of the Senator from Georgia is out of order.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Chair understands that the resolution of the House is before the Committee on Printing.

Mr. SMOOT. I will state to the Senator from Georgia that the House did pass a resolution authorizing the printing of 100,000 copies of the report only. That resolution is now before the Committee on Printing. But the Committee on Printing has reported out the joint resolution as found upon the calendar, and I think the only proper course for the Senator from Georgia to pursue is to offer the House resolution as a substitute for the joint resolution, and then if it is passed the House——

The VICE PRESIDENT. The resolution of the House is before the Committee on Printing, is it not?

Mr. SMOOT. Yes; but the Senator from Georgia can offer it as a substitute.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. I understand that I can offer it as an independent matter, as a substitute.

Mr. SMOOT. That is what I mean.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. What I am anxious to do is to avoid putting the Senate in the attitude of passing a joint resolution on this subject with a resolution already here from the House. I am opposed to that part of the Senate joint resolution which provides for printing the testimony. I do not object to that part of the joint resolution which provides for printing the report. But if the Senate disagrees with me—as I fear it will—and prints the testimony as well as the report, we ought to do it by an amendment to the resolution passed by the House, and then all that will be necessary would be for the House to concur, and the legislation would be ended. If we pass an independent resolution and send it to the House, it will have to be sent to the committee of the House, we will have the action of the House here before the committee, and they will have the action of the Senate in the House before the committee, and the two bodies will in no way be brought together by the action taken.

Mr. GALLINGER. That is not an unusual parliamentary situation, however.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. But an unfortunate one.

Mr. GALLINGER. It may be unfortunate.

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President, in behalf of the Committee on Printing I wish to say that the committee reported the joint resolution now on the calendar before the House passed the resolution upon the same subject matter, and the only way the Senator from Georgia can do, I think, is to offer it as a substitute.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. I offer that as a substitute for the report of the committee.

Mr. CHILTON. Mr. President, I wish to inquire whether an amendment to the substitute is in order?

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. Undoubtedly.

Mr. SMOOT. Yes.

The VICE PRESIDENT. It is in order.

Mr. CHILTON. Then I offer the following amendment to the substitute.

The VICE PRESIDENT. It will be read.

The SECRETARY. Insert after the word "Senate,' in line 7, the following:

And that the report of Basil M. Manly, director of research and investigation, and the individual reports and statements of the several commissioners, together with all the testimony taken at its hearings except exhibits submitted in printed form, which shall be appropriately referred to in said testimony, be printed as a Senate document under the direction of the Joint Committee on Printing; and that 10,000 additional copies be printed and bound in cloth, of which 2,500 copies shall be for the use of the Senate and 7,500 copies for the use of the House of Representatives; and that of the final report of said commission 100,000 additional copies be printed, of which 30,000 shall be for the use of the Senate and 70,000 copies for the use of the House of Representatives: Provided, That the superintendent of documents is hereby authorized to reprint copies of the same for sale or distribution as provided by law.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. Mr. President, I believe the simplest way to get out of this trouble is to ask unanimous consent to withdraw the House resolution from the committee and take it up in the Senate. Whether we are willing to have this testimony printed or not, as far as I am concerned I am perfectly willing to have the Senate vote on it, and while we have it here I think we ought to get it up and get through with it.

Mr. REED. Mr. President, it seems to me the matter is very simple if, disregarding the question of any resolution from the House, the Senator from Georgia should offer as a substitute the resolution in exactly the same terms, and if it were passed then the only thing remaining to be done would be for the committee in charge of the House resolution to report back that no further action is necessary, and the action had to-day would go to the House and be immediately affirmed.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. The simplest and clearest way is to give unanimous consent to withdraw the House resolution from the committee. I ask unanimous consent to withdraw the House resolution from the committee, that we may take it up and dispose of it.

Mr. SMOOT. The Committee on Printing does not want to report the House resolution without an amendment.

Mr. HARDWICK. If the Senator will permit me, if we substitute for the House resolution the Senate proposition, then you bring the two Houses together.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. We would bring the House resolution back here by unanimous consent and take it up, and if the Senate resolution is offered as a substitute and the Senate adopts the report of your committee you pass the House resolution by substitute, and we will get the two Houses together.

Mr. GALLINGER. As a member of the Committee on Printing I want to say that that committee has done what it has thought is proper. It has done what the commission wanted the committee to do, and I think while we have this matter directly before us now and the Senator from West Virginia has offered an amendment to the proposed substitute covering the action of the committee, I will object, Mr. President, to the matter being withdrawn from the Committee on Printing. I suggest that under the rule that motion would have to lie over one day.

Mr. NORRIS. Will the Senator yield before he takes his seat?

Mr. GALLINGER. Certainly.

Mr. NORRIS. As I understand the parliamentary situation, the Senator from Georgia moves to substitute the House resolution and then the Senator from West Virginia moves to amend the substitute, which, if carried, would make that the same as the Senate joint resolution.

Mr. GALLINGER. Precisely.

Mr. NORRIS. But that does not get the House resolution before the Senate.

Mr. GALLINGER. We can not pass a bill in an hour usually in this body. It may take a week to pass it.

Mr. NORRIS. I understand, but what is the advantage in doing that from going right on? Suppose we take up the substitute and amend it and then adopt it, we would be exactly where we are now.

Mr. GALLINGER. Oh, no.

Mr. NORRIS. We would still have the Senate resolution before the Senate and not the House resolution.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. The Senator from West Virginia has proposed to amend the substitute by presenting the original joint resolution.

Mr. GALLINGER. If the motion of the Senator from West Virginia carries, it will bring before this body the action of the Committee on Printing of the Senate, and that is what I, as a member of the committee, want to have done. The minority of the Committee on Printing acceded to every demand that the commission made, and we want to stand by that. We do not want to have it said that the action of the committee has been thwarted in any way or modified in any way, but that we shall pass the resolution as the Committee on Printing agreed to it.

The VICE PRESIDENT. This is the situation: The Senate ordered taken up the Senate joint resolution on motion of the Senator from Washington. The Senator from Georgia has offered a substitute. The Senator from West Virginia has moved to amend the substitute. There is an objection to withdrawing the House resolution from the committee. So the amendment must be voted on or disposed of in some way, and it is now before the Senate for discussion.

Mr. SMOOT. I wish to ask the Senator from West Virginia to withdraw his amendment. The proper way to do this is to vote down the substitute offered by the Senator from Georgia, if the Senate feels that way. Then we will vote direct upon what the Senate Committee on Printing has reported to the Senate. That is what I want to do. That is the easiest way to do it and it is the straight way to do it.

Mr. CHILTON. Mr. President, my idea was in offering the amendment that we would then have the House resolution amended and it would go back to the other body and would not have to go to the committee. If the Senate is willing to take a direct vote on the Senate joint resolution, I do not care which way you take it; it does not make a bit of difference to me.

Mr. SMOOT. I suggest to the Senator to withdraw it.

Mr. CHILTON. I withdraw the amendment for the present, and we will take a direct vote between the two propositions.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Then the question recurs on the motion of the Senator from Georgia.

Mr. POINDEXTER. Mr. President, I understand that resolution is not before the Senate; that it is the House resolution.

Mr. GALLINGER. Oh, yes; the Senator from Georgia can move it.

The VICE PRESIDENT. No House resolution is before the Senate in that form. It is offered as an amendment by the Senator from Georgia.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. Which is the resolution the House passed; but, unfortunately, I have not the House resolution before the body, and the body will not give unanimous consent to bring the House resolution away from the committee. If we proceed now and adopt the report of the Senate committee, we will be in this position.

The House will have passed and sent to the Senate the resolution providing for printing the report. Instead of acting on the House resolution, either by adopting it or by a substitute or by amendment, we pass an independent resolution, ignoring the House resolution, and send our independent resolution on this subject to the House. Then each body will have passed an entirely different resolution, not one as a substitute for the other, and if we were desirous of getting the matter into complete confusion and having it where nothing would be printed probably that would be as desirable a course as could be taken.

I really do not wish to see the measure brought to such a position, and I think if the Senate desires to print the testimony as well as the report we should act upon the House resolution by substitute. I will interpose no obstacle to immediate action.

I should be glad to see the report printed, but I will vote against printing the testimony, because I think it would be wasting $90,000 and because there has been a good deal of fuss made about the fact that I said I would vote against it. I will not be overpersuaded to do what I do not think ought to be done.

But I will not in any way delay action by the Senate, and I do not seriously object to what I am sure will be done, namely, print the testimony as well as the report.

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President, if the Senate joint resolution is passed and it goes to the other House, the House can substitute that for the concurrent resolution which it has passed. Then the proposed legislation will go to conference if there is any dispute between the House and the Senate. I think that is the simple way and the easy way of reaching a conclusion of this matter. All we want to do now is to vote on the substitute offered by the Senator from Georgia [Mr. SMITH].

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is on the substitute offered by the Senator from Georgia.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. Mr. President, I desire to have read at the Secretary's desk a little of the literature which has been recently sent out by the Committee on Industrial Relations in its propaganda insisting that this testimony be printed. I send to the desk a sheet that has recently been sent out from the "Committee on Industrial Relations, Washington, D. C., for immediate relief," to the press of the country that was willing to print it. I furnish this as a sample of the literature which emanates from this distinguished body, and my lack of respect for the expresssions contained in this paper are almost equalled by my regard for the commission on industrial relations.

Mr. GALLINGER. Mr. President, if the Senator from Georgia will permit a question, I desire to say that, as I understand, the Commission on Industrial Relations has been dissolved, and this is a voluntary committee of that commission, calling itself the "Committee on Industrial Relations."

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. It is the aftermath of the original commission that is voluntarily distributing propaganda to the press along the line of the old commission and representing it.

Mr. GALLINGER. The other was a commission, while this is a voluntary committee. That is the difference.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Is there objection to reading the paper presented by the Senator from Georgia? The Chair hears none, and the Secretary will read as requested.

The Secretary read as follows:

[From Committee on Industrial Relations, Washington, D. C., for immediate release.]

To labor press: Please print on first page, if possible.

Washington, April —.

Whether or not the truth about industrial conditions in America is to be suppressed depends now on the United States Senate.

The fate of the resolution ordering the printing of 100,000 copies of the final report of the Commission on Industrial Relations and 10,000 copies of the testimony now hangs in the balance.

Unless an aggressive fight is made it will be defeated by a handful of reactionary Senators, led by HOKE SMITH, of Georgia. They will accomplish this by taking advantage of senatorial red tape, and particularly of the vicious system known as "senatorial courtesy," by which one Senator can often block action.

Whether or not the interests that want the report suppressed succeed will depend largely on the pressure brought to bear on the Senate by those who want the facts about American industrial conditions known.

An aggressive demand for action will cut through all the red tape and win speedy favorable action on the resolution to print the report.

Write your Senator to-day!

The SECRETARY. At the end of the paper there are nine stars.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. Mr. President, it is unnecessary to call attention to the numerous papers in which that appeal has already been printed. It is merely a sample of the kind of work which the representatives of the Industrial Commission are doing, and in my opinion it is about a sample of the work which the commission itself did. I have not the slightest respect for anything the commission did. I reached that conclusion after the commission had been at work a short time, and I voted against continuing appropriations for the commission.

I was particularly interested at that time in some of the testimony that was taken about my own State, and I gave the Senate the benefit of one little extract from a part of that testimony in which a witness testified that at Rome, Ga., the bells rang for the employees to go to work in the factories at 3 o'clock in the morning. "Well, what time, then," the witness was asked, "did they go to work"? "At 6 o'clock." "Well, why call them three hours before they were going to work"? "Because," came the answer, "the southern people are so slow we have to give them time enough to get dressed." [Laughter.] Of course the statement about when the bell rang was false.

I do not care anything about this report of the Industrial Commission. I really do not care anything about the testimony they gathered. I regard it simply as so much junk, and I do not think it worth putting on any shelves.

So far as my labor friends in Georgia are concerned—and I am glad to say that the bulk of the working people are my friends—for 35 years I have never missed an opportunity, where I could legitimately and properly do so, to advocate legislation and official administration that I thought would give a better chance to the man who was struggling for a living; and where the burdens were heaviest, I have thought that the hand of legislation should reach forth the most to give assistance. The labor organizations favor printing this testimony, but I will vote against printing it on account of my view of its utter lack of reliability. I have no more confidence in its general accuracy than I have in the ludicrous falsehood about when the rising bells rang in Rome, Ga. The interest on the part of labor in this publication has largely been worked up by publications sent out from this same industrial commission whose work you will vote to print.

Mr. BORAH. Mr. President, I do not see anything particularly objectionable in the communication which this committee has sent out. It seems to be in full accord with the universal practice of patriotic citizens to appeal to their Senators, and I do not object at all to the leadership which it has conferred upon the distinguished Senator from Georgia.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. No; I was objecting to that.

Mr. BORAH. I felt that the Senator's modesty would not carry him that far; but I call attention to another precedent, which is of later significance, a bulletin which has been sent out by the so-called National Guard, which says:

It is recommended, therefore, that your Senators be urged to support the amendment to section 108 of the Senate bill which will be offered by Senator REED, of Missouri, as being more fair and equitable.

* * * * * * *

It is very important that there be a few National Guard officers here after Wednesday who can go direct to their Senators with proposals or recommendations which we may find it necessary to make.

For the executive committee.

J. CLIFFORD R. FOSTER,
Chairman.

That is a practice, Mr. President, in which many patriotic citizens indulge.

Mr. THOMAS. Is that signed with 9 stars or with 13 stars?

Mr. BORAH. I know there is one star on it, because it is signed "J. Clifford R. Foster, chairman."

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President, I will suggest to the Senator from Georgia that he amend his substitute by striking out the words "and bound in cloth." In explanation of that suggestion I wish to say that the representatives of the commission and also the representatives of the labor organizations have requested the testimony be bound in cloth, but that the final report be bound in paper. The Senate report provides that 20,000 copies of the testimony shall be bound in paper and that the report be bound in cloth. I will say to the Senator from Georgia that by striking out those words it would save $9,000.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. I am willing to do that.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is on the amendment to the joint resolution proposed by the Senator from Georgia [Mr. SMITH].

The amendment was rejected.

The joint resolution was reported to the Senate without amendment.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. Mr. President, I merely wish, before the vote on the joint resolution is taken, that the Senate shall understand that they are proposing to pay over $90,000 to print this testimony that nobody will read and to which nobody will give shelf space. Of course, I understand it is going to be printed.

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President, I want to say to the Senator from Georgia that the printing of 10,000 copies of the testimony will cost $54,978.84; the printing of 100,000 copies of the final report will cost $9,729.88; and then to print 10,000 copies of the exhibits, except those heretofore printed, embracing three volumes, will cost $27,979.53, or a total, as provided for in the resolution of the Senate, of $92,688.25.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. That is, it will cost about $82,000 for printing the testimony and about $10,000 for printing the report?

Mr. SMOOT. It will cost $54,978.84 for 10,000 copies of the complete testimony in seven volumes.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. But the exhibits are to go with the testimony; so that the total cost of printing the testimony and exhibits, over and above the cost of printing the report, will be something like $80,000.

Mr. SMOOT. Eighty-two thousand dollars.

Mr. CHILTON. Mr. President, I merely want to say a word. What has been read at the desk is characteristic of a great many conditions which have been apparent in the Senate heretofore. Why should not people who are interested in this document suspect that there is an effort to keep down the truth? This is the first time there has ever been an objection to a report of this kind being printed. The printing of the report of the Industrial Commission of 1898, I think it was, cost $134,000, but nobody objected to that, it seems; and, I submit, Mr. President, that no one has a right to object to the printing of a document of this kind, upon the ground that something in it does not suit him, the commission which prepared it having been sanctioned by both Houses of Congress, and the members of which were appointed by the President of the United States.

Congress has gone to an expense of $400,000 or $500,000 to get this testimony, and why might not the people interested in it believe that there was something being concealed improperly from the public if, in the face of precedent, we should decline to print the report, and thus throw away the $450,000 which has been expended by the commission, merely because somebody does not want to have it printed on account of something that may be in it?

No one suspects the Senator from Georgia of any improper motives in anything; he has passed beyond that by a consistent private and public life; but the people interested in this matter are not to be blamed; they are not to be criticized for feeling that there is some reason, not expressed probably upon the floor of this body, why the testimony should not be printed. I do not know what is in it; I have not read it, but I want it printed so that I can read it, and so that the public can have an opportunity to investigate it. It does seem to me that here, when the precedent is that the document should be printed, when, in the nature of things, we ought to give the public the benefit of that which has cost $400,000 or $500,000, there should not be a voice raised against a proposal so natural and so proper.

Mr. ASHURST. Mr. President, the distinguished Senator from Georgia [Mr. SMITH] stated that he feared the printing of this matter would cause a lot of printed volumes to repose on library shelves unread.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. No; I do not think they will repose on library shelves; I think they will be speedily thrown out as junk after being received.

Mr. ASHURST. Mr. President, I want to say to my learned friend, in all candor, that I think he is mistaken about that. A large number of libraries throughout the United States have asked for this report and for the testimony, and several universities have asked for the report. In addition to that, Mr. President, speaking for myself, I will say that I have two or three hundred requests for this document; and, while I do not speak for other Senators, I have been informed by other Senators that they have, respectively, from 50 to 200 requests for it. I feel very certain that this document will be read, and read about as widely and with about as much interest as any publication which Congress could authorize to be made; and I am very glad to see that the Senate is going to publish it.

Mr. THOMAS. Mr. President, I am satisfied that the Senator's statement in regard to the report is correct; but I think he is laboring under a wrong impression with regard to the testimony. I shall not oppose the adoption of this resolution; but I recall that on the last occasion when a similar question was before the Senate, involving the publication of the report and testimony of another commission—I believe it was in 1901—a congressional commission which made an investigation along the same line, the report of that commission, including the testimony taken, was printed at a cost of some forty or fifty thousand dollars; and the chances are that 95 per cent of the people of the United States by this time have forgotten that there ever was such a commission or that any testimony was taken by it. I do not know what the cost of that commission was, but I think it was very considerable.

I objected a few days ago to the expenditure of $21,000 for the publication of a report, the purpose of which was to show the existence of a water-power monopoly in the United States, on the ground that we were spending money for the publication of a report which was designed to prove a proposition which was known to be a fact to any person who had given any thought or consideration to the subject. The Senate, nevertheless, determined to print it as a document, and it has been partially printed, and, of course, the remainder of it will be. It was a sheer waste of money. Under all these circumstances, I shall not oppose the publication of the testimony going with this report. I understand, however, that the report has been printed and largely circulated over the country in the interval between its presentation to the House and the present time.

Mr. MYERS. Mr. President, it is my understanding that there has been a very limited number of copies of this report—the report alone—printed by the Industrial Relations Commission itself out of a remnant of funds which it had on hand when it closed its work, but the number which was thus printed is a mere bagatelle and is entirely insufficient. I received two copies, and I have been desperately endeavoring to get more, but have been told that that was all I could get. If some of the Senators had received as many requests for this report and the testimony as I have received, they would not say that it would not be extensively read. I have received a large number of requests, not only for the report but for the testimony itself. Those requests amount to several hundred, and some people have written to me regarding it not only once but two or three times. As I have said, I have received but two copies of the report and no copies at all of the testimony. I could well use several hundred copies of each in supplying the requests I have received.

The tendency of the times is for publicity, and it is a good tendency, and there can be no valid objection to publicity in governmental affairs. There can be no valid objection to the printing of this report and testimony. After having gone to the expense involved in the work of the Industrial Relations Commission and the expense of taking this testimony, it would be absurd not to give its work publicity and put it within reach of all who may be interested. I think that the money to be spent in printing this report and the testimony will be well spent. Both the report and the testimony should be printed in adequate numbers sufficient to supply, free of charge, all who may desire copies thereof. I am sure there is much valuable information in both report and testimony, and why conceal it? The report consists merely of conclusions. They are based on the testimony; hence both should be published widely, in order that the people may read both and see if the conclusions are well drawn. I hope both the report and the testimony will be printed without further delay. There has already been too much delay in this matter.

Mr. HUGHES. Mr. President, merely to clear up this situation somewhat, I desire to state that the Commission on Industrial Relations was created by act of August 23, 1912, and expired by limitation of law August 23, 1915. The total amount appropriated for the commission was $450,000. The commission was composed of nine members appointed by President Wilson. The sundry civil appropriation act of March 3, 1915, provided a final appropriation of $100,000 for the expenses of the commission, only a part of which was available for printing, including the final report of the commission.

Mr. President, I think it would be a preposterous thing for this body, after an expenditure of $450,000 for the purpose of gathering this information, to balk at an expenditure of $90,000 for the purpose of printing it and putting it in permanent form. It is a sample, however, of the way we carry on business in this body. We appropriated $40,000 a short time ago to print a report to be used in connection with the water-power bill then pending in the Senate. That bill passed the Senate, however, several weeks before the report could possibly be made available, and Senators knew at the time the authorization was made that the bill would be passed before the report could be printed and made public. We joyously appropriated that amount of money. I objected to it one day, and was hailed as a reactionary by all the Progressive and Bull Moose papers in the land because I foolishly attempted to save that useless expenditure of $40,000.

Mr. President, wisely or unwisely, I introduced the Industrial Commission bill in the other House when I was a Member of that body, and I handled it on its passage through the House. It may have been a mistake to have done so. I am satisfied, however, that it was wise legislation. I should like to have this proposition voted on before 2 o'clock.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. Mr. President, I only want to say that at no time have I opposed printing the report. I favor printing the report. I have simply opposed spending $90,000 for printing this testimony.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The joint resolution is in the Senate and open to amendment. If there be no amendment to be proposed, the question is, Shall the joint resolution be engrossed and read a third time?

The joint resolution was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

SISAL-HEMP INDUSTRY.

Mr. RANSDELL. Mr. President, from the subcommittee of the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry investigating the so-called Sisal Trust, I submit a resolution and ask unanimous consent for its immediate consideration. It is merely a resolution directing the Federal Trade Commission to secure certain information in regard to binder twine.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Secretary will read the resolution.

The resolution (S. Res. 170) was read, as follows:

Whereas information has come to the subcommittee of the Senate Committee on Agriculture and Forestry, which is now investigating the sisal-hemp industry, that there is liable to be a shortage of binder twine, owing to an alleged shortage of Yucatan sisal, from which the greater portion of binder twine is manufactured, in consequence of which the price of that commodity, so essential to the welfare of American farmers, may be considerably increased in price; and

Whereas the Comision Reguladora del Mercado de Hennequen denies that there is any shortage of sisal and insists that there is more than enough to satisfy all the demands of the consumers of binder twine in the United States; and

Whereas the said Comision Reguladora has made a proposition to the said subcommittee of the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry, explaining the present status of the sisal industry and requesting the said subcommittee to make distribution among the manufacturers of the United States of 125,000 bales of sisal, over and above its present commitments, in such quantities and to such manufacturers as said committee may direct, to be used for domestic twine purposes only in accordance with the condition set forth in said proposition dated April 14, 1916, the original now being in the hands of said Subcommittee on Agriculture and Forestry; and

Whereas it is of the greatest importance to the American people that all the facts in this matter be brought to light, as well as in regard to other raw materials out of which binder twine is manufactured, and the price of binder twine be kept at a reasonable figure: Therefore be it

Resolved, That the Federal Trade Commission is hereby directed to act upon the proposition of the said Comision Reguladora del Mercado de Hennequen in lieu of the said subcommittee of the Senate Committee on Agriculture and Forestry, and to report thereon as soon as possible, not to exceed 30 days from April 14, 1916: Be it further

Resolved, That this action is taken without intending to forecast in any way the final decision in the pending controversy in regard to the sisal industry or to prejudice the rights of any of the parties thereto.

Mr. RANSDELL. I ask unanimous consent for the immediate consideration of the resolution.

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President, I should like the Senator to make just a brief statement, giving the reasons why this resolution should be adopted.

Mr. RANSDELL. Very briefly, they are as follows: The subcommittee has been investigating the so-called Sisal-Hemp Trust, and in the midst of our investigations we were confronted with the statement made several days ago by the attorney for a very prominent manufacturer that there is a real shortage in the sisal hemp from which binder twine is manufactured. In response to that statement by this attorney, the representatives of the Comision Reguladora del Mercado de Hennequen, a Mexican corporation, from the country where the sisal is made, stated that there is not a shortage, that there is sufficient to answer all purposes of the American consumers of binder twine, which is made very largely of this sisal.

Mr. GALLINGER. Mr. President, may I ask the Senator a question?

Mr. RANSDELL. Certainly.

Mr. GALLINGER. Is not this matter before the courts at the present time in some form?

Mr. RANSDELL. No, sir; it is not, so far as I know. This is information which I understand both parties to the controversy are very anxious to secure. The Federal Trade Commission propose to send some one down to Yucatan to ascertain whether or not there is any sisal down there that is being withheld.

Mr. GALLINGER. I have an impression that this in some form is connected with an investigation against the Harvester Trust.

Mr. RANSDELL. I think the Senator is mistaken. The subcommittee of the Senate has had this general matter under investigation for several weeks. The only purpose of this inquiry is to get the actual facts about the amount of binder twine now available for use by the farmers of America and to ascertain whether or not there is sufficient available fiber—whether it be of sisal or manila or East African sisal—to make the necessary amount of binder twine.

Mr. GALLINGER. My only thought was that we would better not do as we so often do—have duplicate investigations; that is all.

Mr. RANSDELL. I will say to the Senator that we are not duplicating investigations. We are simply asking that some facts be found which we have not yet the facilities for finding.

Mr. GALLINGER. Which would form the basis of an investigation?

Mr. RANSDELL. Which would form the basis of our investigation.

Mr. LODGE. Mr. President, may I ask the Senator a question?

Mr. RANSDELL. I shall be delighted to have the Senator do so.

Mr. LODGE. This regulating commission, if I am not mistaken, is a Government commission?

Mr. RANSDELL. It is.

Mr. LODGE. It is not a corporation?

Mr. RANSDELL. It is a Government commission.

Mr. LODGE. Established by the Carranza government?

Mr. RANSDELL. Yes, sir; that is a fact.

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President, I see from reading the resolution the object of it and exactly the proposition that has been made to the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry, and that the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry desires to turn over to the Federal Trade Commission, for investigation, the proposition received by the committee.

Mr. RANSDELL. Yes, sir; that portion which we have not the facilities for investigating.

Mr. SMOOT. I do not think the committee has the facilities, and I think myself it was a very good thing to turn it over to the Federal Trade Commission.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Is there any objection to the present consideration of the resolution.

The resolution was considered by unanimous consent and agreed to.

NEW AQUEDUCT BRIDGE.

Mr. SWANSON. I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of House bill 759, Order of Business 313. It is for the construction of a new Aqueduct Bridge here. It is very important. The present bridge has been condemned, and I should like to have the matter disposed of as early as possible.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Is there any objection?

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President, I will ask the Senator what appropriation the bill calls for. I have not had time to read the report.

Mr. SWANSON. One million dollars for the bridge and $150,000 to acquire any approaches, and so forth, that may be needed.

Mr. SMOOT. Does the Senator believe that the bill ought to be passed now, without any explanation or discussion of it?

Mr. SWANSON. The explanation is that it has passed the House unanimously, and I understand it has been unanimously reported by the Committee on Commerce, and it is a very urgent matter.

Mr. THOMAS. Mr. President, how much money will be required to build the bridge?

Mr. SWANSON. A million dollars.

Mr. THOMAS. I object.

PRICE OF GASOLINE.

Mr. MARTINE of New Jersey. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent to bring up the subject of the gasoline investigation that I proposed some time ago. The resolution was adopted, but the preamble was not adopted, and as the resolution now stands I feel that it puts the Senate in a most ridiculous position. We have adopted a resolution that might as well refer to molasses, or to the specific gravity of linseed oil, or anything else. The word "gasoline" is not mentioned in the resolution.

Mr. GALLINGER. Mr. President——

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from New Jersey yield to the Senator from New Hampshire?

Mr. MARTINE of New Jersey. Certainly.

Mr. GALLINGER. I thought possibly the acute Senator from New Jersey had overlooked the fact that the Federal Trade Commission is making the very investigation that the Senator's resolution and preamble called for.

Mr. MARTINE of New Jersey. I think I realize what the Senator refers to. The answer that came from the department with reference to the resolution of the Senator from Iowa [Mr. KENYON] I do not think can be raised against mine. The Attorney General thought it was incompatible to present the general facts of his investigation. My resolution calls for nothing of that kind. My resolution simply requests the Attorney General to report as to whether any of the statutes of the United States had been violated by the Standard Oil Co.

I really feel that there is such almost universal demand upon the part of the country in this matter that they are entitled to know. We hear it upon all sides. I have received perhaps a hundred letters or more from various people asking that this investigation be pressed. It was suggested, I recall, when this matter was up before, that the department were prosecuting this matter now. I have here, under date of January 10, 1916, this statement, signed by the Attorney General. He says:

No prosecutions have been instituted by the Government based on the increase in the price of petroleum and its products, especially gasoline.

So that refutes the argument that the department were taking it up. The department do not seem to have done anything in this direction. In the meantime this condition has gone on becoming more and more aggravated, until we are assured by people who are versed in the matter, and ought to know, that the price will ultimately reach 40 cents per gallon. I have received from some parties in Chicago, Ill., information to the effect that gasoline at Dayton, Ohio, is 23 cents a gallon, and in Richmond, Ind., 18.5 cents, the two places being only 40 miles apart. This condition prevails; and the fact that none of these constituent companies seem to cut the price at all in their respective localities, but they all harmonize with each other, demonstrates to me almost conclusively that the Standard Oil Co. is in complete control, and that if anything can be a trust they are a trust.

Mr. GALLINGER. I will ask the Senator if he has his resolution before him?

Mr. MARTINE of New Jersey. I have not the resolution; no. The Secretary has, however.

Mr. GALLINGER. I should like to have it read, or to have enough of it read to show that the Senator's resolution calls for prosecutions. As I read it, it asks for investigation—the very thing the House resolution asked for. It went to the Attorney General and the Attorney General replied that the matter had been passed over to the Federal Trade Commission for investigation. I understand that that commission is making the investigation, and, indeed, has made a preliminary report.

Mr. MARTINE of New Jersey. Here is the resolution (S. Con. Res. 19) that was adopted. I will read the preamble.

Mr. GALLINGER. No; the resolution.

Mr. MARTINE of New Jersey. The resolution reads:

Resolved by the Senate (the House of Representatives concurring), That the Attorney General of the United States be, and is hereby, directed to cause an investigation of the subject as to whether this phenomenal increase in price of this article is the result of the violation of the laws of the United States.

Mr. GALLINGER. Mr. President, an almost identical resolution was passed by the other House, sent to the Attorney General, and he replied—I have the reply in my desk—that the department had turned it over to the Federal Trade Commission. But I shall not object.

Mr. MARTINE of New Jersey. My resolution practically amounts to nothing, in the present form, without a preamble.

Mr. GALLINGER. That is certainly true; and I think it will amount to just as much as nothing after the Senator has had the preamble adopted, because the Attorney General has already had the matter under investigation and the Federal Trade Commission now has it under investigation.

Mr. MARTINE of New Jersey. I do not know whether he has or not. I know that he says here, on January 6, that he has done absolutely nothing. I can not understand why there should be so much hesitancy——

Mr. HUGHES. Mr. President, I noticed in the newspapers what the Senator from New Hampshire has stated—that a similar resolution from the House had been returned to the House by the Attorney General with the statement that he was about to undertake an investigation or prosecution; and I would suggest to my colleague——

Mr. MARTINE of New Jersey. Mr. President, I beg the pardon of my colleague, but it is within a very few minutes of 2 o'clock; and I understand that in the natural process of time, if that hour is reached without action on the resolution, that will be the end of my little talk on this matter. So I earnestly ask consideration of the preamble of the resolution now, and I ask for a vote, Mr. President. I should like to say more on the subject, but I want a vote more than I do to air my own views.

The VICE PRESIDENT. There is half a minute remaining.

Mr. GALLINGER. I am not going to object. It will do no good, it will do no harm, and——

Mr. MARTINE of New Jersey. It will do no harm. I ask for a vote.

Mr. GALLINGER. It will amuse the Senator from New Jersey.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is on agreeing to the preamble.

The preamble was agreed to.

NATIONAL DEFENSE.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The hour of 2 o'clock having arrived, the Chair lays before the Senate the unfinished business, which is House bill 12766.

The Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, resumed the consideration of the bill (H. R. 12766) to increase the efficiency of the Military Establishment of the United States.

Mr. CHAMBERLAIN. Mr. President, in the course of his remarks the other day the Senator from Missouri [Mr. REED] quoted from a document some matters reflecting, I rather thought, on Gen. W. H. Carter.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Chair understands that the Senator from Oregon has already spoken.

Mr. CHAMBERLAIN. I am not going to speak; I just present a communication and ask that it be printed. It is a communication from Gen. Carter to me in answer to those statements.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Without objection, it is so ordered.

The matter referred to is as follows:

WASHINGTON, D. C., April 15, 1916.

Hon. GEORGE E. CHAMBERLAIN,
Chairman Committee on Military Affairs,
United States Senate.

MY DEAR SENATOR: My attention has been called to certain statements made in debate in the Senate by Hon. JAMES A. REED and printed on page 6114 of the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD, April 14, 1916.

In view of my relations with the committee of which you are chairman during the preparation of the pending bill for reorganizing the Military Establishment, I deem it proper to make a personal statement to you concerning the charges.

It is specifically charged in a quoted statement presented to the Senate by the Senator from Missouri:

"First. That Gen. Carter represents the Cavalry arm of the service in a special way and for the purpose of obtaining legislation for that arm.

"Second. That the Cavalry is interested in the continental army scheme, because they believe that it will permit any increase made in the Regular Establishment to be divided between the Field Artillery and the Cavalry.

"Third. That to enable Gen. Carter to perform these functions in the interest of the Cavalry this association has undertaken to defray his expenses, furnish stationery, postage, and clerical assistance, and to subject all officers in the Cavalry branch of the standing army to an assessment for that purpose.

"Fourth. That he asked to be permitted to act without a large committee in influencing legislation for the benefit of the Cavalry; that Gen. Carter stated that he was friendly with the House and Senate Military Committees.

* * * * * * *

"This testimony of Gen. Johnson as to Gen. Carter's fitness for influencing military legislation develops two things:

"First. What the National Guard representatives meant in saying that there were experts in influencing military legislation whose methods they could not approach.

"Second. That in the preparation of the pending bill Gen. Carter has been afforded ample opportunity to exercise those peculiar qualities which fit him for the preparation of data for the guidance of the committees of Congress."

Categorically replying to the charges and insinuations:

First. I have served in the Infantry, Cavalry, Adjutant General's Department, and for nearly 14 years as a general officer. The charge that I represent the Cavalry arm of the service in a special way for the purpose of obtaining legislation favorable to that arm as opposed to the interest of the Army as a whole is false and without foundation in fact. I spent many of the best years of my life on the Indian frontier as a Cavalry officer and hold that branch of the service in an affectionate memory which calls for no apology.

Second. The relation between the so-called continental army scheme and the division of any consequent increase in the Regular Establishment between the Field Artillery and the Cavalry is a gross and unfair insinuation against two branches of the service, is obscure, deduced from no evidence, and without foundation in fact.

Third. While not frankly and directly stated, the inference intended is that I am conducting an office or in charge of a campaign of information or conducting a lobby and that the Cavalry Association is defraying my expenses, furnishing stationery, postage, and clerical assistance, and that Cavalry officers have been subjected to an assessment for that purpose, each and every item of which is false and without foundation in fact. An agent may offer to sell me a house, but upon examination I find the neighborhood bad, disapprove of the location, and do not purchase; the house is not mine.

Fourth. I am not acting and have never been acting with any committee, large or small, in influencing legislation. My personal letter, citations from which are printed on page 6114, in reply to numerous requests that I should advise with a committee of Cavalry officers, shows clearly that I advised against having a large committee formed here, and that it would be difficult for me to advise with such a committee. In the citations from my personal letter, which I presume are correct, it is shown that I disapproved of any assessment for a fund; that I had submitted my views to the War Department, as requested by the Secretary of War; that I anticipated being called before the committees during the hearings, and that I favored, and had so recommended to the Secretary of War, a complete reorganization of the Cavalry on the three-unit system.

As to the further statements concerning the testimony of Gen. Johnson, "first" and "second": These statements are embraced in quotation and appear to have been prepared by National Guard officers. I do not deem it wise to enter into any discussion as to their ability to influence legislation, although I am not unfamiliar with the course of their activities during the past 15 years, and do not think they tend to harmony in the public service.

Under "Second": The data, tables, and statistics furnished from day to day by the War Department to the military committee, as the chairman well knows, have been handled by Maj. Connor, Engineer Corps, and not by me, and I have observed no inclination on Maj. Connor's part to favor or injure any branch of the service, but he has worked diligently to facilitate the business before the committee.

If there had been any foundation for the charges made by the Senator from Missouri, the Army code of ethics would have compelled me to request that I be excused from assisting the Military Committee in preparing the technical details of the bill under consideration. None but a decidedly prejudiced and unfriendly hand could have deduced from any writing or statement made by me the conclusions presented by the Senator from Missouri.

As a matter of fact, the organization of the several branches of the line of the Army, as proposed in the bill now under consideration, accord in all essentials with the approved projects based upon the studies of the General Staff. There has been no attempt within my knowledge on the part of any branch of the line to influence the Committee on Military Affairs outside of the public hearings concerning its organization. The most difficult matter to adjust in committee was one having for its object the use of the detached list for the equalization of promotions to do justice to individuals of equal length of service and experience. My advice to the committee in this, as in other matters, was to have the War Department adjudicate the question and make recommendation in the premises and for the committee to follow the departmental recommendation. This manner of settlement of this important matter, involving the contentment and peace of mind of several thousand officers, was accepted by the Military Committees.

The United States Cavalry Association was formed some years after the close of the Civil War for the purpose of preserving the history of that branch of the service and to encourage a widely dispersed personnel in keeping touch with professional matters through a journal published quarterly. The association has been merely a name, since there could be no general meetings of so widely dispersed a personnel, the majority of members at this moment being in Mexico or on the border. I am certain the association has never actually taken part in any schemes having for an object influencing legislation for their arm, and the suggestions to do so have never been carried out. Observing, as they believed, a marked advantage in the presentation of the needs of staff corps and departments by the chiefs of these bureaus, the Cavalry, Field Artillery, and Infantry have desired similar representation by chiefs of their arms, and this has been repeatedly recommended.

The Cavalry especially had grown restless because of the adoption of an experimental organization of that arm about two years ago, which continues without legal status, although long since condemned by a very large majority of Cavalry officers. Groups of Cavalry officers at the scattered border stations, fearing that the interests of the arm might suffer during the present efforts to reorganize the Army, desired, in the absence of a chief of Cavalry, to have a committee of Cavalry officers from those on duty in Washington to assist in presenting the needs of that service, but no such committee was ever appointed.

Aspersion of military and naval men has always characterized Anglo-Saxon governing bodies. In our country it has included Washington, Jackson, Scott, Grant, McClellan, Thomas, and a host of men of lesser prominence. In England, not many months before the death of Lord Roberts, the question was put in Parliament whether he should not be deprived of his pension for asserting that the territorials or British militia were not equal to the country's defense, and that national service or universal training should be adopted.

I fully recognized when I published a book on The American Army last year, setting forth what appeared to me as incontrovertible facts to show that the State troops, with their existing environment, could not fulfill the measure of promise implied in the large appropriations made by Congress. My arguments were impersonal and based upon experience and probable future expectations.

Men who take part in the active affairs of the world expect opposition and criticism. All that an Army or Navy officer has a right to expect in the performance of any duty is that he shall not be publicly assailed without some inquiry beforehand as to the truth of charges.

Respectfully, yours,

WILLIAM HARDING CARTER,
Major General, United States Army.

Mr. WORKS. Mr. President, may I ask the parliamentary status? There is an amendment pending.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The amendment of the Senator from Missouri [Mr. REED] is pending.

Mr. WORKS. Mr. President, in addressing myself directly to the amendment now pending, I desire to inject into the debate at this point some old-time wisdom and patriotism bearing upon the respective sovereignties of the States and the Federal Government, particularly regarding the State militia.

I call attention to a veto message delivered by President Monroe on May 4, 1822, volume 2, Messages and Papers of the Presidents, 1817–1833, pages 153, 154. The bill that brought forth the veto involved the question of internal improvements. The message is a most able and exhaustive discussion of the rights and sovereignties of the States and the Federal Government, and is a very able State paper. It is a very long one, and I am going to read only a very short extract or two from it bearing upon this immediate question. In the course of his message President Monroe says:

> The next circumstance to be attended to is that the people composing this Union are the people of the several States, and not of the United States in the full sense of a consolidated government. The militia are the militia of the several States; lands are held under the laws of the States; descents, contracts, and all the concerns of private property, the administration of justice, and the whole criminal code, except in the cases of breaches of the laws of the United States made under and in conformity with the powers vested in Congress and of the laws of nations, are regulated by State laws. This enumeration shows the great extent of the powers of the State governments. The territory and the people form the basis on which all Governments are founded. The militia constitutes their effective force.

Again, he says:

> The militia is called into the service of the United States; the service is performed; the corps returns to the State to which it belongs; it is the militia of such State and not of the United States. Soldiers are required for the Army, who may be obtained by voluntary enlistment or by some other process founded in the principles of equality. In either case the citizen, after the tour of duty is performed, is restored to his former station in society, with his equal share in the common sovereignty of the Nation. In all these cases, which are the strongest which can be given, we see that the right of the General Government is nothing more than what it is called in the Constitution—a power to perform certain acts—and that the subjects on which it operates is a means only to that end; that it was both before and after that act under the protection and subject to the laws of the individual State within which it was.

As I have said, Mr. President, my objection to the attempt to federalize the National Guard is based upon the contention that is contained in this veto message, that under the Constitution and by virtue of its provisions the militia belong to the States and not to the National Government, and that any attempt to convert them into Federal forces is in direct violation of the Constitution.

I read this portion of the message in order to confirm my own views on that subject.

Mr. SHAFROTH. Mr. President, I desire to offer an amendment to the amendment of the Senator from Missouri. After the word "section," in the sixth line on the first page thereof, I move to insert "and so far as possible shall use Army posts not necessary for the use of the Army."

Mr. President, while I am on my feet——

Mr. REED. Will the Senator pardon me? I suggest the absence of a quorum. The Senator is going on with the discussion, and there are only about 12 Senators present.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. BECKHAM in the chair). The Secretary will call the roll.

The Secretary called the roll, and the following Senators answered to their names:

Beckham	Gronna	McLean	Sherman
Borah	Hardwick	Martine, N. J.	Smith, Ariz.
Broussard	Hollis	Nelson	Sterling
Burleigh	Hughes	Norris	Stone
Chamberlain	Husting	O'Gorman	Taggart
Chilton	Johnson, Me.	Oliver	Thomas
Clapp	Johnson, S. Dak.	Page	Tillman
Culberson	Jones	Poindexter	Underwood
Cummins	Kenyon	Pomerene	Wadsworth
Curtis	Kern	Ransdell	Walsh
Dillingham	Lane	Reed	Weeks
du Pont	Lewis	Shafroth	Williams
Gallinger	McCumber	Sheppard	Works

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair desires to state that the Senator from Tennessee [Mr. SHIELDS] is absent on account of illness in his family.

Fifty-one Senators have answered to their names. A quorum is present. The question is on the adoption of the amendment of the Senator from Colorado [Mr. SHAFROTH] to the amendment of the Senator from Missouri [Mr. REED].

Mr. SHAFROTH. Mr. President, the amendment which I have proposed utilizes the forts or military reservations that exist in the establishment of the schools that are proposed by the amendment offered by the Senator from Missouri. It seems to me it adds considerably to the merits of his amendment. The amendment which has been proposed by the Senator from Missouri provides for the establishment of not less than 6 nor more than 12 schools, and they are to be established, if the amendment which I propose is adopted, at any military station or fort. It provides that the number who attend these schools shall not exceed 500 at any one school. There has been some objection made that it might establish too large a school, but if you examine the figures with relation to the bill it seems to me to be clear that it would not be a large addition to the military or naval establishment of the country.

Take the maximum of, say, 12 schools. The number of men who could be sent to those schools would be 12 multiplied by 500, which would make 6,000. Six thousand is not a large addition in the way of a number to be added to the Army and Navy of the United States.

But, Mr. President, it is not that number that can be considered as proficient military men. These schools provide that there shall be four years' tuition, and consequently the number who can be put into the Army and Navy in the way of men who will command is only one-fourth of the 6,000; and we are adding only 1,500 a year instead of the number by some supposed to be 6,000.

Not only that, but we find that these schools are for the purpose of getting officers for the Army and Navy, and consequently you have got to divide that by two, and there will be an addition, on the supposition that these schools will be equally divided, of only 750 to the Navy and 750 to the Army.

Mr. SMITH of Arizona. Will the Senator permit me——

Mr. SHAFROTH. I yield.

Mr. SMITH of Arizona. At what cost is this small number to be added?

Mr. SHAFROTH. The cost will be very inconsiderable—not any more than we provide for a private in the Regular Army.

But I want to carry that a little further. Here is a course of four years and it is the experience both at West Point and the Naval Academy that it is not every man who enters who graduates. The fourth year is always the smallest year and you are apt to lose in four years about one-third the number who will not graduate. That reduces the number who can go out as officers to 500 for the Naval Academy and 500 for the Military Academy, and when you analyze this matter and see just how few the proposed amendment creates the number is very insignificant indeed.

Mr. President, I want to call attention to the cost, in answer to the question suggested by the Senator from Arizona [Mr. SMITH]. The cost can not be large. The amendment which I have proposed provides for the use of the military posts. They are already erected; they have ample space; they have barracks and quarters, and they have houses for the officers who are to be stationed there. Consequently, the amount of capital that is to be invested in them is almost inconsiderable, because we have a great many Army posts scattered all over the United States that are not used now to any appreciable extent, and yet the buildings are good, the quarters are good, and they are the very best places for schools of this kind. They always have large drill grounds, they have also great target-practice grounds, and they are there for the very purpose of making people skilled in Army matters. Inasmuch as we have the houses already there, inasmuch as we have the buildings and the barracks, it seems to me it is ideal in the way of economy that these people should be educated there for the purpose of becoming officers in the Army, or if not commissioned officers noncommissioned officers. When we take into consideration that the average cost of a soldier in the United States for a great many years is estimated at $1,000 a soldier, and the cost now estimated by the department is $1,200 a soldier, it is not going to cost any such amount to add these students to the number of persons who would be paid from the military funds of the Government. In other words, the equipment which we have is going to make it so that the addition of the number of men which we make, taking the very maximum—suppose that we establish the full schools—can not be more than at half the cost of a Regular soldier as estimated by the Department of War.

Mr. President, it seems to me, when we consider the number of men who will be used in these schools, the measure itself is very modest in asking only the number which has been proposed in the amendment, and when we consider that if the Military and Naval Establishments of the Government would conclude that only six are required or that only six would be best for the Government, it would reduce the amount which I have estimated here at one-half, and so in the end there would not be added to the Military Establishment by way of officers from these schools more than 250 to the Army or more than 250 to the Navy.

So, Mr. President, it seems to me the objection which is made to the bill that it would create too many officers or that it would cost too much when analyzed shows that it would do nothing of the kind. If there is one thing that the military authorities have been a unit upon, in their opinion, it has been the fact that we are short of officers, and that if a war should break out or be declared against the United States we would not have near enough officers to handle the Volunteers. That being the case, it seems to me the importance of a measure of this kind makes it almost imperative that something of this nature should be adopted. I believe that every university, every high school, in this land should receive instruction such as has been indicated in the bill. It is a preparedness provision that is of great value, it seems to me, in case we should have war. But, Mr. President, we want something more than that, and inasmuch as the cost is so inconsiderable, taking into consideration what we would accomplish by it, it seems to me that not only my amendment should be adopted but that the amendment offered by the Senator from Missouri should be adopted by the Senate.

Mr. WEEKS. Mr. President, this seems to be a very ambitious proposition, which has not been recommended by either the Secretary of War or the Secretary of the Navy, about which no testimony is available either before the Military or the Naval Committees.

I want to call very briefly to the attention of the Senate some of the features of this suggestion. First, we propose to admit to these schools young men from 14 to 20 years of age, to keep them there for four years, and then graduate them with at least the requirements that a grammar-school graduate shall have.

Mr. REED. Will the Senator allow a correction?

Mr. WEEKS. Yes.

Mr. REED. The proposition is that they shall have those qualifications when they enter, not when they graduate.

Mr. WEEKS. That may be the fact, but the bill does not so state.

Mr. REED. I call the Senator's attention to this——

Mr. WEEKS. At least I do not construe it that way; but I will go on to other features of the proposition.

There is no estimate of the expense to which this will put the Government. A West Point or Annapolis graduate is said to cost something like $20,000, about five times as much as it does to graduate from the average university in this country. If we were to assume that the extreme number possible under this bill would enter these schools—that is, 500 in 12 schools, or 6,000, costing $20,000 apiece—it would cose $120,000,000 to graduate 6,000 students from these schools, or $30,000,000 annually.

The graduates from West Point and Annapolis are paid $600 a year. Therefore, if you take from the $600 a year $50, which it is proposed to pay these students, you would have to take from this estimate about $13,000,000, based on what it costs the Government at West Point or Annapolis. So it would cost to graduate 6,000 in these schools $107,000,000.

Mr. SHAFROTH. Will the Senator yield?

Mr. WEEKS. Yes; if it is only a question. There are a good many things here that should be discussed, and I want most of my time.

Mr. SHAFROTH. Is not the estimate of the Government as to the Naval Academy $13,500 for the full four-year term instead of $20,000?

Mr. WEEKS. I think not.

Mr. SHAFROTH. I understand that is the estimate made by the——

Mr. WEEKS. Mr. President, the students at Annapolis and West Point are paid $2,400 during their course in actual salary.

Mr. SHAFROTH. I understand that they admit students there from foreign countries at the rate of $13,500 each on the ground that that is the amount of actual cost to the Government.

Mr. WEEKS. I do not know exactly what the basis is, but probably it does not include interest in the cost of the plant.

Mr. SHAFROTH. Will not the Senator recognize that the buildings which have been constructed in those places are extraordinarily fine buildings? I was in the House of Representatives when the buildings were——

Mr. WEEKS. Mr. President, I do not want the Senator to take all my time with his speech.

Mr. SHAFROTH. I just want to call attention to the fact that it was estimated that with the appropriations that were made there could be a $50,000 house constructed for each cadet in the academy at that time, dividing it by the number of cadets then in the academy. These forts are already constructed.

Mr. WEEKS. I think probably the Senator is right about the excessive cost of the buildings at West Point and Annapolis. I think they are very much too extravagant. I agree with him about that. The Senator himself in some remarks which he just made referred to the use of Army posts for this purpose. We are providing for a standing army substantially twice the size of the present standing army, and if we are going to give up the Army posts to any other purpose than for the housing of the additional troops which we are providing, then we have got to provide additional posts. I think the Senator will find that when we have the Army enlisted even to the minimum size as proposed in the bill which is pending it will require all the buildings that we have at all the Army posts to provide for them. So there will not be any available room for this proposed purpose.

Then the bill provides that these young men may be appointed to West Point. In fact it says they shall be appointed to West Point. We have a law on the statute books which provides for appointment to West Point and Annapolis in another way. What are you going to do with this conflict? Are you going to fill West Point and Annapolis from these schools and so, in fact, practically repeal the law which now provides for appointments to West Point, or are those appointments to take precedence over these, so that there will be no place in West Point for these young men?

I simply call these general facts to the attention of the Senate to indicate that I believe this legislation has not been given sufficient consideration. It is of much too large import to be considered in an amendment of this kind when no testimony has been submitted by anyone relating to its cost, its relations to other branches of the service, or even to the men whom it is proposed to take into the service in this way.

I hope the amendment will not be adopted.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on the adoption of the amendment proposed by the Senator from Colorado [Mr. SHAFROTH] to the amendment of the Senator from Missouri [Mr. REED].

Mr. REED. Mr. President, I see no objection to the amendment offered by the Senator from Colorado, but I want to say a word with regard to the extraordinary figures which have been offered by the Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. WEEKS].

A singular thing in this debate is that every Senator who believes in a big standing army, and nothing else, who wants to fasten an enormous permanent Military Establishment upon this country in the nature of a professional soldiery, is always extremely economical when it is proposed to do anything for any branch of the military force outside of the professionals; but when it comes to doing something that will tend to create a great standing army of professional soldiers, these gentlemen deal with millions and hundreds of millions with the ease and grace of a juggler tossing trifles in the air.

Mr. WEEKS. Mr. President, will the Senator from Missouri yield to me?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Missouri yield to the Senator from Massachusetts?

Mr. REED. I yield for a question.

Mr. WEEKS. I want to ask the Senator if he is referring to me in the general characterization which he has just made?

Mr. REED. I was merely referring to the general situation. If what I have said is regarded unpleasant, I will say that I could not say anything unpleasant about the Senator from Massachusetts if I tried. I like him too well.

Mr. WEEKS. I want to call the Senator's attention to the fact that I have always been in favor of a military reserve. I am in favor of the volunteer provision of the bill, and I am in favor of every feature of the present bill as it is submitted to the Senate, which includes the militia.

Mr. REED. Oh, yes; it includes the militia, or it did include the militia, with its head cut off; but we got its head put back on Saturday.

Mr. President, the figures as to the cost of these proposed schools, we are told, have not been estimated. How is the cost to be ascertained? By calling in some alleged expert from a department or by using our own common sense and experience in the conduct of other schools? It was stated here, and not denied, that the total tuition in what is probably the finest private military school in the United States, where everything is run on the highest possible plane, is $500 per year per student. It may be that students buy their uniforms in addition to that. The school of which I speak is not one for the poor; it is a school where well-to-do people send their boys. If it costs $500 a year, and we had a total of 6,000 students, which would be the maximum required for the entire 12 schools, then the cost annually would be $3,000,000.

What will you receive in return for that $3,000,000? You will get 6,000 reserves serving without pay for six years after they have graduated; you will turn out into our country every year 6,000 young men who, in case of a great war, are capable of taking command of companies or of serving as lieutenants; you will turn out 6,000 young men who are skilled in engineering; you will turn out 6,000 young men who have some technical knowledge with reference to handling the great machinery employed in modern war; you will turn out 6,000 young men who will, if called upon, come to the colors at a moment's notice. You will thus disseminate military knowledge throughout the country; you will be creating a citizen soldiery instead of a professional soldiery.

I want to impress upon every Member of the Senate, if I can, this thought: We are going to have in this country a considerable Military Establishment; public opinion is demanding it. It will either be a Military Establishment centralized here in Washington, professional in its character, permanent in its nature, or it will be a Military Establishment that exists among and sympathizes with the people of the land.

So far as I am concerned, I think the fathers wrote wisely when they divided our Military Establishment, broadly speaking, into two branches: The professional soldiery, always under the immediate command of the President of the United States, and a militia organization—and I use the term broadly—which was to be officered by men selected by the governors of the respective States. There is a reason for that. We do not know, in the revolutionary conditions that now exist in this world—and they are always likely to recur—but the day may come when there will be seated in the White House a man with great ambition, a man who has but little respect for the rights of the people. I believe, as did the fathers, that there is danger in the creation of a vast centralized military force in a free country.

I want it as far as the necessity of the case demands, but, as a counterbalance to it, I would like to see a Military Establishment the command of which is not primarily in the President of the United States. I want to see my country strong from a military standpoint; I want to see it invincible; I want to see it so that if all the nations of the world were to attack our shores we could drive them back into the ocean from which they came; but, sir, I want that military strength to be the strength of the people of the United States and not of a professional soldiery.

I know we can always trust the people; I do not know that we can always trust a great organization of men who make fighting their business. When I say that I do not reflect upon any army that exists to-day or upon any that has existed in the past; but I know that as times come and go, as the changing conditions of the world's affairs sweep by us, we must have in mind the fact that, after all, the only security for human liberty is in the strong arms and stout hearts of the people themselves, and that you can never safely permit great power to be centralized in the hands of any one man. If you place it there, a grave menace will exist.

So I hope we shall begin by building up our military strength in the schools of this country. This bill should have begun with the schools; this bill should have begun with that class of our citizens who have the time to give, who are already mobilized in institutions of learning, who have young and active minds. We should have begun with them. By the dissemination of knowledge through the schools we could, with the expenditure of one-half the money it is proposed to expend in other ways, have created such military knowledge in our land that, when the evil day shall strike, we will have coming from every hamlet and from every village men who will be the equals of the best trained soldiers of Europe; but unfortunately the authors of the bill did not begin that way. They began at the other end. So we talk about camps and about professional soldiers instead of talking, as we ought, about training the schoolboys of the land.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator's time has expired. The question is on the amendment of the Senator from Colorado [Mr. SHAFROTH] to the amendment of the Senator from Missouri [Mr. REED].

Mr. THOMAS. I understood that that amendment had been accepted.

Mr. REED. I said I saw no objection to it. I will, however, accept it.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. In the absence of objection, the amendment to the amendment is agreed to. The question recurs on the amendment of the Senator from Missouri as amended.

Mr. THOMAS. I call for the yeas and nays, Mr. President.

The yeas and nays were ordered, and the Secretary proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. SUTHERLAND (when his named was called). I inquire whether the Senator from Arkansas [Mr. CLARKE] has voted?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. He has not voted.

Mr. SUTHERLAND. I have a pair with that Senator, and therefore withhold my vote.

Mr. THOMAS (when his name was called). I have a general pair with the senior Senator from North Dakota [Mr. MCCUMBER]. I transfer that pair to the senior Senator from Nevada [Mr. NEWLANDS] and vote "nay."

Mr. TILLMAN (when his name was called). I transfer my pair with the Senator from West Virginia [Mr. GOFF] to the Senator from Nebraska [Mr. HITCHCOCK] and vote "nay."

Mr. UNDERWOOD (when his name was called). I have a general pair with the junior Senator from Ohio [Mr. HARDING]. I transfer that pair to the junior Senator from Tennessee [Mr. SHIELDS] and vote "nay."

Mr. WALSH (when his name was called). I have a pair with the Senator from Rhode Island [Mr. LIPPITT]. I transfer that pair to the Senator from Nevada [Mr. PITTMAN] and vote "nay."

Mr. WEEKS (when his name was called). I have a general pair with the senior Senator from Kentucky [Mr. JAMES]. I transfer that pair to the junior Senator from Rhode Island [Mr. COLT] and vote "nay."

Mr. WILLIAMS (when his name was called). Repeating the explanation made upon the previous roll call as to my pair and its transfer, I vote "nay."

The roll call was concluded.

Mr. CHILTON. I make the same transfer of my pair which I previously made to the Senator from Delaware [Mr. SAULSBURY] and vote "yea."

Mr. JOHNSON of Maine. I inquire if the junior Senator from North Dakota [Mr. GRONNA] has voted?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. He has not.

Mr. JOHNSON of Maine. I have a general pair with that Senator, which I will transfer to the junior Senator from California [Mr. PHELAN] and vote "yea."

Mr. CLARK of Wyoming. I wish to inquire if the senior Senator from Missouri [Mr. STONE] has voted?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. He has not.

Mr. CLARK of Wyoming. I have a general pair with that Senator, and therefore withhold my vote.

Mr. SUTHERLAND. I transfer my pair with the Senator from Arkansas [Mr. CLARKE] to the Senator from New Mexico [Mr. CATRON] and vote. I vote "nay."

Mr. MCLEAN. I inquire if the senior Senator from Montana [Mr. MYERS] has voted?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. He has not.

Mr. MCLEAN. I am paired with that Senator, and in his absence I withhold my vote.

Mr. WALSH (after having voted in the negative). The Senator from Nevada [Mr. PITTMAN], to whom I made a transfer of my pair, having appeared and voted, I transfer my pair to the Senator from Alabama [Mr. BANKHEAD] and will allow my vote to stand.

Mr. CURTIS. Mr. President, I am requested to announce the following pairs:

The Senator from Michigan [Mr. TOWNSEND] with the Senator from Florida [Mr. BRYAN]; and

The Senator from Idaho [Mr. BRADY] with the Senator from Florida [Mr. FLETCHER].

The result was announced—yeas 31, nays 37, as follows:

YEAS—31.

Ashurst	Husting	Lee, Md.	Shafroth
Borah	Johnson, Me.	Martin, Va.	Sheppard
Chilton	Johnson, S. Dak.	Martine, N. J.	Smith, Ga.
Clapp	Jones	Overman	Smith, S. C.
Cummins	Kenyon	Owen	Swanson
Gore	Kern	Pittman	Taggart
Hardwick	La Follette	Ransdell	Thompson
Hollis	Lane	Reed

NAYS—37.

Beckham	Culberson	Hughes	Oliver
Brandegee	Curtis	Lodge	Page
Broussard	Dillingham	McCumber	Poindexter
Burleigh	du Pont	Nelson	Pomerene
Chamberlain	Gallinger	Norris	Robinson

Sherman	Smoot	Underwood	Williams
Simmons	Sterling	Wadsworth	Works
Smith, Ariz.	Sutherland	Walsh
Smith, Md.	Thomas	Warren
Smith, Mich.	Tillman	Weeks

NOT VOTING—28.

Bankhead	Fall	Lea, Tenn.	Penrose

Catron	Gronna	McLean	Shields
Clark, Wyo.	Harding	Myers	Stone
Clarke, Ark.	Hitchcock	Newlands	Townsend
Colt	James	O'Gorman	Vardaman

So Mr. REED'S amendment as amended was rejected.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. Mr. President, I offer an amendment to the bill, on page 153, line 1, to insert, after the word "including," the words "State universities and," so that it will read:

Including State universities and those State institutions that are required to provide instruction in military tactics.

To make that amendment conform to the general text I desire also to amend, on page 153, lines 14 to 19, by striking out the words after the word "Provided," in line 14, down to and including the word "students," in line 19, and inserting what I send to the desk, which is a copy of the House bill.

I will state that this is similar to an amendment of the Senator from Ohio [Mr. POMERENE] and that the amendment which I offer meets with his approval, and I understand the chairman of the committee is willing to accept the amendment, the purpose of which is merely to allow State universities to be embraced within this provision of the bill as well as other colleges. I am not sure that the language is not now broad enough to include them, but some of the presidents of State universities, one from my State in particular, have doubt about it, and the amendment is designed merely to give them a chance to come under the provisions of the bill if there is any doubt about it.

Mr. POMERENE. Mr. President, if I may ask the Senator a question, I understand that his amendment in no respect changes the provision of the House bill for which section 42 is a substitute?

Mr. UNDERWOOD. It makes the section conform to the language of the House bill.

Mr. POMERENE. I think the amendment should be accepted.

Mr. CHAMBERLAIN. Mr. President, I have no objection to the amendment. With the Senator from Alabama, I agree that the language is probably broad enough now to include State universities; but it will do no harm to make the insertions the Senator from Alabama has proposed.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment will be stated.

The SECRETARY. On page 153, line 1, after the word "including," it is proposed to insert "State universities and," so as to read, "study for a degree, including State universities, and those State institutions that are required to provide instruction in military tactics"; and on page 153, after the word "Provided," in line 14, to strike out:

That no such unit shall be established or maintained at any such institution at which an officer of the Army is not detailed as professor of military science and tactics or at any such institution which does not maintain under military instruction at least 100 physically fit male students.

And insert:

That before such unit shall be established or maintained at any such institution an officer of the Army shall have been detailed as professor of military science and tactics or such institution shall maintain under military instruction at least 100 physically fit male students.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment of the Senator from Alabama to the substitute reported by the committee.

The amendment to the amendment was agreed to.

Mr. OLIVER and Mr. HUGHES addressed the Chair.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Pennsylvania.

Mr. OLIVER. Mr. President, I offer the amendment which I send to the desk.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment will be stated.

The SECRETARY. On page 121, line 24, after the word "appoint," it is proposed to insert the words "and commission," so as to read:

The President is authorized to appoint and commission——

Mr. CHAMBERLAIN. Mr. President, the committee has authorized me to accept that amendment.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment of the Senator from Pennsylvania to the substitute reported by the committee.

Mr. HUGHES. Mr. President, I ask that the amendment be again stated.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Secretary will again state the amendment.

The SECRETARY. On page 121, line 24, after the word "appoint," it is proposed to insert the words "and commission," so as to read:

The President is authorized to appoint and commission, by and with the advice and consent of the Senate, veterinarians at the rate of two for each regiment——

Mr. HUGHES. I will say that I myself was waiting for an opportunity to offer that amendment.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, the amendment to the amendment is agreed to.

Mr. HUGHES. To follow that amendment, I move to insert the word "rank," on page 122, line 3, between word "the" and the word "pay," so as to read:

Veterinarians thus appointed shall have the rank, pay, and allowances of second lieutenants.

To complete the amendment and make the text uniform, I move also the insertion of the word "rank" in the corresponding places in line 6, line 10, line 13, and line 14, so as to make the language throughout the section read that veterinarians "shall have the rank, pay, and allowances," and so forth. This makes the amendment conform to other amendments of a similar character which have been offered.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment will be stated.

The SECRETARY. On page 122, line 3, before the word "pay," it is proposed to insert the word "rank," so as to read "rank, pay, and allowances"; also, in line 6, before the word "pay," to insert the word "rank"; in line 10, before the word "pay," to insert the word "rank"; in line 13, before the word "pay," to insert the word "rank"; and in line 14, before the word "pay," to insert the word "rank."

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on the amendment offered by the Senator from New Jersey to the substitute reported by the committee.

Mr. CHAMBERLAIN. Mr. President, I have not been authorized by the committee to accept that amendment, and do not accept it; yet I have no doubt that the Senate will give these gentlemen rank as second lieutenants. It has been the disposition of the Senate to give the civilian forces in the Army commissioned rank; and I submit the matter to the Senate without argument.

Mr. HUGHES. Mr. President, I do not care to submit the matter to the Senate without argument, because there are many good arguments that could be made on this subject from my standpoint. I wish the Senate to know before it votes upon this question that at the present time the United States Army have not seen fit to treat veterinarians as though they were entitled to the average consideration that one gentleman in this country accords to another. There is no reason for this attitude. Whatever reasons may have existed in the past for the treatment accorded to veterinary surgeons by the United States Government, no such reasons exist now; and I want the Senate to know that every civilized nation in the world, and also some of the uncivilized nations, according to my information, have accorded these gentlemen the status which I am trying to have the Senate accord them by the adoption of the amendment I have proposed.

I wish to give Senators some idea of the disabilities under which veterinary surgeons now labor in attempting to perform the duties assigned them. The official status of the veterinarian is as follows:

He has the pay and allowances of a second lieutenant, mounted, but has not the rank of a lieutenant. He has no promotion and throughout his service is carried on the returns below the youngest lieutenant. He can retire on disability or at the age of 64 years. He is not a responsible officer, and a commissioned officer must be held responsible for his professional instruments, supplies, and so forth. At posts without a veterinary hospital the medicines are supplied to the troops and not to the veterinarian. He can not sign a certificate, but must swear to an affidavit, as do enlisted men. A certificate of health for public horses for interstate transportation is not accepted by State authorities from him because he is not an officer. He is rated as a noncombatant, yet goes to the front with the troops, but is not allowed to wear a saber, the only protective arm internationally authorized for noncombatants. The youngest lieutenant entering the Army can rank him out of his quarters, although he may have many years of service and a family. His prescribed service uniform resembles that of an officer, but his dress uniform is shorn of the shoulder straps, so that he looks similar to a private of the band of his regiment. He is forbidden to wear the insignia "U. S." as collar ornaments, although he is by law a part of a regiment of Cavalry or Field Artillery, two distinctly fighting arms. These are a few of the inconsistencies and discriminations that bitterly offend the feelings of the young Army veterinarian and insult his sense of manliness.

The veterinary schools of the United States, which for the year 1917 have all prescribed a four years' course, advise their graduates not to attempt to enter the United States Army service, because that is the only field of activity where they are not accorded equal treatment with other professional men.

It has been stated that there is a tendency to bestow rank on men who are civilians and men who constitute no part of the fighting forces. Yet in the present war the Austro-German forces have lost by death 247 veterinary officers. The German Army is not a social organization; and it has clothed these men with rank and authority higher than that sought to be bestowed under this amendment. They rank from colonel, lieutenant colonel, and major on down to second lieutenants. The British Army has done the same thing, as has also the French Army. The Australian and Canadian Armies—in fact, every one of the armies fighting now on the battle fields of Europe—have recognized the important service that can be, and ought to be, discharged by men doing this work.

I want to call your attention to the personnel of the men who now constitute the veterinarian force of the United States Army, so that there will be no hesitation in the mind of any Senator as to the qualifications of the men now engaged in this work.

One of our veterinarians is a graduate of the Royal College of Veterinary Surgeons at London, another of the Royal Veterinary Academy at Berlin, one of the McGill University, one of the Harvard University, five are graduates of Cornell University, five of the University of Pennsylvania, four of the American Veterinary College, University of the City of New York, two of the Ohio State University, four of the veterinary department of the Iowa State Agricultural College, five of the Ontario Veterinary College, four of the Chicago Veterinary College, one of the Kansas City Veterinary College, and two of the San Francisco Veterinary College. This accounts for 36 graduates, and there are 6 vacancies. The vacancies exist, I presume, because of the reluctance of men to enter a service where the moment they don the uniform of Uncle Sam they are classified in a way that they have never theretofore been classified either at their schools or in private life.

Before I close and submit this matter to the Senate, I desire to read a marginal note that was placed by the Kaiser on the bill reorganizing the German veterinary service, which sets out much better than I can do the regard in which these men are held in the countries where fighting is a profession:

NOTE.—Upon the veterinary officer devolve high moral, physical, and technical demands in peace and war. Only such young men are to be selected for the military veterinary career who possess a high mind, tact, mental versatility, physical activity, and pride in their profession.

It seems to me, under the circumstances, that it is as little as we can do at this time, when we are attempting to prepare an Army and arrange legislation in such a way that we will have an Army as efficient and as capable as any army in the world, to give this belated recognition to these men. Of course up to the time of the outbreak of the European war it was said and believed that the day of the cavalry as an arm of the military service was at an end, and yet one of the first manifestations that we saw of the serious nature of the war in Europe was the presence here of European officers engaged in a frantic effort to obtain cavalry horses. These men were not noncommissioned officers or private soldiers. These men were commissioned officers of high rank, veterinarians, who understood their business. What a situation their respective governments would have been in had they been unable to send men of that character to this country to purchase the horses needed by their respective governments.

Mr. President, I am willing to leave this matter to the good sense of the Senate of the United States, relying upon the showing that is made by these men and the showing they have made in the past; relying also upon the fact that the House in its bill accorded them the rank and the privilege that they asked, and the further fact that this body itself on other occasions has acted in a manner favorable to them, but for one reason or another, owing to the exercise of one influence or another, it has never been possible to have the two bodies act finally during any one Congress. In order that this tardy justice may be done these men, I ask that this amendment be adopted.

Mr. KERN. Mr. President, this question was before the Senate at the last session as an independent proposition. It was reported favorably by the Committee on Military Affairs. It failed because of the confusion that existed in the last hours of the session.

I only desire to quote now what was said by the chairman of the Military Affairs Committee on that subject on that occasion. He said:

I want to say to the Senate that Gen. Wotherspoon, representing the War Department, appeared before the Senate committee which had this bill in charge and insistently urged that the bill ought to pass. Our Government is the only one of the civilized Governments that has not veterinarians commissioned and given a standing in the Army that attracts to the service the very best men of their profession.

If the measure was a proper one then, in time of peace, it seems to me that it is very much more important now, in view of the large increase in the Army that is being proposed.

I do not think there ought to be any question about the adoption of the amendment.

Mr. CUMMINS. Mr. President, in addition to the reasons so well given by the Senator from New Jersey [Mr. HUGHES] in favor of his amendment, it will not be forgotten that the veterinary surgeon is now a member of a skilled and scientific profession. The scope of his learning is hardly less than the learning of the ordinary surgeon. The course of instruction required at all schools is now almost equal, if not entirely equal, to the time required for graduation into other learned professions. Moreover, the veterinary surgeon in the Army is just as well qualified to command troops as are the members of the other medical branch of the Army, and in some armies now performing great feats in arms the veterinary surgeons have commanded troops and are commanding them now.

There is one reason, however, which to me is conclusive. In view of the great advance in the profession and the increase in the remuneration of the profession in private life, I do not believe that the best of veterinary surgeons can be commanded without awarding them the rank which belongs to scientific and skillful men. Our Army needs the very best of this profession. Human nature is so constituted that it will accept honor as a part of the inducement which leads us all into a chosen vocation. The rank given to officers in our Army is absolutely necessary to secure that standard of ability and competency which every such organization must have.

In view of the fact that engineers have rank, in view of the fact that the other medical practitioners have rank, and in view of the fact that dental surgeons have rank, it seems to me illogical, almost unthinkable, that the members of this profession shall not be accorded equal honor.

This bill limits the rank to that of major. In the French Army a member of this profession may, under certain circumstances, have the rank of general, as I am informed. The only objection to the amendment is that it does not provide for a higher rank, under some circumstances, than that of major; but I have no disposition to enlarge the scope of the amendment in that respect.

I very earnestly hope that the amendment offered will prevail.

Mr. LODGE. Mr. President, the other day, when the amendment in regard to giving rank to the dental surgeons was before the Senate, I said that in past years I had opposed staff rank—that is, rank to what are called the staff departments—as a general proposition. Congress, however, has decided on an opposite policy. It has given rank to paymasters, to chaplains, to civil engineers in the Navy, to the Medical Corps, to the chaplains, and to the dental surgeons. It seems to me impossible to deny it to one particular corps, especially where that corps is trained particularly for that work.

The modern veterinarian is very different from the farrier or blacksmith to whom was assigned the care of horses in Cavalry regiments. He is a highly educated man. As the Senator from Iowa [Mr. CUMMINS] has pointed out, he has received a thorough scientific education. I think we shall not go wrong in following the example of the other great armies of the world. As has been already pointed out, they have rank in all the great armies of Europe. In the English Army the rank is as high as general, and they are recognized as an extremely important part of the service. They have to be with the regiments. They are practically officers of cavalry, educated and trained for a particular purpose, and upon them rests a great weight of responsibility.

Two hundred and sixty-one veterinarians have been killed, and 260 wounded, and 66 have received the iron cross and various service medals in the German and Austrian Armies alone. They have no Red Cross protection, and that shows that they are in active service in the field just as much as a line officer. It seems to me there can be no logical ground for giving rank to all the other specially trained corps in the Army and refusing it to the veterinarians.

For that reason it seems to me that the amendment proposed by the Senator from New Jersey ought to be adopted.

Mr. OLIVER. Mr. President, I offered the amendment which has just been adopted at the instance of quite a number of gentlemen of this profession in my own State. I offered it in that shape because it was all they asked me to do; but since rank has been given to other professions, I do not see why it should not be given just as well to the veterinarians. I hope the amendment presented by the Senator from New Jersey will be adopted.

Mr. LODGE. Mr. President, let me ask the Senator a question before he takes his seat, if I may.

Mr. OLIVER. Certainly.

Mr. LODGE. As I understand, the Senator's amendment inserts the word "commission."

Mr. OLIVER. "Commission"; yes.

Mr. LODGE. But that has been held by the Judge Advocate General not to carry rank.

Mr. OLIVER. I think that when they requested me to offer the amendment they were under the impression that it did carry rank.

Mr. LODGE. It has been held by the Judge Advocate General that it does not.

Mr. OLIVER. In fact, I was not aware at the time that it did not carry rank, and I hope this amendment will prevail.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is on agreeing to the amendment offered by the Senator from New Jersey [Mr. HUGHES] to the amendment of the committee.

The amendment to the amendment was agreed to.

Mr. WORKS. Mr. President, I offer the amendment which I send to the desk.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The amendment to the amendment will be stated.

The SECRETARY. On page 105, line 12, after the word "States," the first word in the line, it is proposed to insert "the mobile land force," so that it will read:

The National Guard while in the service of the United States, the mobile land force, and such other land forces as Congress may from time to time authorize.

Mr. WORKS. There are two amendments, Mr. President, which should be considered together.

The SECRETARY. Also, on page 161, after line 9, it is proposed to insert the following:

SEC. 57. Mobile land force: That there is hereby created and established on the Pacific coast as a part of the public service a body of men to be known and designated as the mobile land force and military reserve for national defense, to be composed of 200,000 men to be chosen and enlisted as hereinafter provided, which force may be increased from time to time as Congress may provide.

SEC. 58. That such force shall consist of men capable and efficient and fitted to take lands furnished for their use as herein provided for, and to perform manual labor in the forestry and reclamation, or other public works, and military service when called upon to do so. They shall be enlisted for the service for a term of five years under rules and regulations to be prepared by the Secretary of the Interior, and may be reenlisted, and while engaged in the civil service, as hereinafter provided, shall be a branch of the Interior Department and under its supervision and control.

SEC. 59. That when such force is called upon, as hereinafter provided, to undergo military training or service, it shall be under the supervision and control of the War Department, under rules and regulations to be provided by the Secretary of War.

SEC. 60. That each of the members of such force shall, by the Secretary of the Interior, be provided with a garden farm of not more than 5 acres of land in the States of California, Oregon, Washington, Nevada, Arizona, and other Western States where lands suitable for cultivation can be had, provided with water for domestic use and irrigation when needed, at a cost in each case of not exceeding $2,000, upon which such member shall be required to make a home for himself and family and cultivate the same when not engaged for the Government, and for which he shall be required to a pay a reasonable monthly rental not exceeding 4 per cent of the cost of the same, title thereto to be retained by the Government. The Secretary of the Interior is authorized to devote any of the lands owned by the Government, suitable for the purpose, to settlement by such members, to acquire by condemnation or purchase such other lands in said States as may be necessary to carry out the purposes of this act, and to acquire or construct any water rights and water systems necessary to supply such lands with water for domestic use and irrigation: Provided, That such garden farms shall be so located as to establish not less than an entire regiment of such force in one community on adjacent homes.

SEC. 61. That as a constructive force the Secretary of the Interior shall, except for such time as they are required to render military service as hereinafter provided for, if they so desire, employ the members of such force wherever he may direct in the forestry, reclamation, and other public works within the States above mentioned, and shall construct storage and service reservoirs for the protection of lands from overflow, for the drainage of submerged lands, the irrigation of arid or semiarid lands needing irrgiation in order to be successfully cultivated, and generally for the protection, reclamation, and cultivation of lands and works necessary for the improvement of the rivers and harbors of the country and such other public works as the said Secretary shall elect for which Congress may make appropriations.

SEC. 62. That members of said force while thus employed in the public service as constructive workers shall be paid a reasonable compensation to be fixed by the Secretary of the Interior, and they shall be employed to the exclusion of all other persons whenever practicable.

SEC. 63. That for one month of each year, or two months in any one year, if the Secretary of the Interior and the Secretary of War shall mutually so determine, the said force shall undergo such military training as may be provided for by the Secretary of War, under rules and regulations prescribed by him, at such place or places as he may direct, and he shall provide all necessary officers and equipment for such training.

SEC. 64. That such force shall constitute a reserve military force and be subject to military service whenever called upon by the Secretary of War.

SEC. 65. That whenever the members of such force shall be under military training, preliminary or annual, or in actual military service in the event of war or anticipation thereof, they shall constitute a part of the United States Army and shall be exclusively under the direction and control of the War Department, in all respects the same as any part of the Regular Standing Army of the United States. The officers of said reserve shall be appointed and have rank the same as officers in the regular standing army.

Mr. WORKS. Mr. President, early in the session I introduced a bill in substance the same as the amendment I now offer, except that the amendment confines this so-called industrial force to the Pacific coast and reduces the number of men to 100,000. The principal object of the bill is to provide for an industrial force and at the same time provide them homes on the Government lands.

If this amendment should become a law, it would furnish homes for 100,000 families upon lands of the Government. Instead of housing the men in barracks provided by the Government and paying them salaries, it is provided that they shall be furnished with 5 acres of land, with a home upon it, for which they shall pay rent at not more than 4 per cent of the expense of constructing the building, and that the Government shall supply them with water. When they are not engaged in military service they are required to meet the call of the Secretary of the Interior to be used upon any works of the Government for that purpose. The intention of it is, first, to provide homes for suitable men that may be selected, and, second, to furnish them employment that will enable them to make a living outside of the land; but one man can make a living for a family upon 5 acres of land upon the Pacific coast, selected as the Government would desire to select this land, even if he were otherwise out of employment, so he would be independent.

In this way the Government will be provided with 100,000 seasoned, trained men, to be called into the service at any time, with no expense to the Government except the mere providing of the land and construction of the buildings, the title to which is retained in the Government.

Mr. President, the Pacific coast is in a very peculiar condition respecting this matter of national defense. The Pacific Coast States are practically isolated from other parts of the country. The bill that is now under consideration will not furnish anything like an adequate number of men to defend the Pacific coast. It may within an hour, if there should happen to be enemies in that vicinity, be entirely cut off from transportation from any other part of the country by destroying the tunnels through which the railroads pass. We are left practically unprotected and undefended by the provisions of the bill that is now pending. This is simply an effort to better the conditions generally respecting the taking up of the Government lands and at the same time to supply men who can be used for military purposes if needed.

It may, to some Senators, seem a sort of dream, something that is impossible of attainment, but I want to say to the Senators that there are two valleys in the State of California alone and in two counties that will furnish the homes provided for by this amendment to the whole 100,000 soldiers that are provided for—rich valleys, as the Senator from Michigan [Mr. SMITH] suggests. One of them is a valley that can be provided with water with only a moderate expenditure of money. The water is already stored above it in reservoirs constructed by a private corporation and ready to be taken down and distributed upon the lands. There are 500,000 acres of land in that valley that is now practically a desert that would be as rich soil as can be found anywhere in this country with water upon it. These men could be supplied with homes there and at the same time be made available for military service if that should be desired.

This may seem to be going a long way, Mr. President. It is not my idea; it is the idea of a good many people who have investigated and studied this question. I want, in connection with my remarks, to have printed in the RECORD an editorial that appeared in the Detroit Times of Monday, April 3, 1916.

The VICE PRESIDENT. In the absence of objection, that may be done.

The matter referred to is as follows:

[From the Detroit Times, Monday, Apr. 3, 1916.]

THE LESSON OF THE FLOODS.

[By Dr. Frank Crane.]

In the early days of 1916 various parts of the United States were devastated by the forces of nature. There was havoc from floods on the Pacific coast and in the Mississippi Valley.

South of Memphis was the worst inundation in history.

Of 3,000 population of Clarendon, Ark., only 700 remained. They were marooned in lofts, a prey to hunger and typhoid fever.

In Oregon many lowlands were under water and serious damage done.

Throughout southern California bridges were washed away, dams burst, the inhabitants of valleys swept to ruin with their cattle and other possessions, railway service interrupted, highways rendered impassable by landslides, and so on.

All this was no man's fault. It was a public calamity. And the only way to prevent its recurrence is by public action.

All over the country are other losses and bad conditions caused by nature, calling for organized, governmental cure.

There are rivers to be made safe, harbors to deepen and widen. And the only way we go at this is by the malodorous pork-barrel process, which is as inadequate as it is infamous.

We have roads to build, national highways for the swift movement of troops in case of war. The Lincoln Highway is at present only two streaks of rut most of the way. It ought to be a solid cement road from the Atlantic to the Pacific.

The Dixie Highway is so far mostly on paper. The curse of the land is bad roads.

Millions of acres of desert might be irrigated and instead of sand and sagebrush produce crops rivaling ancient Egypt.

Our magnificent endowment of forest is being lavishly wasted.

All these represent tasks that can be adequately undertaken by the Government alone. No private enterprise is big enough.

Let Congress organize an army to carry on this work and it will find the golden solution to the preparedness problem.

By fighting nature and subduing her we best prepare ourselves for defense against possible human enemies.

Every proposal now before Congress is woefully unsatisfactory. Wilson and Garrison have split over the Army question. Congress is already split 20 ways.

Here is the real way out. Organize a standard army of a million to build up the country, and it will be ever ready for the country's defense.

It is the new idea for an army.

It is the American idea.

It will harmonize pacifist and militarist.

It will be the most unique, efficient, helpful, and irresistible army of all history.

It will insure peace, provoke no rival nation to war, make America respected abroad, and solve the hitherto unsolvable problem of how to have an army sufficient for defense without the perils of militarism.

Mr. WORKS. Mr. President, there is another view to be taken of this amendment. I think those of us who have investigated and studied the Reclamation Service are feeling that it is not going to accomplish the results that were originally intended. To a large extent it is breaking down, and one reason for it is—and I think the prime reason—that no provision is made to help the entrymen who take up the lands, and most of them have been absolutely unable to pay the amount that it is necessary to pay in order to construct the reservoirs and distributing systems. This would be a supplement to the Reclamation Service. It would do just exactly what the Reclamation Service fails to do, namely, help the individual entryman to take up his land and cultivate it, and thereby make it profitable.

In order to show how the Reclamation Service is working and what difficulties are in the way of carrying out the service, I want to include in my remarks a part of a report that was made by what is known as the review board, created by the Secretary of the Interior, who is doing everything he possibly can to redeem the Reclamation Service and make it a success. Amongst other things, he has appointed this review board, which is studying each one of the projects now in existence and suggesting any defects that may be found in them and any difficulties that arise, in order that they may be met by proper legislation and the Reclamation Service assisted in that way. This single case will indicate what the difficulties are and what is needed for the purpose of making the Reclamation Service a success.

The matter referred to is as follows:

[Extract from Central Cost Review Board.]

TRUCKEE-CARSON PROJECT.

LAND SETTLEMENT.

The repayment of the $9,000,000 expended on this project will depend on the rapidity and success of settlement of something over 150,000 acres of land now unpeopled and unimproved. A portion is in private ownership, being, it is understood, a part of the Central Pacific Railroad land grant. The remainder is public land. Even if the land were settled now and the payments of projects costs were assured, the Government would lose the interest on its investment during the period of deferred payments. This at 4 per cent simple interest would amount to $3,600,000. But if settlement is delayed, or if settlers are unable to meet their obligations, there may be a loss of large part of the principal as well.

The home seekers who apply for this land, if present policies are unchanged, will be confronted by the following conditions:

Aside from the main irrigation channels and the unformed dirt roads, they will find that everything required to transform a desert into productive farms remains to be done. The land must be cleared of brush, the farm unit must be fenced, a house for the family and stable for the work animals must be built, and provision made for a water supply for household use. Not being familiar with local conditions, they will not be able to buy to advantage, and they will be under pressure to buy quickly. Many will be victimized with bad horses and poor cows. It was stated at the visit to the project in July last that settlers had to pay $27 a thousand feet for lumber that was being sold to the Reclamation Service for $11 a thousand feet.

If settlement should be rapid, they would be unable to procure cows or horses locally. Many owned by settlers now on the project have been shipped from Utah and California. This adds greatly to the cost of development. Cows bought in Utah for $65 cost the settlers over $100 each.

Until a house is built the settler's family has either to live in a tent or board in town. Illness often results, while heavy living expenses, delay in beginning productive employment contribute to make all concerned homesick and discouraged. Often the preparatory work prevents planting a crop the first season, and the settler finds his meager capital swallowed up in living expenses before he can obtain any return from the land. Before he can grow a crop the land must be prepared for irrigation. To do this so that water will flow evenly over the surface requires knack and experience. Lacking these, money and time may be wasted, and the final result so unsatisfactory that the work will have to be done over again. Few settlers can afford to buy the special equipment for leveling land cheaply which is not needed afterwards, especially settlers on small farm units; hence the actual cost is increased and completion delayed.

PREPARATION OF LAND FOR IRRIGATION.

The preparation of land for irrigation on this project is a matter of great importance, because much of it is uneven, requiring a large expenditure to enable it to be watered properly. In places the wind has heaped the sand and dust in mounds from 2 to 6 feet high. These will have to be leveled down, and settlers testified to a member of this board who visited the project in July last that it had cost $100 an acre to level some land of this character. To smooth off the inequalities, prepare the checks and borders, and build the small distributory ditches on the 150,000 acres of land awaiting settlement will cost somewhere between six and seven million dollars, and that amount must be spent before crops can be grown.

To leave this costly preparatory work to be done by the settler, who lacks team strength, implements, and practical skill, involves a ruinous waste of money and time. Nothing could be more inefficient. Careful considerations should, we believe, be given to whether the leveling of this land and making it ready for the application of water is not as essential a part of reclamation as the building of the canals and reservoirs.

On much of the land the acreage cost of preparing the land will be greater than building the irrigation works, and the use of a proper equipment, directed by practical knowledge and skill, would be just as advantageous as it has been to have the irrigation works carried out under proper engineering guidance.

We believe the most effective way to prepare the land for irrigation would be to employ experienced contractors, who would either use traction engines and large scrapers, as is done by the owners of large estates in California, or through the use of proper equipment operated by teams.

ERECTION OF HOUSES.

The average area of farm units will be somewhere between 40 and 80 acres. If we assume 60 acres, it will require 2,500 houses to shelter the settlers. If each of these settlers is left to buy his building material at retail, make his own design for the house, and hire carpenters as they can be secured, the following results will inevitably follow:

The cost of material will be 50 per cent above what will be required if these houses are built under some central direction, where the material is bought at wholesale for cash.

There will be many freak houses, lacking durability and comfort and detracting from the appearance and neighborhood pride of settlers in the district.

The time of settlers, which ought to be taken up with farm work, will be given over to bargaining for material, hunting for a builder, and doing things that a properly organized central office could attend to more effectively at one-tenth the cost. Twenty-five hundred houses, with stable for work animals and provision for a household supply, will cost $4,000,000, if any attention is given to durability and comfort. A gain of 50 per cent in value to settlers will result from having this done under competent direction, according to a systematic plan.

SOIL MAP.

A soil map showing the alkali content of the land on each 40-acre unit would be a useful guide to settlers and an aid to the Government in determining the future prospects of this project. Such a map would show where settlement will be free from danger from alkali and where special provision by drainage must be made to overcome this danger.

It is realized that the preparation of a reliable map would involve considerable expense, because the alkali content varies greatly. Some units are practically free, while others are heavily charged. White alkali can be washed out if adequate drainage is provided, but black alkali tends to coagulate and compact the soil, obstructing the passage of water through it, making leaching difficult. It can be improved by chemical treatment, but experiments made show that this is too costly to be undertaken by beginners. They should therefore be cautioned about risking their money, labor, and time on units carrying high percentages of alkali until the risks of cultivation are better understood and commercially feasible plans of reclamation have been devised.

DRAINAGE.

The lands to be irrigated are mainly low lying and flat, the land having been part of an old lake bed. Natural drainage is poor and artificial drainage difficult. The need for drainage is urgent, however, over most of the land that has been irrigated a few years, and it is believed that the same result will follow irrigation of unentered land. The local board reports that $275,020 has been spent on lands already irrigated and that it will cost $390,000 more to complete their drainage. This cost can not be imposed without consent of the water users. This board also reports an estimate of $391,500 for drainage works needed to irrigate 43,500 acres, or $9 an acre. This was to provide a system of deep open drains and would leave the minor drains required to be built by the settlers. This estimate of $9 an acre has not been accepted by settlers. In part because they think the cost too great and in part because some of them believe that the Government, having opened the land to settlement as reclaimed, should dig these drains without any additional cost to water users. A later estimate of the cost of drainage than the one accepted by the local board has been prepared by the Reclamation Service. It fixes the cost of drainage on areas already authorized at $897,000 and $390,000 for units still to be thrown open to settlement.

The members of this board are not in a position to question the accuracy of this estimate of drainage costs for the lands awaiting settlement, but we venture to express the opinion that the estimate seems low and that before any approximate estimate is given to settlers the matter should have further consideration. This suggestion is made because the matter here assumes unusual importance. The high alkali content of the soil, the lack of natural drainage, and the imperative need of keeping the ground-water level at all seasons of the year at least 5 feet below the surface makes drainage as important as irrigation.

One of the chief sources of discord on this project has been the increase of drainage costs over the original estimates. Another is the failure of drains constructed to perform the expected service. There are more uncertainties connected with the prompt removal of water from below ground than there are in arranging to supply an adequate amount on the surface. Nowhere has this been more fully illustrated than on this project. The first drains were not deep enough. Tile drains put down later filled with sand and have been useless. Some of the land alleged to be drained has been rendered useless by the rise of ground water, and some holdings have had to be abandoned on this account. These conditions are not reassuring to new settlers, and it would greatly aid development and the ultimate financial outcome of the project if the Government could guarantee the construction of an adequate drainage system and fix a maximum limit to what settlers will be required to pay.

AGRICULTURAL AND ECONOMIC PROBLEMS.

The applicants for these lands will, as a rule, be men of small capital. Settlers on the lands now irrigated had an average capital of a little over $2,000, but as some had over $10,000 the majority had considerably less than the average.

It is not likely that the average capital of the future settlers will be higher. Men who have money enough to buy improved farms prefer to do this rather than undergo the risks and hardships of reclaiming desert land and living in a remote, sparsely settled district. Experience has shown that to reclaim the lands of this project and pay for the water right will cost over $150 an acre. The following estimate is regarded as low an average as could be safely adopted as a basis for development by a settler taking an 80-acre farm unit:

Leveling land, building checks and small ditches	$3,000
House and barn	1,500
Work team and tools	1,000
Living expenses, one year	500
Taxes, operation and maintenance, charges, and incidental	300
Initial payment on water right	200
Dairy herd of 20 cows or other live stock to eat fodder crops	2,000
Total	8,000

To this must be added the ultimate cost of a water right, which will be between $40 and $50 an acre.

While all this money will be needed if the best results are to be obtained, settlers who are willing to face hardship and self-denial can start with less. Half the land could be left unleveled. The dairy herd could be cut down to 10 cows. At a sacrifice of comfort the cost of the house could be reduced, but all those reductions mean loss of income and entail added risk, hardship, and privation. They do not make for efficiency, economy, or an early development of the project. It is possible that a majority of settlers having industry and thrift who could bring $5,000 cash would succeed, but what is the prospect of the settler who brings $2,000, the average capital of the past? He will need money, but he will not be able to borrow it locally. All of the money in the local banks has been absorbed. Inquiries at Reno, the capital of Nevada, shows that there is a demand nearer home for all the surplus funds of the banks there. When it comes to borrowing money from a distance, the security which a settler can offer can not be considered satisfactory. The Government holds a first mortgage on the land to secure payment of building charges. In its wild state this land has no productive value, and if the settler has not money enough of his own to put it in condition for cultivation he has no commercial security to offer. Settlers now on the project have had to depend quite largely on friends in the East for money borrowed. Where loans are made locally the interest rates are high and the time short. Most of the settlers are given credit at the stores for goods purchased, but for this they pay dearly in the way of enhanced prices. The local merchants have in many cases given the settlers more credit than business prudence warrants, and to protect themselves they confine their buying of farm products quite largely to the men most heavily in their debt. This creates uncertain markets and tends to disturb the commercial relations of settlers and storekeepers.

The last crop report of the project (1914–15) shows the average value of all products to be $11.25 an acre. The average gross return of an 80-acre farm is therefore less than $1,000. Out of that has to come depreciation of work animals and farming implements, living expenses, taxes, wages where help is employed (and no man can cultivate 80 acres of land as irrigation requires without some assistance), the payment of project costs, and expenses of operation and maintenance. Such a return makes the payment of high interest rates or quick repayment of money borrowed impossible.

In many cases the settler with inadequate capital can not borrow money needed to improve or equip his farm so as to obtain the average income. In some cases he has not been able to get far enough along with his improvements to obtain any income. Last July the chairman interviewed 10 settlers on their farms. Most of them had been on the project since 1907. Only 6 have been able to earn a living income, 4 made their living by contracting or outside employment, and 4 must fail unless outside financial aid can be obtained. One man who brought $2,000 to the project spent it all leveling 25 acres of land. Before he could grow a crop he was dead broke and in debt. When interviewed he was driving the sprinkling cart in Fallon, for which he was being paid $2.49 a day for himself and four horses.

One who has spent $5,000 in improvement had in 1913 a gross income of $400; in 1914, $600. Three of the ten have their farms improved and will succeed, but one of these is a contractor who has invested $10,000 in improving his farm of 120 acres, of which 87 acres are irrigable, and he has not yet built his house or barn. He made $7,000 of this money in profits from contracts. His gross income from his farm last year was only $500. Another, who brought $3,000 to the project, spent it all in six months and then made the money needed to complete his development as a contractor on the reclamation works. He has a dairy herd paid for and is making over $2,000 a year.

The last report of the project shows 540 irrigated farms, of which 480 are operated by owners or managers and 60 by tenants. Of these a considerable number belong to old settlers, usually well-to-do stockmen, who were established before this project started, but who abandoned their private ditches and have been given water rights in this project. There are less than 400 settlers who have taken up land since this project started, and are now depending on what the farm returns them for a living, while since the project was opened there have been over 550 surrenders and relinquishments. Some of these filings were speculative, but the majority have been human tragedies. Families brought the savings of years, their hopes and aspirations, attracted by the deceptive idea that the Government was giving away farms. They have learned through hardship, privation, and ultimate impoverishment that 40 or 80 acres of unleveled, unfenced desert land is not a farm. It is not, under present methods, even a fair opportunity to create one. And unless the settler has more than an even chance to succeed families ought not to be encouraged to risk their savings, their time, and labor in the attempt.

NEEDED CHANGES IN LAND LAWS.

The social and economic requirements of this development are being emphasized in this report, because of the financial results of this project and proper consideration for settlers' interests depend, in our opinion, on a radical change in existing land-settlement methods and policies. The reform should begin with the land laws. They were devised for the fertile, well-watered country of the Middle West. They are not suited to the requirements of the irrigation development, especially where the costs of providing water and preparing land for irrigation are high, which conditions prevail over nearly all the lands awaiting reclamation. Settlers on such land must either have considerable capital or be aided in making the land productive, if they are to succeed. The improvement of a 40 or 80 acre unit requires the expenditure of at least $100 an acre before there is any return. To protect oversanguine and inexperienced settlers from failures that may have ruinous consequences and to lessen the waste and loss from inexperience, the Government should fix minimum qualifications in the way of capital and experiences and organize and direct this development.

Another defect is that no distinction is made between good and bad lands. The difference in value may be very great. Some farm units are level and fertile; others broken in surface, heavily impregnated with alkali, or remote from towns. The better farm units are worth far more than the cost of development. The poor ones will often cost more to prepare for cultivation than they are worth when it is done. To make no distinction between good and bad farm units creates great economic unfairness and inequality of opportunity. It is a serious obstacle to the success of irrigation works. The good farm units are picked up; the culls are left. The aim should be to make all farms equally attractive, and to do this the lands should be classified and prices fixed in accordance with their fertility and cost of preparing for irrigation. Land laws should be revised to provide for this.

When a unit is opened, the best lands are eagerly located; the poorer lands are not applied for and remain unoccupied and undeveloped. They add to the cost of operation, detract from the appearance of a district, and the defect in present methods which causes this result should be cured. Of the 103 farms thrown open to settlement in 1914, 53 are still unapplied for. The same conditions and same results are found on other projects.

The cost of reclamation on this project is so near the value of the completed result that there is small margin for waste or loss through inefficiency in the period of development. This project will, in our opinion, be a failure, socially and financially, if this development is left to the unorganized and unaided efforts of the individual settler.

This project is not the only one where a reform in land-settlement methods is needed. Experience has shown that the construction of irrigation works is only a small part of what is involved in the transformation of desert wastes into cultivated fields, and that neither the Government nor private enterprise have in the past thought out the requirements of reclamation to a final result. The result has been huge money losses and regrettable disappointment and economic waste on the part of homeseekers. To continue to follow the crude, defective, and losing policies of the past, now that the consequences are known, will be an evidence of incapacity on the part of the Government to render a direct economic service to the public greatly to be regretted.

If the Government would fix a minimum capital for the actual settlers, require those who apply to show evidence of character and fitness, and then aid those approved in preparing land for irrigation, in building houses, and giving them the benefit of experienced advice and direction for the first three or four years of the settlement, it is believed that very few will fail, and none from causes beyond their control.

In considering the need for this organization it has to be remembered that these settlers will come from widely scattered localities. They will be of diverse nationalities. Naturally inclined to be distrustful of their neighbors, they will be greatly helped by the practical oversight and direction of Government officers. Such an influence operating at the outset will do much to create a community spirit and lead to confidence and cooperation, things which have slow growth under present methods and policies.

Those who are reluctant for the Government to incur the expense and assume the responsibility of directing and financing approved settlers in preparing land for irrigation talk vaguely about this being accomplished by the settlers obtaining money through cooperation. The obstacles to cooperative organization of the beginners in a development whose problems and requirements are strange and new to most of them are insurmountable. They do not know each other. They distrust each other. They do not know what needs to be done. They do not know where to buy to the best advantage, or what they ought to pay. They have not time to learn these things. The important and desirable thing is to grow some kind of a crop the first year, if this is humanly possible. They lack money; they lack credit, and cooperative arrangements only magnify these weaknesses. What they do need is organized and financial aid and practical direction. This, we believe, the Government should provide.

These measures, if adopted, would not be experiments. They have been in successful operation in Ireland, Denmark, Australia, and New Zealand long enough to have worked out through experience a safe and successful system. All the circumstances which led the above-named countries to formulate their policies of Government aid and direction in land settlement exist here in acute form. The recommendation of Prof. John R. Commons and Florence J. Harriman, of the Commission on Industrial Relations, "We recommend serious consideration to adapting the Irish land bill and the Australian system of State colonization to our American conditions," applies with special timeliness and force to this project.

If this development is to go on, it ought to be under conditions which will give confidence and enthusiam to those who undertake it. These sentiments do not prevail on the project at present. Many of the settlers are dissatisfied; many of the farms are for sale. The extension of the area with no change in methods of settlement would mean, in our opinion, the financial failure of the project. Settlement will be slow. The present unrest will continue. The Government will not be able to collect project costs. The protection of the Government's investment and safeguarding optimistic and inexperienced settlers from the hazards of the past renders it desirable that a land-settlement system similar to that of Australia and New Zealand be adopted. If this were done, the reform in methods and policies would include:

First. The leveling and preparation of these lands for irrigation by the Government, or an organization working under Government direction.

Second. The same organization would arrange to oversee the construction of houses and farm buildings by contract.

Third. The opportunity to take these lands should be restricted to landless farmers and actual settlers who know something of farming.

who should be required to live on the lands until development is completed and improvements paid for.

Fourth. The privilege of taking these lands should be restricted to men who have a capital to be fixed by the Secretary of the Interior and who show evidences of industry and character.

Fifth. Where the Government levels land and builds houses this capital should be sufficient to enable the settler to pay for at least one-fourth the cost of these improvements.

Sixth. In addition to these improvements, there should be provision for lending the settler money on improvements which have been made by himself where the need for this is manifest.

Seventh. Repayment of all money spent on developments with interest on the plan now followed in the above-named countries.

Respectfully submitted.

ELWOOD MEAD, Chairman.
W. L. MARSHALL.
I. D. O'DONNELL.

Mr. POMERENE. Mr. President, during the morning hour I had read at the desk a letter from the adjutant general of Ohio and another memorandum, in part in reply to some observations which were submitted to the Senate with regard to the National Guard generally of the country, and in regard to the Ohio National Guard in particular.

In the debate on Saturday the Senator from Idaho called attention to the fact that during the Ohio national rifle match in 1911 certain sums of money were expended on the State rifle team, all of whom were officers, and that during the period from July 22, 1911, to September 23, 1912, there was paid to one colonel the sum of $1,411.18.

I desire to say in reply to this—and I assume in what I am saying that these figures are substantially correct—that this last amount was paid during two encampments in the year 1911 and the year 1912.

The Senator also called attention to the fact that there was paid to another colonel between the dates July 1, 1911, and September 15, 1912, $1,610.95. This also embraces the total that was paid to the officer during the two annual encampments for the years designated.

Again, the Senator called attention to the fact that there was paid to another colonel between the dates of July 30, 1911, and September 1, 1913, the sum of $1,299.37. This was paid covering the services during three annual encampments.

I desire to state that Camp Perry has been used for the annual encampments of the National Guard, as well as for State and National rifle matches. During each one of these encampments and matches there is detailed by the adjutant general of the State, in entire conformity with the law, one of the officers to take charge of the camp, and it was for the services of these officers so detailed that this money was paid.

I called attention in a statement which was read to the Senate during the morning hour to the amounts of money which were furnished by the Federal Government for National Guard expenses, also the amount paid to the officers of the National Guard as camp pay out of the Federal funds, the amount paid to the men as camp pay out of the Federal funds, and to the amount paid out of the State funds as camp pay for the men.

The State by a tax of 10 cents per capita raises each year $476,712.10. This is based upon the census of 1910.

Under the State law there is paid to the men in the National Guard $1 per day. Under the Federal law there is paid to each Federal soldier 48 cents per day. The money which is contributed by the Federal Government is apportioned among the States in accordance with the numbers of the National Guard in the several States. The money, it seems, which goes to the State of Ohio is kept in one fund. The men in the National Guard are paid out of the State funds, I believe, exclusively. National Guard officers who reach the degree of efficiency adopted by the Federal Government are paid out of the Federal funds and are paid wholly out of the Federal funds. Certain other officers whose efficiency does not meet the approval of the Federal Government are paid for their services out of the State funds.

The pay of all the officers of the rank of colonel—and I speak of that because charges were made specifically against those who had the rank of colonel—is $11.11 per day while doing field duty; that is, while they are in camp or in general service under orders by the Government, State or National. It is the same pay which is allowed to the Federal officers of equal rank, except that the Federal officers are entitled to longevity pay. All other funds which are appropriated by the Government and which have not been used in the payment of officers in the way I have indicated are used for the purpose of furnishing military equipment for the National Guard. All this equipment belongs to the Federal Government and not to the National Guard.

Now, Mr. President, all of this money is expended under the direction of an officer in Camp Perry who has been detailed for that purpose by the adjutant general of the State and who is under bond. The expenditure of the Federal funds is always under the supervision of the Chief of the Division of Militia Affairs of the Federal Government, and this expenditure is audited by the Auditor for the War Department and other officials of that department. So it seems to me it would be practically impossible for any of this money to be expended in any way which was not authorized clearly under the terms of the Federal law.

I desire in this connection to call the attention of the Senate to the expenditures which were made out of the State funds during the year 1911—to officers, $9,320.46; to enlisted men, $52,175.67; total for that year, $61,496.13.

I have the expenditures similarly for the years 1912, 1913, and 1914, and without taking time to read them I ask the permission of the Senate to insert them in the RECORD as part of my remarks.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Without objection, such will be the order.

The matter referred to is as follows:

STATE OF OHIO,
ADJUTANT GENERAL'S DEPARTMENT,
Columbus, April 17, 1916.

The following report is submitted for the years of 1911, 1912, 1913, 1914, as to the money expended in this State out of State funds. It is rather a comparison of the amounts spent both for the officers and the enlisted men of the Ohio National Guard:

For the year 1911.

Officers	$9,320.46
Enlisted	52,175.67
Total expended	61,496.13

For the year 1912.

Officers	5,045.52
Enlisted	31,830.11
Total expended	36,875.63

For the year 1913.

Officers	5,377.86
Enlisted	39,732.14
Total expended	45,109.90

For the year 1914.

Officers	$6,214.82
Enlisted	42,095.50
Total expended	48,310.32

The amounts as shown above are from the records of this department and are subject to examination at any time.

D. A. DORMAN,
Chief Clerk Adjutant General's Department.

Mr. POMERENE. Senators seem to find particular fault with the fact that during the year 1911 Federal funds were paid to the officers of the National Guard in connection with this rifle match and none was paid to the men. That is true. The teams that are selected for competition in these national and international matches are selected by a system of competition. During the year 1911, after a competitive shooting, it seemed that all the successful men were officers. During that same year the team connected with the Federal Government was half officers and half men of the ranks, including two sergeants. During the years following 1911 a large portion of the officers participated in these matches, and they were accordingly paid while they were engaged in this service. There was no discrimination whatever in the selection of these teams. The members constituting the teams were selected wholly because of their skill with the rifle.

I feel that when it is sought to show that there was any attempt at discrimination on the part of officers of the National Guard in favor of those officers as against other men the charge is wholly without foundation.

I am quite sure that if there has been any expenditure of any kind which has not been warranted under the law by the officers of the National Guard of the State of Ohio they would welcome an investigation on that subject by any competent body that may see fit to make the examination.

The funds provided by the State and the Federal Government are all accounted for, and it can make no difference in principle that officers are paid wholly out of one fund and the men wholly out of another fund, or that the both are placed in one account and officers and men paid alike out of it. It takes the same amount, and no more and no less.

Mr. President, that is all I care to say upon this subject. I feel that while there may be a difference of opinion between Senators as to the wisdom or the unwisdom of a given expenditure, it can not be charged that these expenditures were made with any degree of favoritism either for or against any man or officer in the National Guard of the State of Ohio.

Mr. CHAMBERLAIN. Mr. President, in reference to the amendment of the Senator from California I simply desire to ask to have read a letter from the Acting Secretary of War in opposition to the adoption of the amendment.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Is there objection? The Chair hears none.

Mr. CHAMBERLAIN. Let me say that the letter is based on the original bill, but the essentials of that bill are included in the amendment, I think.

Mr. WORKS. The substance is the same. The number provided for in the amendment is less than in the original measure. It is confined, as I believe I stated, to the Pacific coast.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Secretary will read as requested.

The Secretary read as follows:

WAR DEPARTMENT,
Washington, February 12, 1916.

Hon. GEORGE E. CHAMBERLAIN,
Chairman Committee on Military Affairs,
United States Senate.

DEAR SIR: Replying to your letter dated January 4, 1916, wherein you request to be furnished with the views of the War Department relative to Senate bill 2684, Sixty-fourth Congress, first session, I have the honor to invite your attention to the following report:

1. The purpose of this bill is to provide a constructive and military reserve force, and for other purposes. Comment is limited to the military features involved in the measure.

2. The bill provides for the enlistment of 200,000 men by the Interior Department for five years, these men to be provided with "garden farms" of not more than 5 acres, for which they shall pay a rental of not exceeding 4 per cent of cost.

These men may be employed, with their consent, on constructive work of irrigation, drainage projects, etc.

For one month each year or two months in any one year, if the Secretary of the Interior and the Secretary of War shall mutually so determine, the said force shall undergo military training. The Secretary of War shall provide all necessary officers and equipment for such training.

Such force shall constitute a reserve military force and be subject to military service whenever called upon by the Secretary of War.

The sum of $50,000,000 annually for 10 years is to be appropriated for carrying out the provisions of this act.

3. It is not believed that such a force would furnish a dependable reserve military force for the following reasons:

The number of men who would thus enlist can not be determined, and it would vary from year to year.

The organization and training of this force would depend very much on the mutual agreement of the Secretaries of Interior and War. With such divided authority no good results would be accomplished.

The time provided for military training—one month of each year or two months in any one year—is much less than that required to make dependable soldiers.

The Secretary of War is required to provide all necessary officers and equipment for such training, without any means being given him for such provision.

The bill provides that these men shall be located on contiguous farms in groups of not less than one regiment each. In a very short time the average of each family would make a total in such group of 9,180. It is inconceivable that this number can be located permanently in one place and comply with the other conditions of the bill as to work in the Forestry and Reclamation Services.

There is no provision as to age limit, and the final result of the bill would be an army of married men. In the event of mobilization practically the entire male population would be withdrawn from certain areas, a condition which should not be imposed upon any community. Men taken for the Army should be so distributed as not to disturb the life of the community from which they come.

If these people are scattered, as they would have to be to perform the main duties assigned to them in the bill, it would not be practicable to assemble them for military training.

The passage of this bill is not recommended.

Very respectfully,

H. L. SCOTT,
Major General, Chief of Staff,
Acting Secretary of War.

Mr. BORAH. Mr. President, I want to say a word in regard to the controversy which has arisen by reason of some statements which I made last Saturday in the debate. This discussion arose by reason of statements which had been made by Senators to the effect that the officers of the National Guard were giving their time and service without any compensation. In reply I called attention to what seemed to me to be an answer to that proposition. The figures and facts which I gave are a part of the archives of the War Department here in the city of Washington. I did not make nor I did not intend to make any general charges against men who are enlisted in the National Guard or the State militia. I did make a charge against the extravagant and wasteful manner in which the State militia, as institutions, had used this money.

I entertain no doubt from the investigations which I have made that money has been wasted in large sums, not to use a stronger term. But there was no intention upon my part to reflect upon the personnel or the individual members of the guard as to their personal integrity in the ordinary walks of life, except those cases wherein I gave the specific instance, and as to those I find that I am entirely correct. I gave instances, and could have given many more, of what I deem indefensible and reckless use of the property and the funds. I know that the record is bad in that respect. I want it to be understood that according to my view as to what constitutes the use of public funds, it is all that I asserted it to be in the debate last Saturday.

Since Saturday I have undertaken to verify as best I could under the limit of time the facts and the figures which I gave last Saturday, and I entertain no doubt at all as to the correctness of those figures as to the fact that those records exist here, and that they show the facts and the figures as I gave them.

The inferences which may be drawn by one Senator may be different from those on the part of another. I have drawn my own inferences. Other Senators, whose good faith and integrity I do not challenge, may draw different inferences; but I wish it to be known that upon reinvestigation and reconsideration of the matter I find the facts and figures as I gave them to be entirely correct and accurate in every respect.

As to whether or not the money has been wasted will depend in a large measure upon the view which a man takes as to whether or not this is any preparation or not in the true sense of the term.

I charged, for instance, that the general appropriations were, in round figures, about $8,000,000 for State militia purposes. That is controverted this morning in a communication from some one who speaks for the National Guard hereabouts. Since that has been controverted I have gone through the appropriations as best I could, because I am far from being an expert upon appropriations. I had used the figure $8,000,000 because when the bill was first brought into the Senate I asked the question as to how much was now being appropriated for the State militia, and the answer was something over $7,000,000. That has been repeatedly stated by those who are in a position to know, and it has been stated at other times to be $8,000,000, and some $6,000,000, ranging between $6,000,000 and $8,000,000, and I used the figures in round dollars.

Mr. REED. Mr. President——

Mr. BORAH. In just a moment. I find that according to the appropriations for 1914 the actual appropriation made for the State militia in different ways was $7,776,256.29. I yield to the Senator from Missouri.

Mr. REED. How is that possible with the sum of the two appropriations only——

Mr. BORAH. Mr. President, I am not going to stop to discuss details; I want to go to other things. But I refer the Senator to the list of appropriations now in the possession of the chairman of the committee, from which I took my figures. The Senator will find that the figures I have given are entirely correct, according to that table of appropriations, and if there is any mistake it is a mistake in the table, and I am sure in my own mind there is no mistake.

The appropriation for 1915 was $6,700,635.30, but taking one year with another the average appropriations have been running along about seven million and some odd thousand dollars for the last three or four years.

Mr. POMERENE. May I ask the Senator does not that include an appropriation of considerably over $2,000,000 which was used for the purpose of organizing the artillery branch of the militia service?

Mr. BORAH. I could not state as to that. If the Senator will look in the volume which the distinguished Senator from Oregon has with him, he will find all the figures that make up the sum total that I have given, and which are listed under appropriations for the State militia. They are appropriations which would not have been made but for the State militia. Divide it up as you may, the people paid this amount in 1914, to wit, $7,776,256.29.

So, Mr. President, I feel that I am entirely accurate when I say it is ranging about $8,000,000. We started out under the Dick law, with the supposition and the estimates of two and a half million dollars. In the years which have passed we have now reached a point where it is averaging about seven and one-half million dollars a year, and nearer $8,000,000, according to the figures of this year, than it was $7,000,000.

I made a further charge, Mr. President, that there was a loss of property, according to the reports, of about a million and some odd dollars, property which had been turned over to the different State militias and for which there was no accounting. After allowing for waste and the ordinary wear and tear and such things as could be utilized at all for the purpose of accounting for the property, there is property to the value of $1,352,761.14 unaccounted for. I took these figures from the report of the Chief of Division of Militia Affairs in the office of Chief of Staff relative to the Organized Militia of the different States. After giving the details he says:

In other words, Federal property to the value of $1,352,761.14, issued to the various States for the purpose of arming, equipping, and training the militia, has been lost or destroyed through carelessness and neglect, or the methods of accountability within the States for Federal property have been so lax as to preclude the possibility of accounting for its disappearance.

Mr. President, that does not necessarily, of course, as I said upon Saturday, involve the technical guilt of any man, but it does sustain, to my mind, beyond a question, that there is a wasteful use of property wholly out of harmony with the public interests and wholly out of harmony with a proper administration of any department of the Government.

Mr. POMERENE. Mr. President——

Mr. BORAH. I will yield in just a moment. Take, for instance, the District of Columbia, and I will speak with reference to the District of Columbia because I have just investigated that. Last year there was a loss of property of some $7,000, wholly unaccounted for except the fact that it seems to have been partly accounted for and never returned; and this year the loss amounts to something over $5,000. To my mind that is wasteful, it is extravagant, it is indefensible, it is intolerable, and for any department of good government.

I want to put into the RECORD also a statement by the ex-Secretary of War, Mr. Stimson, in that regard.

The matter referred to is as follows:

Again, the standard of care and the responsibility which the National Guard has shown in respect to the Federal arms, uniforms, and equipment which have been issued to it under the Dick law has been so low that there is now a total shortage of $1,352,761 of such property issued to it, as to which the Federal authorities are unable to get either a report of the property or a proper accountability as to its disposition. Four years ago, in 1912, drastic steps were initiated by the Secretary of War to reduce such shortage. Under the system of divided control it has been found practically impossible to accomplish this. In the case of many States the shortages are so great that if they were charged against the Federal appropriations coming to such States there would be nothing left for rifle practice or camps of instruction or any other training for several years to come. This would mean that to apply the discipline of this method of purchasing efficiency would result in depriving the States of some of the vital elements of training which they can not afford to lose. In other words, the system proposed by these bills for extending the authority of the Central Government over the militia by Federal payments has been tried and has failed. It has failed in respect to numbers, in respect to marksmanship, in respect to discipline, and in respect to equipment.

I now yield to the Senator from Ohio.

Mr. POMERENE. I do not know what may be the character of waste to which the report refers, but I can give one particular instance.

Mr. BORAH. I ask the Senator not to do that in my time.

Mr. POMERENE. Very well.

Mr. BORAH. I did not interrupt the Senator. Now, I charged in another instance that a part of this money had not only been property wasted but a part of it had been embezzled. That did not refer to a charge against gentlemen in Ohio. It is not in connection with this proposition at all. I do not know that anybody could be brought under that charge at all in Ohio. Therefore, in making such a charge, I would not have any such inference drawn; but that it has been embezzled in other places, there can be no possible doubt.

Some members of the National Guard have been indicted, some have been sent to the penitentiary, I understand, others are awaiting indictment, as I am informed. So there is no doubt that if you will investigate the records of the War Department you will come to the conclusion that whether there is any individual responsibility which you can fasten under the law or not, this large sum of money has been used in wasteful extravagance, intolerable, and that some was used in such a way that it can not be defended in a court of law, a vast amount of it in such a way that it can not be defended in a court of conscience.

In 1915 the State militias were made up of 8,705 officers and 120,693 enlisted men. This makes one officer to about 13 enlisted men.

The official reports show that in 1915, 19,382 enlisted men were absent from the annual inspection. During the year 1914 the average number of men absent from each weekly drill of instruction was 63,201 men, or nearly 50 per cent. So we have for about every seven men who are attending weekly drill one officer. The amended Dick law required the attendance on the part of the enlisted militia at 24 drills during the year. In 1914 only 34.8 per cent of the National Guard qualified as second-class marksmen or better. In other words, only about 40,000 of the 120,000 could shoot sufficiently well to be rated as marksmen.

Now, how much have we paid for this efficient fighting military force? We have paid at the rate of a little over $7,000,000 a year, and during the last 10 years about $70,000,000. In addition to this there is the appropriation of the States which is a sum running up to about seven millions. For this stupendous sum we have about 40,000 enlisted men who can shoot a gun and about 63,000 who have attended the weekly drill. I call the whole proposition a waste of public money.

Mr. POMERENE. Does the Senator mean to say that the National Guard has a monopoly of embezzlement?

Mr. BORAH. Oh, no; I do not mean to say it has a monopoly of that offense; of course I do not, and the Senator knows I do not say that. What I do say, however, is that this dual system of appropriating money and transferring it to another sovereignty, to be distributed under political pressure, as this is distributed, leads inevitably to wastefulness, creates an institution which produces wastefulness, and in many instances that profligacy which stops only on the hither side of crime.

Mr. REED. Mr. President, I am a little surprised that the Senator from Idaho [Mr. BORAH], for whom I entertain the most profound respect, should persist in so speaking as to practically class the National Guard and its officers with criminals. That is the real effect even of his closing sentences.

What is the impression given by the kind of argument the Senator makes? Let me illustrate: If I were to stand in the Senate and say, "It is a well known fact that preachers have embezzled the funds of their churches," it would be generally understood in the country as an indictment of the church; yet such a statement might be truthfully made, for, among the great multitude of the good and the righteous, there is occasionally found a bad man who has slipped in. If I were to say, "It is a well-known fact that many lawyers have betrayed their clients," it would be understood as an indictment of that profession. The charge could be, of course, truthfully made, for many lawyers have done the thing to which I have referred, but the great profession could not be justly indicted for such a reason.

If I were to say that "governors of States have betrayed their trusts," and so frame my sentences as to constitute an indictment against State governments and the heads of those governments, it would be understood to be an indictment against the governors of States. It could be truthfully said that some governors have done the things embraced in the charge, but would it be a fair presentation of the character of service rendered by the governors of States? I might extend these illustrations indefinitely.

What are the facts? It is probably true that in all the vast numbers of the National Guard there has been here and there some officer who has embezzled some money, but will the Senator from Idaho charge they have done it to a greater extent than is done in every other organization that is composed of human beings the greater part of whom are good and a few of whom are bad? There have been rascals, as I said the other day, in Congress; and we expect the muckraker, we expect the extremist, we expect the bad citizen, to indict Congress as a whole because there have been some bad men in Congress, but well-posted and honorable men do not indict the Congress of the United States for the act of an individual Member.

Mr. President, there have been rascals in the Regular Army of the United States; there have been men in the Regular Army who have embezzled hundreds of thousands of dollars, and in one instance, I believe, the embezzlement ran into the millions. One of those officers served a term in the penitentiary—a long term—and there have been, I think, quite a number of other embezzlements; yet for that I shall not indict the Army of the United States or the officers of that Army, who are probably far above the average in point of high integrity and probity of conduct.

Who are these National Guardsmen? First, they are citizens of the Republic; second, they are of that class of citizens of the Republic who have felt a little greater interest in the defense of this Nation than does the average man. Accordingly, they have left their homes at night; they have gathered in their armories; they have spent many weary hours in drilling; and many a man who has labored hard all day has carried a rifle and walked with his tired feet in obedience to the commands of his officers.

Who are the officers? They are the men selected by the privates, and then the higher class of officers are selected by the officers who have been selected by the privates.

What are they doing? They have been for years and years doing that thing which we now all admit is necessary; they have been making some preparation; they have been putting forth some labor to defend our country from possible assault; they have been standing ready at any moment of the day or night to respond to the country's call. They have responded many and many a time when the call came from the governors of States; and if ever in a single instance they have responded to a call in an unjust cause it was a call first issued by the governor of a State.

I regret that these attacks should be repeated. I say that man for man the officers and men of the National Guard will measure well up with any other class of citizens in this Republic. I say that the organization, taken as a whole, is no more subject to this kind of indictment than is any other secular body of men called together by any motive and held together by any form or system.

Mr. President, as to the expenditures of the National Guard, again I call attention to the fact that the Senator from Idaho is in error in the conclusion which he draws with reference to moneys appropriated for the National Guard. In 1915 there was appropriated $2,000,000 under an act of Congress, and then under another act, the act of 1908, there was appropriated a further sum of $2,000,000. There was expended in maneuvers and in encampments $250,000.

Now, I come to the figures that enable the Senator to make up his grand total—it is for Field Artillery, $2,090,000—for Field Artillery material, to wit, the cannon that are on hand and will be on hand for 20 or 50 years and that will be rolled to our battle front in case there is a war.

There may have been some things in the nature of this equipment that will be worn out in the service, but the total that we find here, if I read these figures aright, includes the guns that are to be on hand—a part of the military defense of this country.

So I could go through these appropriations, but my time, I know, has nearly elapsed. I simply desire to say that it is time, I think, to quit attacking the National Guard. I do not know whether the dead body or the living body of Mr. Villa is being brought to this country; but I do know that if serious trouble arises in Mexico, within 48 hours after the order goes forth, the National Guard will be mobilizing along the Rio Grande.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Senator's time has expired.

Mr. WORKS. Mr. President, I believe I did not consume the 10 minutes allotted to me——

The VICE PRESIDENT. But the agreement is that but one speech shall be made, and that not longer than 10 minutes.

Mr. WORKS. Very well; I can say what I desire to say just as well on some other amendment.

Mr. NEWLANDS. Mr. President, I understand the pending amendment is the amendment offered by the Senator from California [Mr. WORKS] regarding "a mobile land force and a military reserve for national defense," to be composed of 200,000 men, who are to be stationed within the five States comprising the Pacific Coast States and the adjoining States of the arid region, and whose main object will be the defense of the Pacific coast against possible Asiatic attack.

I think the expenditure called for by the amendment of the Senator from California will be entirely too large to meet the favor of Congress. I rise simply for the purpose of saying that I think the amendment contains the germ of a good idea; that is, the utilization of our reserves in the constructive work of the country, a work which has not yet been fully inaugurated, and which must in time embrace not only the full development of our rivers for every useful purpose but also the full development of our public land, the bulk of which remaining in the Government's hands is either arid or semiarid, absolutely incapable of treatment by individuals and requiring broad collective treatment by the National Government if it is ever to be fitted for the habitations of men.

Mr. President, it is evident that the American people are not disposed to maintain a large standing army of professional soldiers. The maintenance of such an army is against the genius of our institutions and involves an enormous expenditure, for unless compulsory service is established—and that is at present impossible—it will be difficult to command the men except at pay practically prohibitory of the maintenance of a large standing army. We must, therefore, rely for our professional army upon a comparatively limited number of men—from 100,000 to 150,000. Such an army will cost a thousand dollars a man annually, a sum aggregating between $100,000,000 and $150,000,000.

It is possible, however, to create a reserve of men taken in their youth at 17 and 18 years of age, the years productive of the best soldiers, and train them, not only in military discipline but for civil life, in such a way that at the end of that training, part military and part industrial, each individual man will not only be better fitted for his civil calling in life but will be so trained as to be able to respond at any time to the demand of his country in time of war. That is entirely practicable.

This amendment practically proposes to revive in this modern day the system which prevailed during the period of the Roman Empire, when Rome recruited her legions from her small farmers; when her armies consisted of her small farmers, trained in arms and also in agriculture, who during peace would return to their farms and pursue the peaceful vocation of agriculture, ready at any time to buckle on their shields, to put their helmets upon their heads, and to draw their swords, and with their places fixed in the legions of Rome to push on among her conquering forces.

What was practicable then is practicable now; and the amendment offered by the Senator from California, whilst, as he suggests, it might be regarded at first blush as somewhat visionary in character, has the germ of a real practicable idea, and that is the training of our young men in such way as will make them efficient in arms, obedient to command, orderly in their disposition and manners, sustainers of the public peace, protectors of our public institutions, and capable of taking their place either in civil or military life.

So I propose to vote for the amendment of the Senator from California, in the hope that, if it goes into this bill, it will form the nucleus for the careful organization of some military force by the conference committee having the character which the Senator wishes to impress upon the body provided for by his amendment. I believe that such an army will be the most economical army that can be secured; and I believe that it will be the most efficient army that can be secured, and that such a system will give us an army whose central idea will be the maintenance of public order, and not aggression or conquest, for I assume that if this kind of training and education is entered upon it will be seen that the training is in harmony with democratic institutions and democratic aspirations.

Mr. LANE. Mr. President, I believe this country should be prepared for defense to an extent that would make it impregnable against any attack from any other country. I do not believe this is the time to talk about the cost; I believe that it is absolutely necessary at this time to place this country in a state of complete defense and to make it invulnerable against attack. I would not spend one cent for an army intended for purposes of aggression, so far as I am concerned, but I would be willing to vote for an expenditure of millions upon millions of dollars if the money were properly and economically expended in placing this country where, beyond peradventure of doubt, it could take care of itself and of the people within its borders. If the bill which is now before the Senate provided adequate means to place the country in such a state of defense, it would serve a useful purpose; if it does not do that, it is of no value.

The bill provides for about 33 days, of eight hours each, of actual training to each member of the force. You can not make a soldier by training him eight hours a day for 33 days in a year. In Germany and in Japan, where they have soldiers who do fight, and fight effectively, more time is used in training them. Training for eight hours a day for 33 days would afford no defensive preparation to the country of any value.

Such an army, although illy trained, would cost hundreds of millions of dollars, while the country would be impoverished and still be unprepared. Furthermore, the people of the country, if this bill becomes a law, will be resting under a sense of false security which would be lamentable.

I am in favor of popularizing the Army, of making an Army in which the people are interested, and of paying the members of that Army adequate wages, in putting them at useful work—in the South in the draining of swamps, in the West in bringing water upon lands and making them fit for human habitation, and up and down and throughout the country in building military highways, also in conjunction with the States, each paying its proper proportion in the cost of building roadways for the use of the people of this country. All of these roads and highways will be necessary in case we are invaded. Without them we will be unprepared to move our troops, no matter how many we may have. The men in such an army might also be employed in building military railways, if that be necessary; and to that end I would be willing to vote for an appropriation to pay the regular going wages and setting aside two days in a week on which to give them military training for eight hours a day, and at the end of six months or a year to turn them back into private life.

We might, for example, enlist half a million men in the course of the year, in two divisions of 250,000 each, for six months' work, drilling them two days each week and then letting them melt back into the population of the country. Under such a plan in a few years we would have an admirable system of roads; we would have trained men numbering millions; we would have the country blossoming like a garden; we would have the money in circulation. We could bond this property, the same as is done now under the Reclamation Service, and make it reimbursable. In total expenditure it would cost the people of this country less than this bill which is now before the Senate for consideration and we would have the roads and other improvements which are so badly needed. It would put the men in training under the actual conditions in which they will have to fight if this country ever has to go to war. They would not drill under cover, say, an hour and a half 48 times a year or on level fields; they would drill out of doors, in the rain and in the sunshine, in the heat of summer and in the cold of winter, in rough country, in the mountains, in the valleys, and in the swamps, where they will have to fight if we are invaded, under conditions which will harden them and toughen them and make of them men prepared to fight. Such a plan will imbue in the members of the Army devotion to their country, for it will pay them a fair wage and hold out inducements to them which this bill does not. We will pay, as I understand, under one of the provisions of this bill but $15 a year for training. That is not enough.

In addition there will be involved an enormous expenditure for purchasing and caring for accouterments and the storage of such accouterments at depots, out of which, it seems, according to what some Senator has said here, they leak.

I am in favor, to a certain extent, of the amendment of the Senator from California [Mr. WORKS], although I do not like some of its terms. In a general way, however, it would be a wise thing for the people of this country. A few days ago we passed a bill for the retention of the tax upon sugar. That tax, to the tune of forty million or fifty million or sixty million dollars a year—however much it brings in—will come mostly out of the sugar bowl and out of the sweetmeats of the little tots and families of the poor. Sugar, as we have found in our Mexican experience, is one of the things that the soldier upon the march craves more than he does anything else. It is supposed to be a food for the muscular system. We have so arranged it that we will raise just about enough to carry on this Army from the sugar bowls of the very class of men who will have to do the fighting. In other words, they will do the work and pay their own board. It seems to me that if we are going to embark upon an experiment of this kind, which leads nowhere in particular, in my opinion, we should have assessed some of the cost upon those best able to pay it rather than visit the entire cost upon the men who are least able to pay it.

Now, in behalf of that idea I am going to submit an amendment providing that the Government shall enlist for a period of six months 200,000 to 250,000 men and put them to work around through the country opening up the highways, training them two days in a week, which amount to 104 days yearly training to each man, and help to make a soldier of him.

Mr. WARREN. Mr. President, I do not rise to condemn the idea which forms the basis of the suggestion for an industrial army, but I do rise to ask that the amendment be not pressed upon this measure. As shown by the letter from the department, it is a matter which must be considered by both the Interior Department and the War Department. We have before us only the comment of one department, and that is unfavorable to the proposition. It has not had the consideration of the committee. The bill that we have before us is loaded down, in my judgment, to the water's edge with educational, experimental, new ideas, in addition to the extension of the old ones. I hope the amendment will be voted down.

Mr. ASHURST. Mr. President, I am sure that we all appreciate the labor, the time, and the patience which the able Senator from Oregon [Mr. CHAMBERLAIN] has given to this bill. Many of the suggestions which he has made are of great value; but I think that the amendment proposed by the distinguished Senator from California [Mr. WORKS] is one of the most, if not the most, practical, sensible, and far-reaching pieces of legislation which has been proposed by any Senator since I have been a Member of this body.

The Senator's amendment, as will be observed by a close reading, comprehends four general heads: First, defense of the Nation; second, employment of men; third, the rendering of those men efficient in civil life; and fourth, the development of the country. Indeed, Mr. President, I wish I could truly claim the credit which I think will ultimately and inevitably attach to the Senator from California because of the genius for constructive legislation he has exhibited in the preparation and promotion of his amendment.

Last year I had the pleasure to be associated for a time with Mr. George H. Maxwell, famous throughout the West for his great constructive work, and he called my attention to the need for legislation on this point. I took the pains to make an investigation lasting over two months, and I found it was entirely practicable and feasible to do the very thing which the Senator from California [Mr. WORKS] now proposes, to wit, that two or three hundred thousand men should be enlisted who may be called "reservists." They will get, not $15 a month, but the prevailing wage that is paid in that community. They will be set to work, if you please, sir, in Nevada reclaiming the desert; if you please, sir, in some other parts of the Nation constructing levees, so that the waters as they rush madly to the sea will not destroy lands; if you please, sir, in another part of the Nation this great industrial army would be set to work replanting the forests; and in another part it would be set to work building harbors, bridges, and roads. This army would not be encamped idly around barracks, but would be employed in useful labor. They would not come directly into competition with what we are pleased to call the balance of labor, because work in the Army would be open to any and all who would wish to enlist in that capacity. I repeat, the enlisted men would get the prevailing wage. They could not be called out in an industrial dispute. Homes would be provided for them under the amendment of the Senator from California; and, Mr. President, if you want patriotism you must give the private soldier something for which to fight. The patriots—and they were raw troops—who stood behind the breastworks at Bunker Hill and who, though outnumbered 4 to 1, successfully resisted four or five times the onslaught of the opposing troops, knew they had something for which to fight.

The most inveterate criticism which we hear—and I think it may justly be made—upon the present system is that we have not made the Regular Army attractive to the private soldier. This plan would afford an opportunity to build up an industrial army of two or three hundred thousand men, each and every one of whom would feel that he had something for which to fight. He would become inured to outdoor labor. He would become inured to mounting horses—to rifle shooting. He would be inured to all kinds of work, drilling and maneuvering two or three months a year, and then, when hostile guns were heard resounding on our coasts he would be leaping to the forefront of the conflict, not a raw and an untrained volunteer, but a soldier who had an interest in his country, a soldier who was earnest and anxious that her system, her laws, and her institutions should be preserved.

I desire to congratulate the Senator from California and to congratulate the State of California upon the constructive statesmanship which her Senator has exhibited in the preparation and promotion of his amendment.

Mr. President, I read a book a year or two ago which went on to describe what "Japan would do with the Colorado River if she had it." We know what America does with it. America now permits the Colorado River to flow some 1,600 miles through rich soil—soil so rich, as has been said, that we ship it to other parts of the United States so that they can use it for fertilizers. This book pointed out that if Japan owned that river, running, as it does, through that kind of soil, smiling farms, prosperous villages, and happy homes—aye, sir, cities—would soon spring up like magic where now the whirling winds take the sand in great showers over the adjoining country. An industrial army enlisted in accordance with the proposed amendment would convert the desert into homes.

I doubt, of course, if this amendment will be adopted; but the fact that it does not receive a majority of the votes does not make it any the less meritorious. Many meritorious propositions do not receive a majority at times, but I believe that in the long future, when those who come after us grapple in their patriotic way, as men are doing now right here, with the great questions of the day they will at last seize hold of the proposition which has been advanced by the Senator from California as the true, the correct solution of building up in this Republic a great industrial army, full of patriots, who will leap to her borders and will bound forward in defense of a country in which they feel and have a personal and a direct interest.

Mr. JONES. Mr. President, I desire to offer an amendment to the amendment of the Senator from California. In line 18, on page 2, I move to strike out the word "five" and insert "twenty."

The VICE PRESIDENT. The amendment to the amendment will be stated.

The SECRETARY. On page 2, line 18, before the word "acres," it is proposed to strike out the word "five" and insert the word "twenty," so that, if amended, it will read:

That each of the members of such force shall, by the Secretary of the Interior, be provided with a garden farm of not more than 20 acres of land in the States of California, Oregon, Washington, Nevada, Arizona, and other Western States.

Mr. JONES. Mr. President, while I can not add anything to the commendatory words of the Senator from Arizona [Mr. ASHURST] of the splendid work of the Senator from California [Mr. WORKS] in preparing this amendment, I can indorse them; and I simply want to suggest, with reference to the amendment I have offered, that it occurs to me that 5 acres is a little bit too small. While there are many places in the West where a family can make a living on 5 acres of land, my observation has been that that is true after they get the 5 acres in good shape and get it in certain sorts of crops, if it is located in a certain way or in a certain proximity to a large population. But I think that generally in the irrigated sections if a family are to be placed upon a raw tract of land, an undeveloped and uncultivated tract of land, they ought to have at least 20 acres upon which to make a home; and for that reason I have offered this amendment.

There are many places near the cities in the West where farm gardening is done, and I have no doubt but that families are well supported upon 5 acres and possibly are putting money in the bank; but most of our irrigated lands, at least in my State, are away from the centers of population. For instance, the irrigated sections are 160 or 170 miles from Seattle and Tacoma and a couple of hundred miles the other way from Spokane, although about Spokane there are some irrigated tracts and some lands that would come under the designation of the lands covered by the amendment of the Senator from California. As a general thing, the irrigable lands in the State are in the center of the State, away from the centers of population. So I think the 5-acre limitation would practically exclude our State from the operation of the amendment of the Senator from California, and I should not like to see that done.

I know that in the central part of the State, the irrigated section, there are thousands of acres of land that are as productive as any on the face of the earth when irrigated, and that with a tract of 20 acres of land, with sufficient encouragement to get a family started, and with the possibility of securing employment when not otherwise engaged upon the farm, splendid homes could be built up on these 20-acre tracts. As the Senator from Arizona has said, the adoption of this amendment and putting it into effect would not only furnish to our country a splendidly trained set of soldiers, men ready to defend their country upon their country's call, but it would also result in the reclamation of a great deal of land that is now desert and unproductive, the building up of a great many homes, the development of a splendid citizenship, and would result in increasing the wealth of the country materially and also in bringing about comfort and happiness to many of the people who are now looking anxiously for a place to build up a home.

Mr. President, I hope the amendment of the Senator from California will be adopted, and I should prefer to have it adopted with the amendment that I have offered.

Mr. WORKS. Mr. President, I want to say a word about the letter that was sent in by the War Department.

I did not expect the Chief of Staff of the Army or any other military expert to approve of this amendment. Its principal object is not to provide an adequate military force, but to provide what, to my mind, is infinitely more important—an industrial force; men who, with their families, will be provided by the Government with permanent homes, thereby not only settling the public lands, but providing homes for men who now need them and who are exceedingly anxious to secure them in this way.

I am not disposed to add to the military force of this country. I do not believe it to be necessary. I have already expressed my views upon that subject. Under an amendment of this kind, however, or some law of the sort, we could locate in the Pacific States a million families provided with homes not only of 5 acres of land but of 20 acres. Every Senator here from the Western States knows that I am stating the facts within reasonable limits.

Mr. President, I think it is much more important for this country that we should deal with the public lands in this way, provide homes for the people who need them, and thus build up the country and add to its industrial efficiency than that we should have a large standing army. I have said that I did not expect any military expert to approve of this amendment. I may say frankly to the Senate that I did not expect it would be adopted by the Senate, either, however meritorious I regard it. We have not yet reached a point where the Congress of the United States would be willing, I think, to take a step of this kind; but I did want to sow the seed here that might some time, and in the near future, bring us to a realization of the fact that this is the one great thing to be done in this country if we desire to build up the western portion of it.

Because I have felt and am satisfied that the Senate would not adopt an amendment of this kind, I am not going to ask for a roll call, and put the Senate to the extra loss of time. I have said what I desired to say with respect to it. I hope Senators will bear it in mind, and some time, when they have had the opportunity to think about it, if they will do so, they will reach the conclusion that this is the one right step to take in preparation not only for industrial efficiency and defense, but at the same time for military defense.

Of course, I appreciate the fact, as stated in the letter of the Chief of Staff, that these men would not be as efficient in time of war as the trained, professional soldiers. We all realize that fact; but we all know, also, that this country is not going to submit to the establishment of a great military force, composed of the Regular Army, in such numbers as will furnish adequate defense. Therefore, any effort in a way of this kind to add to the security of the country is something that ought to receive careful consideration; and I am calling it to the attention of Senators, not with the hope at this time of securing legislation upon it, but that it may have the effect of bringing about results of this kind in the future.

Mr. KENYON. Mr. President, may I ask the Senator a question?

Mr. WORKS. Certainly.

Mr. KENYON. I will ask it in my own time, if necessary. This plan of the Senator's does not in any way embody taking families from the great centers of population, does it?

Mr. WORKS. It involves taking them from anywhere that there can be found men who are suitable and fitted for the service they are expected to render.

Mr. KENYON. There should be provided some method of getting them there, should there not?

Mr. WORKS. Certainly.

Mr. KENYON. So that the great centers of population may be relieved from congestion.

Mr. WORKS. That is a very excellent suggestion that I should be glad to have carried out. I must confess to the Senator that, looking at the matter as I do, I have not undertaken to go into details respecting it, but to get this principle before the Senate, in order that it might be considered.

Mr. SHERMAN. Mr. President, before the final vote is taken on the original amendment or the amendment to the amendment I wish to say that, standing alone, either of these propositions has in it a germ of usefulness. It is only a practical, applied form of the "back to the farm" movement. If the Senate will be consistent with itself on the vote already taken, it will vote for the amendment of the Senator from Washington [Mr. JONES], and then, as amended, will vote for the amendment offered by the Senator from California [Mr. WORKS].

Mr. WORKS. Mr. President, I want to say, in order to relieve the situation, that I accept the amendment of the Senator from Washington; so the Senator from Illinois may discuss it from that point of view.

Mr. SHERMAN. It is of more importance to have the land than it is to have Government fertilizer. We have already voted for Government fertilizer. It would be just as important that we add another amendment, providing for giving a span of donkeys to each member of this industrial army, because the Government mule is a part of the Government reserve. It would be a very important military reserve in time of war, Mr. President, so it would be entirely fitting to have a span of Government mules added as a bounty to each member of this industrial naval or military reserve.

The Senate has embarked on a course where, when we finish, we will have embraced everything. I think amendments have been offered now for everything except a rural-credit bill, possibly a parcel post and a hard-roads system, and I look for them to come on apace in due time. If we are going to provide for the manufacture of nitrates to fertilize the soil, it is certainly consistent that we should give them some soil to fertilize, and then furnish them with water for the country where it needs irrigation. Of course, all of this will greatly conserve the Government resources, and at the same time will give us a strong military reserve, because perhaps it will furnish provisions in order that the Commissary Department may be adequately supplied in time of trouble.

I do not want to take any time, and I certainly would not make these reflections if I did not wish to say that, standing alone, I might consider some such proposition, because it has in it an element of practical usefulness; but I do not want to load down military preparation with so many foreign projects, until the friends of preparation will not recognize their own progeny by the time it has been so amalgamated and inbred with other schemes, such as are presented here.

I have no doubt the Senator from Idaho [Mr. BORAH] never intended to reflect upon the honesty of the National Guard or the officers of the guard. I did not take it that way; but before I take my seat I desire to offer, from the adjutant general of Illinois, a communication showing that the National Guard of the State has over $300,000 worth of personal property, and that the State has already constructed or in course of construction 26 armories and other buildings, costing two and a half million dollars.

In regard to the losses of property committed to the care of the Illinois National Guard by the War Department, there is a full explanation in the communication from the adjutant general of that State. It is true that the records of the War Department show some improper use or loss of property intrusted to the National Guards of the several States by the War Department. This does not, I think, as the Senator from Idaho explained in the criticisms that he made, reflect upon their honesty. It only shows, I think, a lack of proper and businesslike conduct in the accounting department of the State sometimes, and sometimes a lack of proper appreciation of the situation on the part of the War Department in years past.

Since the Dick bill became operative a great many million dollars' worth of property have passed from the Government to the States in this way. So far as this communication from The Adjutant General takes the question into consideration it shows that in recent years a more businesslike method of accounting has prevailed; that out of a number of items of property not yet accounted for, in a very recent time the War Department, acting with the proper department of the State of Illinois, has accounted for it; that it has been surveyed by a proper board of disinterested officers and accounted for; that whatever had passed into the custody of the State has either been accounted for or is now under proper process of survey and accounting or in course of payment, and in a very short time will be accounted for.

I think the showing here, with nearly $3,000,000 worth of property, and what has been furnished to this organization, ought in large manner to dispose of the criticisms of the so-called inefficiency of the guard. In the principal States I am satisfied that not only is it efficient, but the property committed to its care by the Government has either been properly accounted for or is now in course of accounting.

I therefore ask, without taking the time to read it, that this communication may be printed at length in the RECORD, and that an article by Henry M. Hyde, in the Chicago Tribune of April 15, 1916, on the same subject may be printed at length, and that a communication from the War Department, signed by the officer who is the Chief of the Division of Militia Affairs, directed to an officer of the cavalry regiment at Chicago, Ill., may be incorporated in the RECORD and printed at length.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Without objection, it will be so ordered.

The matter referred to is as follows:

SPRINGFIELD, ILL., April 16, 1916.

Senator LAWRENCE Y. SHERMAN,
United States Senate, Washington:

Your telegram of the 16th instant, requesting me send certain information, I reply as follows: General Assembly of Illinois appropriates as maintenance fund National Guard and naval reserve for purposes of ordinary expenses, armory rent, light, heat, caretakers, traveling expenses, officers and noncommissioner officers of Army on duty with State, subsistence, horse hire, forage, pay of troops, transportation, rental of rifle ranges, etc., $389,917 per annum. In addition, emergency fund for active duty within State, $50,000. Also expenses administration of forces, clerk hire, postage, telegraph, etc., $48,560 biennial. Also salaries permanent administrative officers, $24,000 biennial.

The State has constructed and owns or has in process of construction 26 armories, arsenals, storehouses, and permanent barracks, for which the general assembly has appropriated the sum of $2,500,000. Of the above there is in course of construction 12 new armories, 3 of which are regimental in character.

State's personal military property will approximate $300,000, of which more than $50,000 is represented in new steel lockers, the latter to protect and preserve Federal military property issued to organization commanders under surety bond for the use of the individuals comprising their organizations. In addition, an approximately large sum has been and is being spent to render secure in armories occupied by organizations of the State all property, State and Government. We also operate 16 rifle ranges in this State, the 2 larger ones owned by the State and valued at $220,000, the remaining ranges leased and operated by the State at an average land rental per range of $250 per annum.

In the operation of all of these ranges for our rifle practice the entire expense is borne by the State, except that of ammunition drawn from the Federal Government under our allotment and a limited number of civilian pitmen and caretakers during rifle season who are paid from the Federal allotment at the per diem rate and in the number approved by the War Department. No transportation of officers or men going to or coming from any of these ranges nor per diem while on the range nor any of such subsistence as may be furnished is paid from Federal funds, but, on the contrary, all such payments are made from State funds exclusively. No per diems paid from Federal fund to officers or men for any of our annual camps of instruction, except such as are specifically provided for by orders of the War Department as a charge against the Federal allotment to the State, and all such payments are paid through the disbursing officer of the State, who submits to the War Department a monthly account current covering all his disbursements. All transportation and subsistence on our annual tours of instruction are paid from State funds exclusively. The per diem of officers and men and subsistence and transportation for special joint camps of instruction are in part paid from special appropriation allotted by direction of the Secretary of War for the several purposes indicated and additional legitimate expense above the particular allotment for such joint camps is met from State funds.

Relation your query as to Government property invite your attention to report Chief Division of Militia Affairs 1915, which is latest available, page 62, indicating shortage Illinois sum of $5,851.09. This shortage represented unauthorized use Federal property through course of years upon which survey was held and settlement had by payment from State funds for amount approved by Secretary of War. Also, page 332, total charge under section 1661, separate lists, $52,836.17. This represents shortages culminating with change of old Krag rifles, etc., in 1908. In recent years this shortage has been most materially reduced, and is now being further reduced, as surveys disclose presence of any of the property so listed, by being taken up and reported to the War Department for additional credits. Also, page 67, indicates clothing in excess of governor's accountability in the sum of $147,231.64. This represents the amount of stores dropped under authority of section 13, militia law for the year 1911 and 1912, which, under subsequent ruling of Secretary of War, was taken up December 12, 1914, on property accountability, all of which property is either now in the actual possession of the State or has been dropped upon record of survey approved by the Secretary of War.

All Federal property issued to the State is annually accounted for to the Secretary of War, and no property so issued is destroyed or otherwise disposed of, except upon a report of a disinterested surveying officer approved by the governor, forwarded to Washington, and final action had thereon by the Secretary of War, which action directing the disposition of the property so surveyed is communicated by the Secretary of War to the governor, and directions therein are explicitly carried out.

No Federal military property issued to Illinois is loaned to or used by any unauthorized person or agencies.

Relative your request for statement efficiency and fitness our guard, would say that, like Army, our organizations vary in effectiveness; but, on the whole, believe statement that we measure well up to the standard is candid and fair. Officers and men are earnest and hard working in their efforts to increase their efficiency for the better performance of their patriotic duty and are anxious and entirely willing to perform that patriotic duty, be it what it may. As concrete example of their earnestness, I invite attention to fact that the returned inspection reports of one of our regiments—First Cavalry—just received from the War Department, indicates that in the inspection of the entire and complete regiment there were no officers absent and only two enlisted men, which fact called forth a special commendatory letter to Illinois from the Chief Division of Militia representing the Secretary of War.

F. S. DICKSON,
The Adjutant General.

[From the Chicago Daily Tribune of Saturday, Apr. 15, 1916.]

NEW ARMORY OF SECOND REGIMENT BEST IN WEST—STATE BUILDING FITTED WITH ACCESSORIES FOR SOLDIERY AND ATHLETICS—CHANCE FOR OUR YOUNG MEN.

[By Henry M. Hyde.]

You ride more than 3 miles due west on Madison Street—way out beyond Western Avenue—and presently you come to a huge building of steel and concrete, towering up five stories high in the center and spreading out to cover almost half the block between Madison and Monroe.

It is the new armory, just completed, of the Second Regiment of Infantry, Illinois National Guard. It cost $500,000, appropriated by the State.

On the main drill floor there is a square acre of space unbroken by a single pillar. There is a great gymnasium, 50 or more shower baths, more than 30 club and locker rooms for the various companies, revolver and rifle ranges, two or three big halls, with stages and dressing rooms for parties and entertainments and private offices for the field officers and Regular Army instructors of the regiment.

BIGGEST IN THE WEST.

Altogether it is far and away the biggest and most complete armory in this part of the country. So new is it that the regiment has not finished moving in and arranging itself. And on Wednesday, April 26, the big building will be formally opened and dedicated to the use of the National Guard.

All that day the armory will be open for the inspection of the public. In the evening the exercises of dedication will be held, admission being by invitation. If all the statesmen who have been invited accept and appear to make speeches, there would seem to be danger that the 827 men of the regiment and their guests will be swept away in a flood of eloquence. To go no further, the first three orators on the program are Gov. Dunne, Mayor Thompson, and Senator LEWIS.

GET 200 NEW MEMBERS.

The regiment has already felt the impetus of the splendid new armory. During its last few years in the old location on Washington Boulevard, where the quarters were cramped and poorly located, the old command—it dates back to the seventies—rather went down hill.

But since the first of the year more than 200 men have been accepted and sworn into the service, while a number of other applicants were rejected for failure to pass the physical examination. Within the next month it is considered certain the requirements of the War Department will be surpassed.

Not only is the regiment now splendidly housed but its equipment is also almost complete. Col. John J. Garrity, who rose from the ranks, having enlisted as a private more than 27 years ago, is justified in feeling that no National Guard regiment in the country has a greater opportunity or a brighter future.

MACHINE-GUN TROOP FORMED.

A machine-gun company, with its ranks full, has been organized within a week, and its equipment is already on the way from the War Department.

Under the guidance of the regimental adjutant, Capt. Scheying, and the quartermaster, Capt. Laas, one may visit nearly a score of big storerooms in the basement of the armory, filled with all kinds of military supplies, from entrenching tools to head nets for use where mosquitoes are bothersome. In one corner of the basement stand the regimental escort and supply wagons, with an inclined roadway leading up from the floor to Monroe Street, at the rear.

The building is so arranged that everything required for the maintenance and supply of the regiment could be loaded into the wagons and hauled out onto the street while the men were falling in on the floors above.

Practically all the officers of the regiment, including the regimental and battalion staffs, will attend the officers' school to be held at Fort Sheridan during the week of July 9. The whole regiment will go into camp at the fort for eight days on July 30.

WAR DEPARTMENT,
OFFICE OF THE CHIEF OF STAFF,
DIVISION OF MILITIA AFFAIRS,
Washington, April 5, 1916.

Maj. M. M. MCNAMEE,
United States Cavalry, Chicago, Ill.

MY DEAR MAJ. MCNAMEE: The Chief of the Division of Militia Affairs directs me to express to you, and through you to the commanding officer, First Cavalry, Illinois National Guard, his satisfaction and pleasure in noting the progress made during the past year by the regiment in numerical strength and in general efficiency.

Very truly, yours,

S. R. GLEAVES,
Captain, Cavalry.

Mr. CHAMBERLAIN. Mr. President, I rise just for the purpose of meeting an emergency that may happen a little later. I move that when the Senate takes a recess, it recess until 12 o'clock to-morrow.

The VICE PRESIDENT. That will not attain the object which the Senator has in mind. That, however, is no business of the Chair.

Mr. CHAMBERLAIN. If I make the motion now, and it is carried, that when the Senate takes a recess——

The VICE PRESIDENT. Manifestly, the Senator is fearful that there will not be a quorum.

Mr. CHAMBERLAIN. Yes, sir.

The VICE PRESIDENT. So, if the Senator desires to attain his object, it must be a motion that not later than a certain hour the Senate will take a recess until a certain time.

Mr. CHAMBERLAIN. Then I will put it that way, Mr. President—that not later than 6 o'clock the Senate take a recess until to-morrow at noon.

The VICE PRESIDENT. That will cover it. The question is on the motion of the Senator from Oregon.

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. CUMMINS. Mr. President——

Mr. WARREN. Is there not an amendment now before the Senate? I think there is an amendment pending.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Yes.

Mr. CUMMINS. A parliamentary inquiry, Mr. President. I assumed that the amendment offered by the Senator from California had been voted upon.

The VICE PRESIDENT. It has not.

The question is on the amendment of the Senator from California [Mr. WORKS], as modified, to the amendment of the committee.

The amendment to the amendment was rejected.

Mr. LEE of Maryland. Mr. President, I desire to submit an amendment, in connection with section 62, as to the number of the National Guard. That section provides a number; and the only number it mentions for the National Guard for the first year is 200. The House bill reads in the same way; but if we multiply 200 by 531, the number of Congressmen and Senators, it gives us only 106,000 for the National Guard, or a reduction of 28,000 from the present and existing number of 134,000. The present minimum authorized number by existing law is 153,108 men, and the estimates of the War Department are based upon this minimum authorized number of 153,108 Organized Militia.

Looking at section 62 as it is now written, I can not see upon what number the department is to estimate for the expenditures for the militia, unless it estimates upon the basis of 200 for each Congressman and Senator, or the reduced number of 106,200. Of course, there are certain reservations in the remaining portion of this sixty-second section.

Mr. WARREN. Mr. President, may I ask the Senator a question?

Mr. LEE of Maryland. Certainly.

Mr. WARREN. Does not the Senator understand that the bill provides against reducing any existing companies or bodies, providing they subscribe to the conditions of the bill in the line of federalization of the National Guard?

Mr. LEE of Maryland. The bill provides against reducing any of the present organizations if they conform; but, of course, it is not known that they are going to conform; and when the department comes to estimate it will have to estimate upon some specific number. The only number in the section is 200.

Mr. WARREN. Does the Senator refer to the money estimate?

Mr. LEE of Maryland. The money estimate.

Mr. WARREN. Undoubtedly the War Department under the terms of this act would not fail to estimate for the full number that we have provided, including present organizations, because the provisions of the bill so provide subject to the federation provisions.

Mr. LEE of Maryland. I think the Senator is wrong about that, because the department does not now estimate upon the actual number of the militia in existence. The department does not estimate for the existing number of 134,000. It estimates for 153,108, which is the minimum strength authorized by law. It has to estimate according to law.

The departments are constrained to estimate according to law, and the only definite number in this section 62 as written either by the Senate committee or the House is 200 for each Senator and Representative, which multiplied by the number of Senators and Representatives gives 106,200 National Guardsmen.

What I would suggest, Mr. President, by way of amendment is to strike out "200" and insert "350." That would give 185,000 for the National Guard to start upon, and it would, as an estimating basis to start upon, certainly prevent a reduction of the National Guard from the standpoint of the estimates. It is a very singular thing that when we are all talking about preparedness and increased military forces defense, the number of National Guard to be estimated for by the War Department should apparently be cut down by this section from 134,000, the present actual number, from 153,000, the present number authorized by law, to 106,200.

For that reason I call up the amendment that "200" in line 9, section 2, be stricken out and that "350" be inserted in place thereof.

Mr. CHAMBERLAIN. I do not think that language is susceptible of the construction the Senator from Maryland places on it. It is true it provides for raising in the State troops in the proportion of 200 for each Senator and Representative, but further along in the section there is this proviso:

Provided, That this shall not be construed to prevent any State, Territory, or the District of Columbia from organizing the full number of troops required under this section in less time, or from maintaining existing organizations if they conform to such rules and regulations regarding organization, strength, and armament as the President may prescribe.

The organization of the National Guard will not be reduced if this becomes a law, as the Senator seems to apprehend. He made that statement the other day. This preserves the present organization intact.

Mr. LEE of Maryland. May I ask the Senator a question?

Mr. CHAMBERLAIN. Yes.

Mr. LEE of Maryland. How would the department know that? How can it estimate when it does not know whether all or less of the existing number will conform or not? The number to conform is not yet known, and it may be reduced or it may be larger. Upon what is the department's estimate, except upon the 200 mentioned in the section as now written and being the only number defined by law, based?

Mr. CHAMBERLAIN. They would estimate on the basis of the present organization, just as they would estimate it now, because if they conform to the rules and regulations provided for they remain exactly as they are to-day.

Mr. LEE of Maryland. Does not the Senator recognize that the present estimates are made on the 153,000 National Guard now authorized by law? This section does away with that number clearly, and, as to the present organizations, they may be much greater or may be much less. They may conform or they may not conform. The only certainty left is the 200 mentioned in this section.

Mr. CHAMBERLAIN. Section 60 provides for the organization of the National Guard into units. I do not think it is necessary to do that.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is on agreeing to the amendment of the Senator from Maryland to the amendment.

The amendment to the amendment was rejected.

Mr. LODGE. Mr. President, I desire to offer an amendment at page 148, line 12. I will ask that the amendment be read, and then I will explain it in a moment.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The amendment to the amendment will be read.

The SECRETARY. On page 148, line 12, after the word "recommended," insert the following proviso:

Provided, That the President may, in his discretion, exempt from the preference granted in this section any position or office which in his opinion should be filled by open competition under the provisions of the civil-service law.

Mr. LODGE. Mr. President, that is an amendment to the section which gives preference to enlisted men mustered out with an honorable discharge for appointment under the War Department. I entirely approve of the section. I think it would be an encouragement to enlistment. I believe myself that then appointments will be as wholly free from politics and they may as well be examined by an Army officer as if they came through the civil-service examination. I believe that we shall secure a very good class of men for the civil service, who will be all the more suitable because they have had military training.

But, Mr. President, there are some positions under the War Department which require experts—chemical experts, for example—and there are various positions of that sort which require special training. I think the section as it stands is a little too rigid and it would be well to give enough latitude to the President so that if there are, as there are, certain positions under the jurisdiction of the War Department which require special training and education, the President or the Secretary of War should not be compelled to appoint from a body of men where he might not be able to get the kind of training and the kind of man he wanted. It is simply to give a little elasticity to the section.

Mr. CHAMBERLAIN. I have no objection to the amendment and I am sure the committee would not have any objection to it. The Senator from Massachusetts submitted it to me before he introduced it and I can see no harm in it. I am willing to accept it.

The amendment to the amendment was agreed to.

Mr. OWEN. Mr. President, I move an amendment, on page 114, in line 5, after the colon, to insert the following proviso:

Provided, That the total number of commissioned officers of the Medical Corps may, upon the order of the President, be proportionately increased up to 7 for every 1,000 of the total enlisted strength of the Army as it may be authorized from time to time.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Secretary will read the amendment to the amendment.

The amendment to the amendment was read.

Mr. OWEN. Mr. President, under the tables of organization as prepared by the War Department (1914) the number of medical officers admitted now to the thousand of the enlisted men in the fighting line amounts to a fraction over five. On page 40 of Table 5 the following appears:

Medical base group: Surgeon in charge, 1; base hospital, 20; supply depot, 2.

No provision is made for the hospital train, for the convalescent camp, for contagious-disease hospitals.

On page 41 of the tables of organizations, Table 5, provision is made for the medical advance group:

Surgeon in charge, 1; sanitary column, first, ambulance company, 5; second, evacuation hospitals, 28.

The figures which appear in the bill have been based upon the number of officers who are assigned for the fighting force in the front line and relate to the medical service that has to be with the troops in the firing line, and makes no provision for the medical officers required in the line of communication and those required for the base operations in taking care of the wounded.

The total medical officers, therefore, for the enlisted force of 20,673 men in an army division would be 99 for the front line, and for the medical base it would be 23, and the medical advance group would be 34, making a total for an Infantry division operating at the front of 156 men, or something over 7 to the thousand under plans of organization laid down by the General Staff itself. I should like particularly to have the chairman of the committee hear this.

Mr. CHAMBERLAIN. Pardon me.

Mr. OWEN. I want to call the attention of the chairman of the committee to the fact that the tables of organization made up by the General Staff, and as a part of the explanation of what this organization is and the proportion, show that in the enlisted force of combatants, enlisted men, 20,673, there are needed 99 medical officers on the proposed firing line, and the bill has proceeded upon the theory that only that many are needed; but on page 40 of the table of organizations, and page 41, is shown another set of medical men who are required equally in the service—23 for the medical base group line of communication and 34 for the medical advance group—making a total of 156 to the 20,000 number of enlisted men, which is a fraction over 7 to the thousand; and the attention of the committee possibly was not drawn to that. I should like to ask the Senator if I am right about it.

Mr. CHAMBERLAIN. I do not recall particularly about that question, but we went into it quite fully.

Mr. OWEN. The number of medical men allowed by the pending bill makes only about 5 to the thousand, and it is obviously based upon the tables of organization, which only allow 99 to 20,000 men, without considering the number of men required for the medical base group, the line of communication, and the advance group, which takes 23 and 34, respectively, requiring a total of 156 men. So the suggestion which I make in this amendment would permit this matter to go into conference; and if the Senator would agree that it might go into conference, I think it would meet the point which I believe ought to be considered.

Mr. CHAMBERLAIN. I will state to the Senator that it can not go into conference very well if we raise the proportion here, because the House bill has that very number.

Mr. OWEN. Then the Senator takes the position that it would be in conference in any contingency.

Mr. CHAMBERLAIN. I think so.

Mr. OWEN. Mr. President, the reason, I take it, that the House bill provided for that was that that was the recommendation of Gen. Gorgas, whose advice was based on the tables of organization above quoted and on his knowledge of the necessities of the case which he fully explained to the House committee.

I want to call the attention of the Senator to Table No. 5. It allows for one 500-bed base hospital and two 324-bed evacuation hospitals. Table No. 2 allows four field hospital companies, with 216 beds each, or 864 beds, making an entire total of 2,012 beds for an infantry division operating on the front. That is practically a 10 per cent provision for the sick and wounded.

The medical service, Mr. President, in connection with the Army is of very much more importance than is generally appreciated. The economy of abundant supply in this respect ought not to be overlooked, because if we consider the actual cost in war, a large part of our cost has been the amount of the pension list, and the pension list of the United States, which has gone up to a total of thousands of millions since the Civil War, is very largely due to diseases caused by unsanitary conditions during war and men falling ill because of exposure and to an inadequate degree of medical attention. That could be in a large measure avoided if there were a proper supply of medical officers trained as soldiers.

I take it that the committee having made their draft without regard to the facts I have stated feels precluded from permitting any modification of it; but I wanted to call attention to the fact that the tables upon which they appear to rely relate only to the soldiers in the service at the front and do not include the lines of communication nor the base of supplies. I hope that this amendment may be adopted.

Mr. CHAMBERLAIN. Mr. President, the committee gave that amendment a good deal of consideration, or, rather the proportion that the amendment suggests. I received a letter from the Secretary of War in reference to it under date of the 8th instant, calling attention to the number the House bill provided for and the number the Senate committee bill provides for and objecting to giving a larger proportion of medical men to the service. I am going to have it inserted in the RECORD.

Mr. OWEN. I should like to have it read, Mr. President.

Mr. CHAMBERLAIN. I will ask the Secretary to read it.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Secretary will read as requested.

The Secretary read as follows:

WAR DEPARTMENT,
Washington, April 8, 1916.

Hon. GEORGE E. CHAMBERLAIN,
Chairman Committee on Military Affairs,
United States Senate, Washington, D. C.

MY DEAR SENATOR: My attention has been called to an amendment made in the House of Representatives to section 8 of H. R. 12766, Sixty-fourth Congress, first session, which bill is now before the United States Senate.

This amendment, which authorizes 7 officers of the Medical Corps for each 1,000 enlisted men of the Army, has the effect of increasing the number of commissioned officers of that corps from 695, as provided in the bill, to 1,106, distributed proportionally in grade as at present. The enlisted force of that bill is about 158,000, line and staff.

When a copy of S. 4840, Sixty-fourth Congress, first session, was received from the Senate Committee on Military Affairs, with request for report thereon, a report by the War College Division, General Staff, was forwarded, approving in the section concerning the Medical Corps, the number of officers for the Medical Corps fixed at a total of 897.

The enlisted force authorized by that bill is, in time of peace, about 194,586, including Philippine Scouts.

It will readily appear that an allowance of 1,106 medical officers for 158,000 enlisted men is very much in excess of 897 for 194,586 enlisted men. At the ratio prescribed by this amendment to H. R. 12766, the number of medical officers for an enlisted force contemplated by S. 4840 (194,586) will be 1,362.

I do not know who recommended the ratio prescribed by this amendment. I believe Members of the House of Representatives who approved the change did not appreciate that its effect would be to add 411 medical officers to those provided in the bill, nor that the War Department had approved only 897 for a force much larger than that contemplated by H. R. 12766.

The avoidable addition of officers to the permanent peace establishment unnecessarily increases the expense of the Army and the per capita expense of each soldier thereof.

I inclose for your consideration a report on "Sanitary troops in foreign armies" (WCD 9319–1), prepared by the War College Division of the General Staff as a supplement to a "Statement of a proper military policy." On page 57 of this report you may be interested to read the statement showing the number of medical officers in the permanent peace establishments of various countries.

The United States has now 4.3 to 1,000 men, or, including officers of the Medical Reserve Corps, 5.3 to 1,000 men. This ratio is better than that maintained in peace in any other country, and it will be slightly increased (4.3 to 4.6) by adoption of the ratio which S. 4840 as drawn by the Senate Committee on Military Affairs shows. It will be raised from 4.3 to 4.4 if the original figures (695) of H. R. 12766 for 158,000 men be retained.

This information is furnished the chairman Committee on Military Affairs, House of Representatives, as well as to yourself, for such action as you deem proper if the bill should be submitted to a conference committee.

Very sincerely, NEWTON D. BAKER,
Secretary of War.

Mr. CHAMBERLAIN. Mr. President, I want to make this statement in connection with the matter: The bill reported by the Senate committee provides for 897 officers. There are now in the service 15 contract surgeons and now authorized by the Secretary of War 125 Medical Reserve Corps officers, making a total of 1,038. These numbers can be increased by the Secretary of War at his discretion, and if any emergency should arise he can employ as many more as necessary. In time of war medical reserve officers and medical officers from the Officers' Reserve Corps of the bill can be employed by thousands. There is no limitation upon it at all in case of emergency.

At present in the Army there are 444 officers, 15 contract surgeons, 125 Medical Reserve Corps officers, authorized by the Secretary of War, making a total of 584 for 108,000 officers and men, or 5.4 per 1,000.

The personnel of the Army is a selected personnel, Mr. President, and, as a rule, they are strong physically. The average number of sick, or, as it is called, the "noneffective rate," in the Army has been in the past 10 years 37 per 1,000. This rate has been constantly falling, and last year, according to the reports of the Surgeon General, it was about 24 for 1,000.

The Senate bill provides for about 5.3 medical officers per thousand men, or about 1 medical officer to each 4½ sick men. So that the doctor does not have a very big job to perform in times of peace as our Army is now constituted.

The amendment of the Senator from Oklahoma provides seven medical officers per thousand, or one medical officer for every three and one-half sick men in the Army, taking, of course, the statistics from the Surgeon General's Office.

To show that the committee has generously provided for the health and sanitary welfare of the troops, I point out that in war there is no limit to the number of doctors under this bill that could be supplied for the Army; that in an emergency occurring in times of peace the number can be increased temporarily at the discretion of the Secretary of War, while in ordinary times of peace we will have a larger proportion of medical officers to troops than has any other army in the world, and that the proportion of physicians and surgeons to care for the most healthy class of our population is about four times the number existing in civil life in the country at large, and greater than that in any other army in the world in times of peace.

There were, in 1914, in the United States 1.4 doctors to every 1,000 inhabitants; in the French Army, 3.6 per thousand; in the German Army, 3.7 per thousand; in the British Army, 4.2 per thousand; and in the Japanese Army, 5.2 per thousand. Now, we have raised the number provided for in the Japanese Army to 5.3 in our bill, and the amendment of the Senator proposes to raise it to 7 per thousand.

Mr. HARDWICK. Mr. President, will the Senator let me ask him a question there?

Mr. CHAMBERLAIN. I will not have time to yield, I am afraid.

Mr. HARDWICK. I will give the Senator my time, if necessary. I merely desire to ask him what is the proportion in the House bill?

Mr. CHAMBERLAIN. Seven. Now, Mr. President, counting the Medical Reserve Corps and the contract surgeons the committee bill provides 5.3 medical officers per thousand men. The proposed amendment asks for 7 per thousand; and I submit to the Senate whether one doctor should not be able to care for four and a half sick men or whether he can only care for three and a half sick men, and whether the already generous provision in this matter should be increased extravagantly, because this is practically doubling the number of the Medical Corps, and all of them will have to be paid when there will be very little use for them in time of peace in any larger number than we have now.

Mr. OWEN. Mr. President——

Mr. STONE rose.

Mr. OWEN. I merely want to make a response to what has been said here, before the attention of the Senate is diverted to another matter.

The VICE PRESIDENT. But, unfortunately, the unanimous-consent agreement provides that each Senator may make but one speech, and that not longer than 10 minutes, on each amendment.

Mr. OWEN. Very well.

Mr. STONE. Mr. President, I should like to inquire of the Senator from Oregon if it would be agreeable to him to have an executive session at this time?

Mr. CHAMBERLAIN. Let us first have a vote on the pending proposition.

Mr. OWEN. Mr. President, I withdraw my amendment for the present.

EXECUTIVE SESSION.

Mr. STONE. I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of executive business.

The motion was agreed to, and the Senate proceeded to the consideration of executive business. After five minutes spent in executive session the doors were reopened, and (at 5 o'clock and 30 minutes p. m.) the Senate, under the order previously made, took a recess until to-morrow, Tuesday, April 18, 1916, at 12 o'clock meridian.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES.

MONDAY, April 17, 1916.

The House met at 12 o'clock noon.

The Chaplain, Rev. Henry N. Couden, D. D., offered the following prayer:

We lift up our hearts unto Thee, O Lord, from whence cometh our strength, our wisdom, our daily bread, and all that makes for righteousness in the soul. Impress us mightily with this truth, that we may give strength for strength, wisdom for wisdom, righteousness for righteousness, and thus make the world our debtor through Thee for pure, noble, manly lives, in the spirit of the world's great Exemplar; for Thine is the kingdom, and the power, and the glory forever. Amen.

The Journal of the proceedings of Saturday, April 15, 1916, and of Sunday, April 16, 1916, was read and approved.

LEGISLATIVE, EXECUTIVE, AND JUDICIAL APPROPRIATIONS.

Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to take from the Speaker's table H. R. 12207, the legislative, executive, and judicial appropriation bill, with Senate amendments, and that the House disagree to the Senate amendments and ask for a conference.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Tennessee asks unanimous consent to take from the Speaker's table the bill (H. R. 12207) making appropriations for the legislative, executive, and judicial expenses of the Government for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1917, and for other purposes, and to disagree to the Senate amendments and ask for a conference. Is there objection?

Mr. MANN. Reserving the right to object, the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. WATSON] desires to address the House for 15 minutes on one of the Senate amendments to the bill. Has the gentleman any objection to that?

Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee. I have no objection to that. I am glad to yield him the time.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. WATSON] is recognized for 15 minutes. [Applause.]

Mr. WATSON of Pennsylvania. Mr. Speaker, as a member of the Committee on Patents, I approve of amendment No. 171 to the legislative, executive, and judicial appropriation bill, in order that better service may be afforded to the public through the Patent Office. The amendment is as follows:

> For special and temporary services of typewriters, certified by the Civil Service Commission, who may be employed in such numbers at $2.50 per diem as may, in the judgment of the Commissioner of Patents, be necessary to keep current the work of furnishing manuscript copies of records, $10,000.

With the present force it is impossible to furnish such copies within a period of six weeks.

Fifteen typewriters are employed in this division, but at times half of them are detailed to other offices in order to fill the places of those who are ill or absent on leave.

The bill in question extends to the commissioner the privilege of employing for special work typewriters, at $2.50 per diem, who are required to be certified by the Civil Service Commission. Nine thousand three hundred words is the daily average, copied by each of the service typewriters, the department receiving 10 cents for 100 words of manuscript.

After deducting the charges for comparing and the price of paper, leaves a profit of about $3 per day for each typewriter temporarily employed under this bill.

Those residing out of Washington, desiring a manuscript copy of any of the records for immediate use, are compelled to employ attorneys to procure them, and when it is necessary to have the manuscript certified by the Patent Office the applicant is obliged to pay the same charges as if the Government had made the original copy.

Fifty millions of words are copied yearly into manuscript. Of this number the Government last year transcribed 29,883,400 words. I have been informed by the head of this bureau if a sufficient force was employed to enable the department to promptly meet the demands of the public the division would write yearly 20,000,000 more words than they do now, increasing the receipts by some $100,000.

Last year the various divisions of the Patent Office paid into the United States Treasury the sum of $237,000, being the net profits of the bureau for the year ending December 31, 1915, and a total of $7,785,000 has been placed to the credit of the Patent Office as service earnings.

This pecuniary showing is not so important a consideration, perhaps, as it is to give prompt service to the public.

I now wish for a moment to bring to your attention our antiquated Patent Office Building. If you are interested go into the basement. There you will find piles upon piles of loose leaves of German patents and specifications; if bound, would make 200,000 volumes or more.

They are now useless, because the public can not have access to them for the reason that the single leaves would, in all probability, be lost or destroyed.

These valuable records certainly are worth an appropriation to bind them.

Then ascend to the story above and walk along the corridors, and you will find thousands and thousands of priceless papers stored upon wooden shelves, placed along inflammable partitions.

A spark, and we would be reminded of the fires of 1836, which destroyed the Patent Building and its contents; and of 1877, when 87,000 models and 600,000 photolithographic copies of drawings were ruined by fire and water.

The third floor reveals a room the public occupies for examining records. This is a narrow chamber, badly ventilated, uncomfortable, and with no place set apart for quiet study.

For a number of years the employees prepared and read papers upon subjects bearing upon the work of their divisions, which encouraged and trained them to be more efficient in performing the functions of their offices.

These papers were purchased by attorneys and others interested in the study and progress of science, and the useful arts.

The money derived from the sale of these brochures was sufficient to pay for printing and binding them into pamphlets.

This social and educational part of the work of the Patent Office, though not of an official nature, has been abandoned because the room set apart for those meetings was required for filing space.

There are 43 examining divisions. For want of sufficient service in many cases the applicants for patents, after filing their claims, must patiently wait for months before they can be read by the examiners.

This bureau is not rendering to the public the service which they have a right to demand.

A few years ago Congress created an Interstate Commerce Commission, and recently enlarged its powers in order that the public might be better served.

The wisdom of this action has been demonstrated by the effectual work accomplished by the commission. The Bureau of Efficiency, because of its limited appropriations since it was created, has been unable to extend its services to all the Government departments, and it has not reached the Patent Office.

In accordance with the last report, the Bureau of Efficiency, at a cost of $73,000, saved the United States Treasury $371,000 during the fiscal year ending June 30, 1915.

It is not my purpose to criticize the administration, nor the Committee on Patents, nor the employees, but the system.

The commissioner, with singular ability, is performing the duties of the office in the best possible manner under the circumstances confronting him.

In 1912 the Commission on Economy and Efficiency, at a cost of many thousands of dollars investigated the administration of the Patent Office, and made an able and exhaustive report to Congress.

Temporary commissions of investigation do not always produce the results intended. Members who favor investigations in one Congress may not be Members of the following, and the recommendations of commissions are generally slow to be adopted.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. Will the gentleman yield for a question?

Mr. WATSON of Pennsylvania. I yield to my colleague.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. Is anything being done to remedy the conditions of which the gentleman speaks?

Mr. WATSON of Pennsylvania. Very, very little. There are now pending bills before the Patent Committee, but the commissioner is endeavoring to bring about better conditions. I am giving you the description of the Patent Office as it is to-day.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. The gentleman is setting out a state of facts that is deplorable and that might call for additional legislation. I desire to know whether any bills are now pending looking to the correction of these conditions?

Mr. WATSON of Pennsylvania. Only to increase the efficiency of the office by having more employees.

Mr. OGLESBY. If the gentleman will permit, several bills have been reported, and there are two or three on the Unanimous Consent Calendar for to-day which attempt to remedy this condition.

Mr. WATSON of Pennsylvania. Permanent commissions receive in perpetuity the expressions of the Congress in which they are created, and, therefore, they are daily performing the functions of their office.

For these reasons the Bureau of Efficiency is bringing about for our departments a higher state of attainments than heretofore has been reached.

The present Patent Office Building being inadequate for the service and not fireproof, the erection of a new building is the only remedy to be suggested.

A fire not only would destroy the records, which could never be replaced, but would cause lawsuits which would never end.

Here are stored the records of the ingenuity of men who have caused the wheels of machinery to revolve so as to be almost human in their actions, thus spreading over our land industries which are the foundation of our wealth and power. Yet we permit these original drawings and specifications to remain unprotected from fire and mold.

Are we giving adequate service to those who are working, planning, and starving for the further development of our Nation?

The Patent Office Building should be in itself a monument to our great inventors.

We who are Members of Congress are directors of the greatest corporation on earth—the United States of America—and as trustees for the people it is our duty to press the various public departments, to give the highest and most efficient service it is possible for them to render. [Applause.]

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. BYRNS]?

There was no objection; and the Speaker announced as conferees on the part of the House Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee, Mr. SISSON, and Mr. GOOD.

CALENDAR FOR UNANIMOUS CONSENT.

The SPEAKER. This is Unanimous Consent Calendar day. The Clerk will call the first bill on the Calendar for Unanimous Consent.

BRIDGE ACROSS MISSOURI RIVER.

The first business in order on the Calendar for Unanimous Consent was the bill (H. R. 9909) to authorize the Chicago, Milwaukee & St. Paul Railway Co. to construct a bridge across the Missouri River.

The Clerk read the title of the bill.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will read the bill.

Mr. ADAMSON. Mr. Speaker, the bill having been read at the previous session, is it necessary to read it again?

Mr. MANN. Oh, I think it ought to be read.

The SPEAKER. The Chair is inclined to think it ought to be read.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Chicago, Milwaukee & St. Paul Railway Co., its successors and assigns, are hereby authorized to construct, maintain, and operate a bridge, and approaches thereto, across the Missouri River at a point suitable to the interests of navigation, said bridge to extend from a point on the west bank of said river in the county of Lyman to a point in or near the city of Chamberlain, in Brule County, in the State of South Dakota, in accordance with the provisions of an act entitled "An act to regulate the construction of bridges over navigable waters," approved March 23, 1906.

SEC. 2. That the act of Congress approved February 9, 1905, which granted to the White River Valley Co., its successors and assigns, the right to construct and maintain a pontoon and pile bridge across said Missouri River from a point on the west bank of said river in the county of Lyman to a point on the east bank of said river in or near the city of Chamberlain, in Brule County, in the State of South Dakota, is hereby repealed, but permission is hereby granted to maintain the present pontoon and pile bridge for one year from and after the date of this act: Provided, That if, on or before one year from and after the date of this act, it shall be shown to the satisfaction of the Secretary of War that actual construction of the bridge herein authorized has been commenced, then the said company, its successors or assigns, is hereby granted permission to maintain said pontoon and pile bridge during the period of construction of the bridge herein authorized, but in no case is said company granted permission to maintain said pontoon and pile bridge for a period longer than three years from and after the date of this act.

SEC. 3. That the right to alter, amend, or repeal this act is hereby expressly reserved.

Mr. ADAMSON. Mr. Speaker, two weeks ago there appeared to be some question as to whether or not the railroad company had had due notice of the pendency of this bill, so I requested that it be passed without prejudice, in order to be sure that there was a fair opportunity all around. Since that time the parties have met and agreed to a satisfactory amendment of the bill. In accordance with that agreement I move that on page 2 in lines 10 and 11 the word "one" where it occurs in each line be stricken out and in lieu thereof the word "two" be inserted.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the amendment.

Mr. MANN. In what lines?

Mr. ADAMSON. Lines 10 and 11.

Mr. MANN. The gentleman must have a print of the bill before it was reported.

Mr. ADAMSON. No; it is the print of the bill as reported and referred to the House calendar.

Mr. MANN. There is no word "one" in lines 10 or 11.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk informs the Chair that it ought to be lines 12 and 13.

Mr. ADAMSON. The gentleman is correct. The memorandum handed to me refers to the wrong lines.

Mr. MANN. It refers to the bill before it was reported.

Mr. ADAMSON. The memorandum was drawn and handed to me. I did not compare it with the printed bill. The bill provides for a limit of one year, and we substitute in lieu thereof two years. The amendment is to strike out "one year" in line 12 and "one year" in line 13, and insert "two years" in each place.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Page 2, line 12, strike out the words "one year" and insert the words "two years." Line 13, strike out the words "one year" and insert the words "two years."

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. ADAMSON. Now I want to change the limit for the period of completion from three years to four years; and I move to strike out the word "three" in line 21 and insert the word "four."

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Page 2, line 21, strike out the word "three" and insert the word "four."

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. ADAMSON. That is all.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. Will the gentleman from Georgia yield?

Mr. ADAMSON. Yes.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. Is this to be a permanent bridge?

Mr. ADAMSON. Yes.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. What is the pontoon bridge referred to?

Mr. ADAMSON. That is a temporary structure that they have been using for some time. It washes out every few months and they put it back, and the people want a more durable structure.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. What provision is made for the removal of the temporary structure?

Mr. ADAMSON. That is provided for in section 2.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. I do not observe that there is any obligation upon anyone to remove the pontoon bridge.

Mr. ADAMSON. It is removed now; it has been washed away. They have permission, however, to restore it until they complete the other bridge.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. Unless the act of God had intervened the approaches to a pontoon bridge, if any, might remain, and in floods of the future prove an obstruction to the channel.

Mr. ADAMSON. That has happened many times. I am told that it has washed out numerous times in the past, and they have temporarily replaced it.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. The temporary bridge having been removed by the flood, then the question that I desire to ask the gentleman is answered.

Mr. ADAMSON. They have a right to replace it and use it until the new bridge is completed.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. The Government would be put to no expense for removing it?

Mr. ADAMSON. No.

Mr. GANDY. Mr. Speaker, in the consideration of the bill now before the House it is well that the Members should all thoroughly understand the situation; and, that they may, I desire to make a brief chronological statement. On February 9, 1905, there was granted by act of Congress permission to the White River Valley Co., its successors and assigns, the right to construct and maintain a pontoon and pile bridge across the Missouri River between Oacoma, on the west side, and Chamberlain, on the east side. That bridge was built and the Chicago, Milwaukee & St. Paul Railway Co., which was the parent corporation of the White River Valley Co. and the White River Valley Railroad Co., pushed forward the extension of its line from Oacoma to Rapid City, a distance of approximately 220 miles. The extension was completed late in 1907, and through passenger-train service was inaugurated between the Black Hills and Chicago. The building of this railroad had been the dream of years, for in 1886 much preliminary work was done; and from that time on each year South Dakota people confidently expected that actual construction work would be commenced in the very near future. When the extension was finally completed almost a score of towns came into existence across the stretch of prairie from Oacoma to Rapid City. Practically every one of these town sites, if not every one, was owned and the lots disposed of by a town-site company that was a subsidiary corporation to the Chicago, Milwaukee & St. Paul Railway Co. These towns grew and many of them became thriving agricultural market places. Two of them, Oacoma and Kadoka, are county seats, and between the former and Rapid City, the terminus of the line, are 19 towns, which are totally dependent upon this line of railway for their railroad transportation.

When this pile-and-pontoon bridge was built officials of the Milwaukee Railroad, as this line is commonly called in the West, or of the St. Paul road, as it is known in the East, stated that it was only a temporary structure, and would be operated only until the railroad company could secure the steel necessary for the construction of a permanent bridge. As an extenuating circumstance, it was urged by the company that in the construction of the Pacific coast line they then had in use all of their bridge-building equipment; and these two excuses served to appease the South Dakota people for a time. However, when the spring of 1908 came and the rising turbulent waters of the Missouri River took away several sections of the bridge and sent the piling and timbers on their long journey to the Gulf, that first failure of a pile-and-pontoon bridge to withstand the current of the Missouri River certainly ought to have been sufficient to have hurried the railroad officials in their effort to construct a permanent bridge at this place. If there was any doubt or any thought that the failure of the bridge in the spring of 1908 was an accident, or that the conditions then were unusual in the Missouri River, that thought has long ago been dissipated by the knowledge that during each of the years since 1908 this bridge has been out of commission from two to five times. The periods when passengers were forced to cross the river in ferryboats, and when practically no freight and express were moved, varied from a few days to many weeks, the longest period prior to this year having been 41 days. In 1915 the bridge was out of commission for a total of 35 days, or an average of almost 1 day out of every 10 in the year. The bridge is out at this time, no train having crossed the river since the 5th day of March. Just when the bridge will be rebuilt I am not able to state, but word from South Dakota is to the effect that it will perhaps be May 1 or later before another temporary structure is completed. The channel of the river in front of Chamberlain is 1,785 feet wide; and when the Missouri River got through with its work of destruction on March 5 not a vestige of the bridge remained except the pontoon draw and the ends of a few piling sticking out of the water.

That travelers and the railroad company have been particularly fortunate is evidenced by the fact that although passengers have been ferried across the river at all times of the day and night, rain or shine, fair or storm, and even when floating ice was in the river, no lives have thus far been lost. This uncertain condition of train service and the fear of fatal results which may happen at any time to those ferrying the river has caused travelers to not go by the Black Hills line of the Milwaukee unless there was no other way for them to reach their destination. Ours is a great live-stock country, and shippers of stock have been many times inconvenienced and compelled to suffer heavy losses by delays in their shipments on account of inability to cross the river. There is no question but that the uncertain condition of train service on the Black Hills line of the Milwaukee has seriously retarded the growth and development of the country along the line. In failing to provide train service the Milwaukee "killed the goose that laid the golden egg," for there must be adequate train service to insure an expansion of industry and business.

It is my understanding that this bridge was officially condemned by the board of railroad commissioners of South Dakota in 1909, and by a writ of mandamus the board sought to compel the company to remove this bridge, which is a menace to life and property, and build a permanent structure. The railroad company defeated the action of the railroad commission on the contention that the bridge was across a navigable stream and the State board had no jurisdiction. At that time representatives of the railroad company announced to the people of South Dakota that the company contemplated the building of a double-track bridge on its line across the Mississippi River at Savannah, Ill., and would, in the near future, remove its single-track bridge from that place to Chamberlain. Since then that information has repeatedly been given out to South Dakota people, and the story has become an "old chestnut." Newspapers in South Dakota carried that story again a few weeks ago, but as long as the railroad company made no move whatever to erect a permanent bridge the people of the State are not being misled by this timeworn announcement.

The Legislature of South Dakota, at its 1915 session, adopted the following joint resolutions:

CERTIFICATE.

UNITED STATES OF AMERICA,
State of South Dakota, Secretary's Office:

I, Frank M. Rood, secretary of state, do hereby certify that the annexed bill, to wit, house joint resolution No. 6, was duly passed by the 1915 session of the Legislature of the State of South Dakota, approved by the governor, and that the same is now in full force and effect.

In witness whereof I have hereunto set my hand and affixed the great seal of the State of South Dakota at the city of Pierre March 17, 1915.

[SEAL.] FRANK M. ROOD,
Secretary of State.

A joint resolution memorializing Congress and our Senators and Representatives in Congress to use all honorable means to compel the Chicago, Milwaukee & St. Paul Railway Co. to construct a permanent railway bridge across the Missouri River at the city of Chamberlain.

Be it resolved by the Senate and House of Representatives of the State of South Dakota:

Whereas, about the year 1905, the Chicago, Milwaukee & St. Paul Railway Co., as the parent corporation of the White River Valley Railway Co., entered upon the construction of a line of railway commencing at the east bank of the Missouri River at the city of Chamberlain and extending westward through Lyman, Stanley, and Pennington Counties to the city of Rapid City, and as a part of said line of railway constructed a pontoon bridge across the Missouri River at Chamberlain; and

Whereas the said Chicago, Milwaukee & St. Paul Railway Co. has taken over the property of the White River Valley Railway Co., including the pontoon or pile bridge at Chamberlain, but has never constructed a permanent railroad bridge; and

Whereas the said pontoon or pile bridge goes out at least from one to four times each year when there is any unusual condition of the Missouri River at Chamberlain; and

Whereas said pontoon or pile bridge is unsafe and dangerous to the traveling public, and by reason of the maintenance of said bridge in its unsafe condition a railway train, either passenger or freight, is liable at any time to be precipitated in the Missouri River, especially during the early spring of the year when the ice is going out and during the June rise; and in the fall of the year and when the ice is formed or floating in said river, it is impossible to operate the draw in said bridge, and the maintenance of said bridge by the said railway company is inimical and dangerous to the public health and safety of the traveling public generally, as well as to shippers; and

Whereas by reason of the fact that all traffic to points west of the Missouri River when said bridge is out or the draw open must be sent via the lines of the Chicago Northwestern Railway Co. via Woolsey and Rapid City to consignees between Chamberlain and Rapid City, and passengers, mail, express, and freight are thereby greatly delayed and the development of said country deterred and the business interests of the people located between Chamberlain and Rapid City jeopardized: Therefore be it

Resolved by the Legislature of the State of South Dakota, That the Congress of the United States and our Senators and Representatives in Congress be, and hereby are, urged to use all honorable and lawful means at their command to compel the Chicago, Milwaukee & St. Paul Railway Co. to erect at the earliest possible date a good, safe, permanent railway bridge across the Missouri River at Chamberlain; and be it further

Resolved, That a copy of this resolution be sent to the Congress of the United States and to our Senators and Representatives in Congress and to the Secretary of War.

Instructions therein contained from the representatives of the people of the State in which is located the district I have the honor to represent in this House, personal knowledge of the conditions and the danger of longer tolerating this so-called temporary bridge over the Missouri River, and the appeal of many thousands of people who live along the line of railroad from Oacoma to the Black Hills caused me to introduce the bill now being considered. Two weeks ago to-day, when this bill was called up, the RECORD shows that there was some objection to its consideration for the reason that it did not appear that the railroad company had been given actual notice of the pendency of the bill. By unanimous consent the bill was then passed over on the calendar without prejudice, and that day communications were mailed to the president of the Chicago, Milwaukee & St. Paul Railway Co. by the chairman of the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce and by myself. Counsel representing the railroad company came to the city, and a series of conferences were held which were participated in by my colleague from South Dakota [Mr. DILLON], myself, and others. The railroad people insisted that their budget for the next two years was made up, and in view of the exceptionally heavy expenditures outlined therein they did not feel that the road could undertake the construction of this bridge before three years from the passage of the bill. On that question I conferred by wire with a number of the people interested in South Dakota, and the following telegrams are evidence of how keenly the people feel about this unusual situation:

PIERRE, S. DAK., April 12, 1916.

HON. HARRY L. GANDY,
Washington, D. C.:

Railroad commission informs me that in 1909 Milwaukee Co. promised to commence building bridge within year or two, and have been promising ever since, but seems further from building now than ever. Bridge is much needed, as present conditions make service deplorably bad. My advice is to insist on bill without amendments.

FRANK M. BYRNE, Governor.

OKATON, S. DAK., April 15, 1916.

HON. HARRY L. GANDY,
House of Representatives, Washington, D. C.:

We don't want present system of crossing legalized. We believe lives of individuals may be sacrificed. We don't want to be called up to drag the Missouri for the bodies of relatives or friends, and it is only through some unexplained luck or the care of a benign Providence that we have not had this task to perform before this time. The Milwaukee people have bartered away their right to extension of time by shutting their eyes to a condition that has existed for years and should never have been allowed.

OKATON COMMERCIAL CLUB.

MURDO, S. DAK., April 15, 1916.

HARRY L. GANDY, M. C.,
Washington, D. C.:

There should be no delay in Chamberlain bridge longer than time necessary to procure material. Present temporary bridge out since March 5, and prospects that new one will not be completed before May 1. Traffic delayed and business demoralized. Would think 18 months a fair compromise.

O. A. KIMBLE.

RELIANCE, S. DAK., April 12, 1916.

HARRY L. GANDY, M. C.,
Washington, D. C.:

Insist on shortest time possible, as bridge has been entirely out for six weeks and will not be rebuilt for six weeks longer. Stock being transferred by boat and driven one-half mile, with no accommodations for loading, and causing a great loss in shrinkage and delays to shippers. Passengers must walk same as stock, sick or well, rain or shine.

GEO. KURTH.

PRESHO, S. DAK., April 13, 1916.

HARRY L. GANDY, M. C.,
Washington, D. C.:

Sentiment here unanimously opposed to any such change in your bill compelling building of permanent bridge at Chamberlain. Every year's delay means great loss to western South Dakota development. Present bridge has been in use for 10 years, which should have been amply sufficient for Milwaukee Co. to arrange to build permanent bridge. Temporary structure now out, no trains having crossed over bridge since March 5, with prospects for another two weeks the same, which makes nearly two montns without bridge service at Chamberlain. We trust that you will use every effort to secure passage of bill in original form.

D. E. HOPKINS,
Secretary Commercial Club.

RAPID CITY, S. DAK., April 12, 1916.

HARRY L. GANDY,
Washington, D. C.:

Insist on original bill. Milwaukee bridge in present condition menace to the traveling public.

J. K. HULL, Secretary.

KENNEBEC, S. DAK., April 12, 9116.

HON. HARRY L. GANDY,
Washington, D. C.:

The business men of Kennebec unanimously insist on the original bill in regard to Milwaukee bridge at Chamberlain.

CLAUDE C. IRWIN.

BELVIDERE, S. DAK., April 16, 1916.

HARRY L. GANDY, M. C.,
Washington, D. C.:

People here are against delaying construction of bridge at Chamberlain. Would consent to one year's delay in starting and finishing bridge if absolutely necessary.

E. W. REEVES.

VIVIAN, S. DAK., April 12, 1916.

HON. HARRY L. GANDY,
Washington, D. C.:

Original bill is entirely fair to railroad company, and we advise you to insist upon its consideration in original form. Affidavits and resolutions sent you represent sentiment here. We will stand by you. Bridge at Chamberlain out of commission since March 6.

E. C. HALL.

One of the persons who participated in the conferences referred to a few moments ago was Attorney H. H. Field, representing Mr. Burton Hanson, general counsel of the Chicago, Milwaukee & St. Paul Railway Co. The conditions of this unusual situation were carefully gone over with Mr. Field, and he was assured that while the people of South Dakota have every desire to be fair with the railroad company, yet in view of the fact that the lines of business along this railroad are hindered and life and property endangered by this pile and pontoon bridge, the proposition of the Milwaukee to delay commencing the construction for three years could not be consented to. Having in mind that the usual form of bridge bills passed by this Congress permit one year in which to commence the construction and three years to build the bridge, Mr. Field took up the proposition by long-distance telephone with Mr. A. J. Earling, president of the Chicago, Milwaukee & St. Paul Railroad Co., who at that time was in New York City. Later there was delivered to me the following telegram from Mr. Earling:

NEW YORK, N. Y., April 13, 1916.

H. H. FIELD,
Washington, D. C.:

You are authorized to assure Congressman GANDY that the amendment providing for beginning of the work in two years and completion in four years will be satisfactory to the company, and you may deliver this telegram to him, if desired.

A. J. EARLING.

For 10 years the railroad company and the people have talked about this situation and have done nothing. Now, Mr. Speaker, what I am interested in is action and not words. The Milwaukee people finally consented to the amendment to this bill providing that construction shall be commenced within two years and the bridge shall be built within four years. Fully realizing what this proposition and its delay means to the people of my district, yet in the interest of seeing this bill passed and the fixing of a day certain before which construction must be commenced upon this bridge, I do not object to the amendment. I well realize that to contest the amendment would endanger the bill itself. What we want is a permament bridge, not a makeshift that goes out of commission several times each year. What we want is train service across the Missouri River, with the opportunity for passengers and freight to be carried safely and without danger across this big, muddy stream. I am confident, Mr. Speaker, that this house will pass this bill, that the Senate will also pass it, and that it will become a law. Then, Mr. Speaker, when the bridge will have been built which is provided for in this bill a hope of years will have been realized and a long step will have been taken for the settlement, growth, and development of a large portion of western South Dakota, that depends upon this line for railroad transportation.

I desire to further call your attention to certain letters, resolutions of commercial clubs, affidavits, and telegrams from interested citizens on this subject.

BOARD OF RAILROAD COMMISSIONERS OF THE STATE OF SOUTH DAKOTA,
Pierre, February 13, 1916.

HON. HARRY L. GANDY,
Washington, D. C.

DEAR SIR: In response to your communication of January 28, you are advised that for some unexplainable reason this communication, while it reached the office on January 31, became mislaid and was not presented to the board for consideration until Friday of last week, which accounts for the delay in answering it.

Several years ago there was a meeting of the commercial clubs of the State at Presho and the board of railroad commissioners was asked to be present. At that time the question of the safety of this bridge across the Missouri River at Chamberlain was presented to the board in a very strenuous manner by the persons residing west of the river. Previous to that time the board had frequent conferences with the officials of the Chicago, Milwaukee & St. Paul Railway Co., and had received assurances that the company was making surveys and taking soundings for the purpose of locating a place on the river where the bridge could be constructed. After the meeting at Presho two members of the board, Hon. George Rice and Dr. Smith, went to Chicago to interview the officials of the railway company, and received the same assurances in a more positive form.

Upon their return and after a considerable period of time had elapsed, the board, thinking the matter was not receiving the immediate attention of the railway company, referred the entire matter to the writer with instructions to take such steps as could be taken to bring about the construction of a new bridge. After some considerable investigation the writer instituted in the supreme court of this State a proceeding in mandamus to compel the construction of the bridge. After the petition was filed, however, we discovered that the State court could do nothing with it, and that the State could do nothing with it; that the construction of this bridge was under the supervision of the Secretary of War and that an act of Congress was necessary to authorize its construction, and the present pontoon bridge was constructed under an act of Congress. If we had been able to locate the Federal statutes before filing the petition for a writ of mandamus, of course it would never have been filed, as we would have realized at the outset that the State courts could not remedy the matter in any respect. If you desire we can send a copy of our petition for the peremptory writ of mandamus. Perhaps you would sooner, however, obtain statements from the Hon. George Rice and the commissioners who were then in office. Any information which we can furnish to you, or any assistance we can render, will be furnished and rendered cheerfully, as we shall be only too pleased to see this situation remedied.

Very truly, yours,

P. W. DOUGHERTY,
Commissioner.

Resolutions.

To the Senate and House of Representatives of the Congress of the United States:

Whereas the last session of the South Dakota Legislature adopted house joint resolution No. 6, memorializing Congress and our Senators and Representatives in Congress to use all honorable means at their command to compel the Chicago, Milwaukee & St. Paul Railway Co. to construct a permanent railway bridge across the Missouri River at the city of Chamberlain; and

Whereas the conditions stated in said joint resolution have existed for the past 10 years and continue to exist; and

Whereas, pursuant to the instructions of said joint resolution, the Representative from the third congressional district of this State, Hon. HARRY L. GANDY, has introduced in the House of Representatives a bill which, if it becomes a law, will compel the Chicago, Milwaukee & St. Paul Railway Co. to commence actual construction of a permanent bridge across the Missouri River between the countries of Brule and Lyman at some point at or near the city of Chamberlain, S. Dak., within one year from date of its passage and approval; and

Whereas the welfare and development of this section of the State is dependent to a large extent upon the erection of such a bridge: Therefore be it

Resolved by the citizens of Vivian, S. Dak., That the Senate and House of Representatives of Congress be, and are hereby, urged to take prompt action upon said bill and pass it at the earliest possible moment; and be it further

Resolved, That a copy of this resolution be sent to the Senate and House of Representatives of Congress by the secretary of the Vivian Commercial Club.

We certify that the foregoing resolution was adopted by the citizens of Vivian, S. Dak., this 26th day of February, 1916.

VIVIAN COMMERCIAL CLUB,
By F. E. BROWN, President.
By E. C. HALL, Secretary.

Similar resolutions were adopted by other civic and commercial organizations, as follows:

The following letter, under date of June 15, 1915, from a large packing house at Sioux Falls to a customer on the Black Hills line of the Milwaukee, together with the affidavit attached, is evidence of what happens to express shipments when the bridge is out of commission, and the other affidavits speak specifically of the situation that I have referred to as dangerous and unusual:

SIOUX FALLS, S. DAK.,
June 15, 1915.

Mr. CARL KETTLESON,
Vivian, S. Dak.

DEAR SIR: We have been advised by the railroad company that the bridge at Chamberlain is again out of order. We had your merchandise over at the express company yesterday and they refused same, owing to the fact that they could not handle it. We are, however, holding your order for first shipment that the railroad will accept, and until instructed otherwise by you we will ship same.

We trust that this will not inconvenience you.

Yours, truly,

JOHN J. MORRELL & CO.

STATE OF SOUTH DAKOTA,
County of Lyman, ss:

Carl Kettleson, upon his oath, deposes and says that the above is a letter received by him June 17, 1915, and refers to an order of meats which were ordered by him to supply his trade. As a result of the delay in receiving the shipment referred to above he was unable to fill his orders, which resulted in a loss of business and a further loss of money. Mr. Kettleson further states that the bridge referred to is the pile bridge across the Missouri River at Chamberlain and that said bridge was not rebuilt until June 25, 1915, when the first train crossed it—it being the first train to cross the Missouri River between June 7 and June 25, 1915. Mr. Kettleson further states that from one to four times each year there is a delay in all shipments of freight and express between points east and west of the Missouri River, caused by the pile bridge across said river being out of commission, and as a result of said delays his business decreases with a money loss to himself.

Signed this 21st day of March, 1916.

CARL KETTLESON.

Personally appeared before me, E. C. Hall, a notary public, Carl Kettleson, who signed the foregoing affidavit.

[SEAL.] E. C. HALL, Notary Public.

AFFIDAVIT.

STATE OF SOUTH DAKOTA,
County of Lyman, ss:

L. Lytle, upon his oath, deposes and says that he is a resident of Sioux City, Iowa, and that he left said city Tuesday morning, March 21, 1916, taking the Chicago, Milwaukee & St. Paul Railway train for Vermillion, S. Dak., where he left said train and remained until about the hour of 8.30 p. m., March 21, when he boarded the Chicago, Milwaukee & St. Paul Railway train for Vivian, S. Dak. He further states that he entered the sleeping car on said train and purchased a berth to Chamberlain, S. Dak., and that he arrived in the said city of Chamberlain, S. Dak., on the morning of March 22, 1916, at about the hour of 4 o'clock a. m. He states that he remained in said sleeping car until about the hour of 7 o'clock a. m., intending to take the ferry across the Missouri River and continue his journey to Vivian, S. Dak., his destination. Upon leaving the sleeper he was informed that on account of the flowing ice in the Missouri River it would be impossible to cross said river and that he would have to wait in the city of Chamberlain until said crossing could be made. He further states that about the hour of 5 o'clock p. m., March 22, 1916, he was transferred across the Missouri River by ferry and then walked about one-half mile in the mud to the Chicago, Milwaukee & St. Paul Railway track where he boarded the train and from that point was transported to the city of Oacoma, S. Dak., where he left the train as it stopped there for the night. He states that he staid at the hotel in said city of Oacoma until the morning of March 23, 1916, and at about the hour of 7 o'clock a. m. he boarded the train and reached his destination, Vivian, S. Dak., at about the hour of 9 o'clock a. m.—about 24 hours later than he would have arrived there had he come right through without the delay mentioned above at Chamberlain. He further states that the delay was caused by the Chicago, Milwaukee & St. Paul Railway Co. bridge across the Missouri River being destroyed by the floating ice making it necessary for said railroad company to transfer all passengers, mail, and express by ferry, and that on March 22 the said railroad company was unable to operate the ferry because of the floating ice and that said delay caused him a great deal of inconvenience, expense, and loss of valuable time. He further states that there were 12 other people who were caused the same inconvienience, expense, and loss of time as he was.

AFFIDAVIT.

I, N. J. Thomson, being first duly sworn, depose and say that I have been a resident of Presho, Lyman County, S. Dak., for the past six years engaged in the mercantile business, during which time I have caused to be shipped from points east of the Missouri River to Presho, S. Dak., more than $250,000 worth of merchandise, live stock, and chattles. The Chicago, Milwaukee & St. Paul Railway's bridge at Chamberlain has been a source of trouble, loss of money, annoyance, and inconvenience by its being swept away by high water, thereby delaying shipments in some instances three weeks and having been forced to cross at different times in boats, being without United States mail for days at a time.

I, P. S. Chapman, manager of the James A. Smith Lumber Co., being first duly sworn, depose and say that I have been a resident of Presho, S. Dak., the past eight years and have received a great many cars of coal and lumber each year. I have suffered numerous delays of shipments occasioned by Chicago, Milwaukee & St. Paul Railway's bridge at Chamberlain being impassable, making it very inconvenient to keep a supply to handle our trade. I consider this temporary bridge at Chamberlain the greatest drawback to the development of our country.

I, Patrick J. Sweeney, of Sweeney, S. Dak., being first duly sworn, depose and say that I am interested in the store conducted at Sweeney, S. Dak., and in such capacity receive considerable freight from points east of the Missouri River, the same being billed to Presho, S. Dak., and that during the period from the year 1906 to the year 1916 there has not been a year in which the temporary bridge of the Chicago, Milwaukee & St. Paul Railway Co. at Chamberlain, S. Dak., has not been impassable, and in each of those years it has been impassable for at least one period and from that to six periods, each period covering from 1 to 10 days.

That during such times it has been impossible to receive freight from points east of the Missouri River, and it has been impossible at such times to bill freight east from the town of Presho to points east of the Missouri River.

That as a result of the service of said railroad company a considerable financial loss has been suffered and is being suffered from time to time now.

Affiant further states that in addition to said financial loss he has been greatly inconvenienced by said service and has been compelled to make various trips from Sweeney to Presho, S. Dak., without result, for the reason that freight expected did not arrive on account of being delayed at the Missouri River.

I, A. L. Walker, being first duly sworn, depose and say that I am a farmer and stockman living near the town of Presho, S. Dak., and have resided in Lyman County, S. Dak., for the last 10 years; that during said time I have been caused great expense and annoyance by reason of the unsatisfactory service given by the Chicago, Milwaukee & St. Paul Railway Co. on account of the temporary wooden bridge spanning the Misssouri River at Chamberlain, S. Dak. At various times stock shipped by me has been delayed by reason of said bridge, my mail has been delayed, and at various times passenger traffic has been discontinued for several days at a time on account of not being able to cross said bridge. These delays have happened every year since I have resided in Lyman County, from three to five times. And by reason thereof I have suffered great damage and inconvenience as aforesaid.

I, W. E. Lewis, being first duly sworn, depose and say that I have been a resident of Presho, S. Dak., for the last four years, and during that time have been engaged in the buying and selling of stock; that during that time I have shipped via Chicago, Milwaukee & St. Paul Railway a considerable number of cars of stock to and from Presho, S. Dak., and that the temporary bridge of said railroad spanning the Misssouri River at Chamberlain, S. Dak., has been a source of great annoyance and expense to me by reason of the fact that at various times of the year it has been impossible to make the crossing on account of the condition of said bridge rendering a passage across it impossible or dangerous. On various occasions this has caused considerable delay, and in many cases it has necessitated the unloading and feeding of stock for several days at a time. The lack of proper crossing having caused me a considerable financial loss at various times, as well as being a considerable source of annoyance and trouble.

Affiant further says that he is the manager of a department store in said town of Oacoma, handling a general line of groceries, dry goods, and hardware, which business affiant has conducted in said town for the past seven years.

Affiant further says that there has always been two periods of each year when the trestle bridge used by the above-mentioned railway company in crossing the Missouri River would be taken out by ice or high water, so as to render it useless for traffic by the railway company, and that at such times said bridge would be out of commission for periods of from two to four weeks. During this time it would be and always has been impossible for affiant to secure shipments of goods for his store unless such goods were shipped by express at a high rate or shipped in a roundabout way to Rapid City by freight, and then back to affiant at Oacoma, S. Dak.; that such shipping always caused a delay of from two to three weeks and was a source of much expense and inconvenience to both affiant and the trade which he served in his community. Affiant further says that during the periods when the said bridge would be out of commission as above mentioned it was impossible for him to supply his trade with green groceries or perishable articles, unless such articles were shipped by express, and then at a high rate, and with damage from handling.

F. I. Sheffer, being first duly sworn, says, on his oath, that he is a resident of the town of Oacoma, in Lyman County, S. Dak., and that said town is situated on the west side of the Missouri River, on the Black Hills division of the Chicago, Milwaukee & St. Paul Railway Co. Affiant further states that he is the owner and proprietor of a general store in said town, and has been for a number of years, handling groceries, dry goods, and produce.

Affiant further states that during each year there have been at least two occasions when the trestle bridge used by the above-mentioned railway company in crossing the Missouri River at Chamberlain, S. Dak., would be swept out by ice or high water, so as to render the same useless and requiring a ferryboat for making crossing of the river at this point. During such periods it would be impossible for affiant to get freight shipments to his store except by roundabout shipments to Rapid City and back to Oacoma, necessitating an extra shipment of about 400 miles, and usually causing a delay of two to four weeks.

Affiant says that in the year 1914 he bought a large stock of Christmas goods in ample time for shipment to him from St. Joseph, Mo., so as to arrive at affiant's store by the 1st of December, to be sold by affiant for his Christmas trade during the month of December; that said goods arrived at the Chamberlain side of the Missouri River at a time when the said trestle bridge was out, and it was then necessary for affiant to either have said goods shipped back or to wait until the said bridge was repaired; that by reason of this delay the said goods did not reach affiant's store until noon of Christmas Day, 1914, at time too late for affiant to sell said goods or use them at all during that year; that affiant thereby lost the benefit of his entire Christmas trade for the year 1914, which was a considerable loss to this affiant.

Affiant says also that in connection with his store he purchased cream and other produce from the farmers and stockmen who traded with him at Oacoma, and then shipped such cream and other produce on to commission firms or creameries in the cities of Sioux City, Iowa, or Omaha, Nebr.; that owing to the uncertainty of crossing of the Missouri River at the two periods of the year when the bridge usually went out, affiant was obliged to either refuse to buy produce at those periods or else assume a large risk of having a heavy loss from such produce remaining on his hands or spoiling, all of which was a serious impediment to affiant's business and the welfare of the various customers who depend upon selling their cream and produce to affiant.

That he is a resident of Oacoma, S. Dak., a town on the west side of the Missouri River and on the Black Hills division of the Chicago, Milwaukee & St. Paul Railway Co.; that he has been a resident of such town ever since the said railroad was constructed through it.

That he is engaged in the business of conducting a general store and butcher shop, and also buying live stock and other farm produce, and has been in such business for the past eight years in the town of Oacoma.

That since affiant has been in business as above mentioned there have been periods from two to four times in each year when the trestle bridge maintained by the above-mentioned railway company across the Missouri River at Chamberlain, S. Dak., would be swept out by high water or ice, so as to render it impassable and useless for traffic of any kind.

That during such periods it would be impossible for affiant to secure shipments of any freight either to or from his store, so that affiant's business of general storekeeping and buying and selling produce was seriously damaged. At such times it would be necessary for affiant to have any freight that he might require sent around by Rapid City, S. Dak., which always occasioned a delay of from three to four weeks in receiving goods ordered by affiant.

That during all the time that affiant has been engaged in business as above mentioned he has bought and shipped a large quantity of hogs each year from the producers in his vicinity, shipping said hogs to Sioux City or Omaha and other points across the Missouri River. At various and numerous times affiant has purchased a large quantity of hogs and had them in the stockyards ready for shipment when the bridge above mentioned would be taken out and affiant would thereby suffer considerable loss from having to feed said hogs and hold them over in the yards, where they would shrink and lose weight; and on account of the uncertainty of being able to ship stock at periods when the bridge was liable to go out affiant would have to refrain from buying any stock for a long time before such periods, and his business was thereby greatly damaged and the convenience of his customers seriously impeded, so that such customers were in the habit of selling their stock to buyers who were shipping over the railroads which were north or south of affiant's territory; all of which was a loss to both the producers and to this affiant and a serious impediment to the advancement of agriculture and stock raising in affiant's vicinity.

That for a time affiant engaged in the business of buying and shipping cream from the producers in his vicinity, shipping such cream to Sioux City, Omaha, and other points across the Missouri River from affiant; but the uncertainty of being able to make shipments across the Missouri River rendered it impossible for affiant to maintain a continuous market throughout the whole year for such cream, and without such continuous market it was impossible for affiant to have and hold much patronage in the cream business, and so during the past three or four years affiant has been compelled to discontinue the purchase of cream, all of which is a serious damage to affiant's business and to the convenience of the producers in and around Oacoma, S. Dak., and a constant impediment to the advancement of dairying in and around Oacoma, S. Dak., and the territory tributary thereto.

AFFIDAVIT.

STATE OF SOUTH DAKOTA,
County of Lyman, ss:

M. Q. Sharpe, being first duly sworn, says on his oath:

That he is a resident of Oacoma, S. Dak., which town is on the Black Hills division of the Chicago, Milwaukee & St. Paul Railway Co. That affiant has been a resident of such town for the past five years, and frequently travels by foot and by train between the towns of Oacoma and Chamberlain, S. Dak., a distance of about 4 miles, and knows something of the conditions in connection with the operation and maintenance of a certain trestle bridge across the Missouri River at said place by the above-mentioned railway company.

That the channel of the said river is about 1,640 feet wide at the point where this bridge crosses it, and the said bridge is constructed for the most part of piling from 40 to 60 feet long and 12 to 16 inches in diameter at the large end, driven into the river bottom, and cross-braced with heavy plank and with wooden beams, stringers, and ties, and steel rails making the roadbed upon the top of these piles, there being about six piling in each bent or station of the said bridge. A part of the span of the river is made by a floating bridge with a trestle constructed upon it, which bridge is arranged so that it can be floated in or out of position with the remainder of the bridge, thus allowing vessels to pass up or down the river.

That during the month of June in each year there is always a flood stage of the Missouri River at this place, and much débris comes down the river, which lodges against the piling of the said bridge and takes it from place and usually entirely sweeps it out and down the river.

That in the early spring of each year the ice in the Missouri River breaks up and comes floating down and against the said bridge and takes it out of place and down the river.

That it has always been the practice of the above-mentioned railway company to run its passenger trains across the said bridge just as long as it considered the said bridge safe in the June and spring periods of the year, above mentioned. Affiant remembers a time in the year 1915 when a passenger train was run across the said bridge in the morning and the ice took the said bridge out of the river in the afternoon of the same day. Affiant verily believes that the only method which the said railway company has of ascertaining the strength of the ice in the early spring period of each year is by watching the bulge in the ice caused by water flowing under it, and that when the bulge reaches a certain stage they consider that the river is likely to break up, and are more careful about running trains across the river at that time. Affiant further states, on belief, that no test is made of the thickness or strength of the ice around the said bridge at such times, and that the matter of telling at what particular day or hour the said river will break up is largely a matter of estimate, and that it is just as probable that the ice will break up at some time when a train is crossing the said bridge, and thereby precipitate the said train in the river and kill or injure the passengers therein.

That when the river is flooded in the month of June of each year it is largely a matter of estimate in telling whether the bridge will stand the strain of the waters and débris against it or not, and that it is just as probable that the bridge would be taken out when there is a passenger train upon it as when there is not.

That the ice which comes down the river in the early spring is usually from 20 to 30 inches thick and the cakes are in area from 10 square feet to 500 or 600 square feet, and if the ice should break up in the river while a train was upon the said bridge it would be almost certain to take the bridge out just as soon as the ice could begin to move and before a train could be taken off of the said bridge.

Affiant verily believes that the said bridge is an instrument of danger to the public at the periods above mentioned, and that it should be replaced by a new bridge of permanent construction, or its use prohibited by statute during the periods above mentioned.

[SEAL.] O. E. A. THORSON,
Notary Public, Lyman County, S. Dak.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. Is there anything left of the temporary bridge that would tend to obstruct navigation?

Mr. GANDY. No, sir; not at this time; and, furthermore, the railroad company intends to build a permanent structure where this is.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. To remove what is left of the old bridge and what would be an obstruction.

Mr. ADAMSON. The language takes a little different form; they are authorized to maintain it until finished, and that implies that the obstruction will cease then.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from South Dakota asks unanimous consent to extend his remarks in the RECORD on the bill. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. DILLON. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the RECORD on this bill.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from South Dakota [Mr. DILLON]?

There was no objection.

The SPEAKER. The question is on the engrossment and third reading of the bill.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, was read the third time, and passed.

On motion of Mr. ADAMSON, a motion to reconsider the vote whereby the bill was passed was laid on the table.

LEASE OF ALLOTTED INDIAN ARID LANDS.

The next businss on the Calendar for Unanimous Consent was the bill (H. R. 6782) providing for the leasing of arid lands which are irrigable belonging to Indian allottees, and fixing the maximum time for which such leases may run.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

Mr. MANN. Let the bill be read.

The Clerk read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That whenever it shall be made to appear to the Secretary of the Interior that, by reason of age, disability, or inability, any allottee of Indian lands within the United States which the Secretary may decide are arid but irrigable can not personally occupy or improve his allotment, or any part thereof, the same, or any part thereof, may be leased upon such terms, regulations, and conditions as shall be prescribed by the Secretary for a term not exceeding 10 years, for farming, gardening, or fruit-growing purposes only.

With the following committee amendment:

Amend the bill by striking out all after the enacting clause and insert in lieu thereof the following:

"That whenever it shall appear to the satisfaction of the Secretary of the Interior that the allotted lands of any Indian are arid but susceptible of irrigation, and that the allottee by reason of age or other disability can not personally occupy or improve his allotment, or any portion thereof, such lands or such portion thereof may be leased for a period not exceeding 10 years, under such terms, rules, and regulations as may be prescribed by the Secretary of the Interior."

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. Reserving the right to object, I would like to have some explanation of the bill.

Mr. NORTON. Mr. Speaker, this is a bill which proposes to grant to the Secretary of the Interior the right to lease for a period of 10 years arid lands belonging to Indians who are unable to work the land themselves. It is found on irrigation projects covering Indian lands that there are cases where old Indians are unable to work their allotments, and it is now under existing law permissible for the Secretary to lease the lands for a period of one year.

Mr. MANN. Five years, under existing law.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. Who is the beneficiary of the lease?

Mr. NORTON. The Indian.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. Not the department, but the Indian?

Mr. NORTON. Certainly; the Indian is the beneficiary.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. It is proposed by the bill that the department shall make the regulations covering the leasing, and that whatever is derived from the lease shall go to the Indian?

Mr. NORTON. Yes; the purpose of this legislation is to permit the department to lease the land for 10 years. As the law is now it is impossible to get anyone to make a lease on so short a period and go onto the land and make the improvements necessary to cultivate it.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. What is the period under existing law?

Mr. NORTON. I had in mind it was one year. It may be five years.

Mr. MANN. It is five years; but they say there are other leases that can be made for a longer period, and in some cases they are hampered in making leases of Indian allotted lands.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. And the purpose of this bill is to extend the time?

Mr. NORTON. Yes; so that these lands, that would otherwise be unimproved, may be improved and kept in cultivation.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. Can the gentleman give us any special instances showing the necessity for this kind of legislation?

Mr. NORTON. On some of these Indian irrigation projects it is found that Indians, on account of old age or other disability, are unable to improve and cultivate their allotment. In such cases it is found impossible to get anyone to lease the land for as short a period as that to which the present law limits these leases.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. What is the reason for that? Is that due to the lack of energy, or is it due to the fact that you have to wait a period of years for the fruition of whatever you put in the ground?

Mr. NORTON. It is due chiefly to the amount of investment that is required to be put into ditches and other improvements on the land in order to get the land in condition for cultivation and for producing crops.

Mr. MANN. The land has to be cleared.

Mr. NORTON. Yes.

Mr. MANN. And that is no small job.

Mr. NORTON. A sufficient return to justify leasing can not ordinarily be secured from irrigated land during a lease period of five years. Experience is to the effect that only a sufficient return to justify leasing can be secured if the lease is made for a period of at least 10 years. That is the sum and substance of the desire for this legislation.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. Suppose some of this land being cleared and irrigated should be used by the Indian or the occupant of the land for the cultivation of fruit trees, how long would it take for a tree to come into fruition?

Mr. NORTON. It would depend upon the kind of tree planted. If it was an oak tree, it would take probably a hundred years. If an apple tree, five years or six years.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. I am quite sure they do not plant oak trees in this semiarid territory. Take a pear tree or an apple tree.

Mr. NORTON. About five or six years.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. Therefore, the idea is that by extending the time you give the lessee an opportunity to have his tree come to fruition.

Mr. NORTON. The gentleman is correct in his conclusion.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the consideration of the bill?

There was no objection.

The SPEAKER. This bill is on the Union Calendar.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that the bill be considered in the House as in Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

The SPEAKER. The question is on the committee amendment, which is in the nature of a substitute.

The committee amendment was agreed to.

The bill as amended was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, was read the third time, and passed.

On motion of Mr. NORTON, a motion to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed was laid on the table.

ENLARGED HOMESTEADS.

The next business on the Calendar for Unanimous Consent was the bill (H. R. 8654) to amend an act entitled "An act to provide for an enlarged homestead."

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. Mr. Speaker, I would like to have the bill read.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the bill.

The Clerk read as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That section 3 of the act entitled "An act to provide for an enlarged homestead," approved February 19, 1909, and of an act entitled "An act to provide for an enlarged homestead," approved June 17, 1910, as amended by an act approved February 11, 1913, and as amended by an act approved March 3, 1915, be, and the same is hereby, amended to read as follows:

"SEC. 3. That any person who has made or shall make homestead entry of the character herein described and who has not submitted final proof thereon, or who, having submitted final proof, still owns and occupies the land thus entered, shall have the right to enter public lands, subject to the provisions of this act, contiguous to his first entry, which shall not, together with the original entry, exceed 320 acres: Provided, That if there be no vacant land of this character contiguous to his original entry such person may enter as such additional entry other land situated in the land district where such former entry was made: Provided, That the land originally entered and that covered by the additional entry shall have first been designated as subject to this act, as provided by section 1 hereof."

With the following committee amendment:

Strike out all after the enacting clause and insert:

"That the act entitled 'An act to provide for an enlarged homestead,' approved February 19, 1909, be amended by adding thereto an additional section to be known as section 7:

"'SEC. 7. That any person who has made or shall make homestead entry of less than 320 acres of land of the character herein described, and who shall have submitted final proof thereon, shall have the right to enter public lands subject to the provisions of this act, not contiguous to his first entry, which shall not with the original entry exceed 320 acres: Provided, That the land originally entered and that covered by the additional entry shall first have been designated as subject to this act as provided by section 1 thereof: Provided further, That in no case shall patent issue for the land covered by such additional entry until the person making same shall have actually and in conformity with the homestead laws resided upon and cultivated the lands so additionally entered, and otherwise complied with such laws: And provided further, That this section shall not be construed as affecting any rights as to location of soldiers' additional homesteads under section 2306 of the Revised Statutes.'"

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. Reserving the right to object, I think this bill should be explained, and I shall ask the gentleman from Colorado [Mr. TIMBERLAKE] to tell us what it means. Does this confer the right to the holder of 320 acres to take an additional 320 acres?

Mr. TIMBERLAKE. Mr. Speaker, I would say to the gentleman from Pennsylvania that it does not so provide. It provides that a person who has made proof of 160 acres shall be privileged to take up to 320 acres additional.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. Provided it is not contiguous to his original 160 acres?

Mr. TIMBERLAKE. Provided it is not contiguous. The act of March 4 last provided he could do this where the lands were contiguous, but in many cases people were deprived of that because of the fact that there were no contiguous lands.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. And a man can take as high as 320 acres under this bill?

Mr. TIMBERLAKE. Oh, no; only 160 acres.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. But he has the right to get 160 acres additional, as I understand it.

Mr. MANN. He can take more than 160 acres under this bill. He can run his allotment up to 320 acres, including what he had before, if it be only 40 acres.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. What is the limit he can now secure under this?

Mr. TIMBERLAKE. Three hundred and twenty acres.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. That is as far as he can go?

Mr. TIMBERLAKE. Yes.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears no objection. This bill is on the Union Calendar.

Mr. TIMBERLAKE. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that the bill be considered in the House as in the Committee of the Whole.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

The SPEAKER. The question is on agreeing to the substitute.

The substitute was agreed to.

The bill as amended was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, was read the third time, and passed.

The title was amended so as to read: "A bill to amend an act entitled 'An act to provide for an enlarged homestead,' approved February 19, 1909, by adding a new section to be known as section 7."

On motion of Mr. TIMBERLAKE, a motion to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed was laid on the table.

FRAUDULENT ENLISTMENTS.

The next business on the Calendar for Unanimous Consent was the bill (H. R. 7619) to repeal section 3 of section 1342 of the Revised Statutes of the United States, enacted July 27, 1892.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

Mr. GORDON. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that this bill may be passed over without prejudice.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Ohio asks unanimous consent that the bill be passed over without prejudice. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

SERVICE OF NAVY AND MARINE CORPS IN HAITI.

The next business on the Calendar for Unanimous Consent was the bill (H. R. 12835) to authorize and empower officers and enlisted men of the Navy and Marine Corps to serve under the Government of the Republic of Haiti, and for other purposes.

The SPEAKER pro tempore (Mr. GARNER). Is there objection to the consideration of this bill?

Mr. MANN. Mr. Speaker, I ask that the bill be read.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Clerk will read the bill.

The Clerk read as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the President of the United States be, and he is hereby, authorized, in his discretion, to detail to assist the Republic of Haiti such officers and enlisted men of the United States Navy and the United States Marine Corps as may be mutually agreed upon by him and the President of the Republic of Haiti: Provided, That the officers and enlisted men so detailed be, and they are hereby, authorized to accept from the Government of Haiti the said employment with compensation and emoluments from the said Government of Haiti.

SEC. 2. That to insure the continuance of this work during such time as may be desirable, the President may have the power of substitution in the case of the termination of the detail of any officer or enlisted man for any cause: Provided, That during the continuance of such details the officers and enlisted men shall continue to receive the pay and allowances of their ranks or ratings in the Navy or Marine Corps.

SEC. 3. That the following increase in the United States Marine Corps be, and the same is hereby, authorized: Two majors, 12 captains, 18 first lieutenants, 2 assistant quartermasters with the rank of captain, 1 assistant paymaster with the rank of captain, 5 quartermaster sergeants, 5 first sergeants, 5 gunnery sergeants, and 11 sergeants.

SEC. 4. That the following increase in the United States Navy be, and the same is hereby, authorized: One surgeon, 2 passed assistant surgeons, 5 hospital stewards, and 10 hospital apprentices, first class.

SEC. 5. That officers and enlisted men of the Navy and Marine Corps detailed for duty to assist the Republic of Haiti shall be entitled to the same credit for such service, for longevity, retirement, foreign service, pay, and for all other purposes, that they would receive if they were serving with the Navy or with the Marine Corps.

With the following committee amendment:

Page 2, line 3, after the word "Haiti," insert the words "subject to the approval of the President of the United States."

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection?

Mr. MCLAUGHLIN. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, I do not see the author of the bill here.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Speaker, I understand the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. PADGETT] will be here in a moment; and while we are waiting for him I desire to state that I looked up this bill endeavoring to get some information concerning it, and learned, among other things, that the son of Representative BUTLER, Smedley Butler, who is in the Marine Corps, was, I think, stated to be the officer in charge of the constabulary in Haiti. I therefore asked Representative BUTLER to get his son, whom I knew when he was a boy, to make me a statement concerning this so that I would know something about it. I ask to have a letter from Smedley Butler read for the information of the House. He is a major, is he not?

Mr. PADGETT. Yes; Maj. Butler.

The SPEAKER pro tempore (Mr. GARNER). Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Illinois? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

The Clerk read as follows:

MARINE BARRACKS,
Navy Yard, Philadelphia, Pa., April 4, 1916.

MY DEAR MR. MANN: Father has just told me that you wished some information about the Haitian Constabulary, of which I am at present acting as chief. While I would very much rather have an opportunity to talk to you, I am due to return to Haiti in a short time, and father thinks perhaps you will be too busy to see me and that this letter will serve the purpose.

We have enlisted, equipped, and fairly well drilled at the present time about 2,000 Haitians, and are garrisoning and maintaining order in the whole of Haiti. At present commissioned and noncommissioned officers and privates of marines are assisting the constabulary by lending their services as officers thereof. The duty is military, and we think that officers who have military training are absolutely necessary for the success of the constabulary. In order to accomplish this there is a bill before the House of Representatives authorizing officers of the Navy and Marine Corps to serve in the constabulary under the Haitian Government. We have tried Haitian lieutenants, but have found them to be a failure by actual experience, and I believe that it will be necessary for a time to have all of the officers of this force Americans. Under the leadership of our marines the constabularymen have put down disturbances in Haiti, showing that they will make very reliable, good policemen if officered by Americans.

Aside from military and police duties, our marines, acting as Haitian officers, are doing everything in their power to assist the native population in rebuilding their roads, their irrigation works, their bridges, to clean up their towns, and generally better the condition of the people at large, by doing which we hope to absolutely do away with the desire on the part of any Haitian to revolt against his Government. So far we have been very successful in this line, and the vast majority of the people are on our side because of our honesty and squareness. The people have been much oppressed by their former dishonest officials through an illegal squeeze system, which we have put an absolute stop to.

The treaty provides—and we hope it will come true—that in a few years all of us will be able to leave Haiti and the constabulary entirely officered by their own people, but at present, owing to their traditions and the previous bad government, we are certain that this is impracticable.

Haiti is a wonderful country and well worth saving. During the French occupation, which ended in 1804, it was enormously rich, but now, owing to the shiftlessness of its population and to the numerous revolutions, it has become extremely poor and is in an entirely undeveloped condition. With little labor and comparatively small expense, the French public works, to which was due in large measure the wealth of Hait under their rule, can be restored. In fact, we started on the 1st of February to do this. Hundreds of natives volunteered their services as laborers free of charge, provided American marines supervised the work, and all over Haiti to-day roads, bridges, irrigation work, telephone and telegraph lines are being restored.

The duty will be extremely hard and lonely, as single marines are at present living far in the interior, with no other white men, simply in command of small detachments of constabulary. There are many applications for these positions in the constabulary from among the members of the Marine Corps, who are now most enthusiastically serving with the constabulary in Haiti and doing splendid work, and it is hoped to get the very best material which the Marine Corps can furnish, as we feel that it is a matter of corps as well as national honor to assist the Haitians in getting on their feet.

I could write you pages, but father has cautioned me to make my letter short; but if there is any further information which you desire, if you will be kind enough to tell father to notify me, I will come immediately to Washington, at any time you say, for we "Haitians" want to get everybody we possibly can on our side of the "fence." I feel that all that is necessary is for our own people to realize what we are trying to do for this little Republic.

I had hoped while in Washington to get an opportunity to see Mrs. Mann, as it seems a long time since I have had that pleasure, but I have been so busy trying to help my little black fellows get on their feet that I have hardly had time to eat. Will you please give my very best to Mrs. Mann and James; and hoping that you will give me an opportunity to tell you more of Haiti, I am,

Very sincerely, yours, SMEDLEY D. BUTLER.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the consideration of the bill?

Mr. McLAUGHLIN. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, I wish to ask the chairman of the committee a question in regard to the compensation of these officers detailed to Haiti. The first section provides that the officers and enlisted men shall receive compensation and emolument from the Government of Haiti, and the proviso of section 2 provides that the compensation they are now receiving, or that they will be entitled to as officers and men of our Regular Army, shall also be paid.

Mr. PADGETT. They will receive their regular pay and allowances as officers of the Marine Corps and such additional pay and compensation as the Government of Haiti, subject to the approval of the President of the United States, may pay in addition to their regular pay. Taking these men down there and keeping them there is extra duty, and under those conditions we allow the Government of Haiti, subject to the approval of the President of the United States, to pay them something additional.

Mr. McLAUGHLIN. Is there any testimony showing or indicating what compensation will be paid by the Haitian Government?

Mr. PADGETT. No, sir; not as to the details of it; simply a proviso that the President of the United States may allow them to receive such additional pay as he may approve.

Mr. McLAUGHLIN. Well, is not it true that when there have been similar details and foreign Governments have undertaken to pay the men detailed from our Army or Navy that the compensation has been very liberal—even larger than the amount received for their work in this country?

Mr. PADGETT. We have no information on that subject and I am not prepared to say.

Mr. McLAUGHLIN. It seems to me, Mr. Speaker, when these men are relieved altogether of duty in the United States and the duty of compensating them is assumed by the Haitian Government, that this Government ought to be relieved for the time being of the burden of maintaining and paying them.

Mr. PADGETT. They are under our control and still in our line of service, and I think they ought to have their pay; and while we thought they should be allowed some extra pay the committee thought the President of the United States should have the advising and regulation of it.

Mr. McLAUGHLIN. There is no testimony whatever as to what the amount paid by the Haitian Government will likely be?

Mr. PADGETT. No, sir; because we do not know what it would be, and we have no way of ascertaining what the amount would be; but we fixed it so that the President should approve whatever amount should be paid.

Mr. MANN. I think we can assume it will not be very high?

Mr. McLAUGHLIN. Why?

Mr. MANN. Because they will not have the money.

Mr. ROBERTS of Massachusetts. Haiti is bankrupt.

Mr. MANN. I have a copy of the treaty, which I am going to ask to put in the RECORD. Under the treaty we are to have a general receiver and financial adviser who are to handle the funds. A part of the funds are used for governmental expenses, maintenance of the constabulary, and so forth, and then they hope to be able to take care of some indebtedness outstanding. I do not think the amount is going to be so large that they are likely to get too much pay. The same thought occurred to me that did to the gentleman in regard to the cost, as it naturally excites wonder.

Mr. PADGETT. We thought it wise to put a provision in that the President of the United States should supervise and approve before they should receive any amount.

Mr. McLAUGHLIN. Is it the opinion of the committee that the service in Haiti will be disagreeable and hazardous and ought to be better paid than service in the United States?

Mr. PADGETT. I think so; yes, sir.

Mr. MANN. As indicated by the letter from Maj. Butler, many of these officers will be out in the country in charge of colored constabulary, with no other white persons around, and I presume it would be fair to give them a little extra pay. The basis of the whole thing, outside of maintaining order, I presume, is article 4 of the treaty which provides that—

> Upon the appointment of the financial adviser, the Government of the Republic of Haiti, in cooperation with the financial adviser, shall collate, classify, arrange, and make full statement of all the debts of the Republic, the amounts, character, maturity, and condition thereof, and of the interest accruing and the sinking fund requisite to their final discharge.

I expect that is the reason they are in there, and being in there they want to maintain order and see if they can reestablish working conditions.

Mr. PADGETT. We thought it wise to establish under our own military adminstration the police organization called the "gendarmerie."

Mr. McLAUGHLIN. Will these men under the terms of their enlistment be required to leave this country and take up this work without their consent?

Mr. PADGETT. I think so. I think the President has authority to send the marine to do any duty that the President feels comes within the province of his authority.

He has been sending them there a number of times—to Haiti and Nicaragua——

Mr. McLAUGHLIN. And Vera Cruz.

Mr. PADGETT. And other places heretofore; and I want to say that no marine has ever demurred or refused to go.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection?

Mr. FESS. Reserving the right to object, I wanted to ask what is the specific official relation of our Government to Haiti now?

Mr. PADGETT. There has been a treaty recently concluded between the Republic of Haiti and our country which has been ratified by the Senate, and the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MANN] is going to put a copy of the treaty in the RECORD, in which we have undertaken to manage their finances and to maintain order in the Government.

Mr. FESS. Does it do away with their autonomy at all?

Mr. PADGETT. No, sir. It leaves their Government intact. We are cooperating with that Government; and you will notice that the bill provides that the President of the Republic of Haiti may do so-and-so, and, with the approval of the President of the United States, they may receive additional compensation.

Mr. FESS. And these officers go in there through their invitation as well as our wish?

Mr. PADGETT. And with their cooperation.

Mr. HICKS. I would like to ask the gentleman what the status of these men is when they are detailed in that way?

Mr. PADGETT. They are under the control of the President.

Mr. HICKS. And not under the orders, at all, of the Haitian Government?

Mr. PADGETT. No, sir. They are controlled primarily by ourselves, and we would dictate and determine the policy and the conditions of their actions, but, of course, in carrying out their regulations the President of the Republic would be consulted and would have an official voice.

Mr. HICKS. But always under our control?

Mr. PADGETT. Always under our control.

Mr. HENSLEY. Reserving the right to object, as I understand the gentleman, he has not any definite idea with reference to the amount of increase that this bill will carry.

Mr. PADGETT. That the Haitian Government would pay?

Mr. HENSLEY. Yes.

Mr. PADGETT. It would be a matter of agreement between the President of the Republic of Haiti and the President of the United States.

Mr. HENSLEY. According to the wording of the bill, as I understand it, they receive not only their full pay for their services from this Government, but they receive in addition from the Haitian Government the same pay of those rendering service of that character from that Government?

Mr. PADGETT. No, sir.

Mr. HENSLEY. Well, read the provisions in the bill.

Mr. PADGETT. It says:

That the officers and enlisted men so detailed be, and they are hereby, authorized to accept from the Government of Haiti the said employment, with compensation and emoluments from the said Government of Haiti, subject to the approval of the President of the United States.

Now, the Republic of Haiti might tender such additional compensation as it saw fit, but the President of the United States must approve. For instance, an enlisted man gets about $18 or $20 a month. He gets the same pay as a petty officer or an enlisted man in the Army of the United States. An enlisted man gets somewhere from $16 to $24 or $25 or $30, perhaps, according to the length of his enlistment, and he might be a petty officer and still be an enlisted man. Now, he would get a small pay. The President of the Republic of Haiti would be authorized to pay him such an additional amount as he saw fit, but which the President of the United States would approve.

Mr. HENSLEY. May I see the amended bill as you have it?

Mr. PADGETT. Yes, sir.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection?

Mr. HENSLEY. Just a moment, Mr. Speaker, please. It says:

That the officers and enlisted men so detailed be, and they are hereby, authorized to accept from the Government of Haiti the said employment with compensation and emoluments from the said Government of Haiti, subject to the approval of the President of the United States.

I can not understand that that means anything other than that they are to receive the same compensation from that Government that men rendering identical service there receive.

Mr. PADGETT. The President of the Republic of Haiti would tender them such as he saw proper, and he would take into consideration what they were receiving here, and submit it to the President of the United States, and the President would approve it if he saw proper.

Mr. HENSLEY. The wording of the first bill introduced, Mr. Speaker, clearly means to give these persons rendering service down there increased pay, and that increased pay to come from that Government.

Mr. PADGETT. How is that?

Mr. HENSLEY. The bill that you first introduced states that they are authorized to accept from the Republic of Haiti the emoluments of the position that they are holding. That is the first bill that you introduced. Now, why did you change it?

Mr. PADGETT. Simply because when I referred the matter to the Secretary of State and the Secretary of the Navy they recommended changes to put it into conformity with the treaty which had been ratified by the two Governments, and this bill as it is drawn and as reported is the draft of the bill recommended by the Secretary of State and the Secretary of the Navy by their joint conference, with the addition that the committee saw fit to put in it that the compensation should have the approval of the President of the United States, and not leave it alone to the Government of Haiti.

Mr. HENSLEY. Does the gentleman not believe that we should have some information as to this amount of increase which these men are to receive? I do not know anything about it; I have been under the impression that they should have increased pay, but should we not have some information with reference to how much that is going to be, and should not the money be paid to this Government from those to whom we are rendering that service rather than come both ways?

Mr. PADGETT. I think it is perfectly safe to leave the settlement of the amount and the details with the President of the United States, to be prescribed by regulations. I do not think we could say whether or not the enlisted men should receive $5 a month more at this point, or $10 a month more at that point, or that he should receive over here at this point, where it is more dangerous and more disagreeable, $12.50 a month or $16 a month. I think the President of the United States can prescribe, and can be safely left to determine those details.

Mr. HENSLEY. That is very well, but do you think that all such matters should be left with any individual officer, for him to fix the pay? Why should not the committee have called before them persons who are informed with reference to the service to be rendered by these people, so that the committee could recommend the increase and could have some information with reference to what the increase would be?

Mr. PADGETT. This provides that they shall receive pay from the Government of Haiti, and the Government of Haiti is the one to take the initiative in that, subject to the approval of the President of the United States.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman from Missouri yield for a moment?

Mr. HENSLEY. Yes.

Mr. MANN. The amount that is collected comes through the general receiver, so called. This Government named the general receiver and financial adviser under the President of Haiti. The money is first provided, subject to payment of the expenses of the office of the general receiver, including his employees, and so forth; and, second, subject to the interest and sinking fund of the public debt of Haiti, and then to payments to the constabulary, and then whatever remains to the Haitian Government is used for current expenses; so that I think it is not likely that they will be able to give exorbitant pay to the constabulary. They can not pay the constabulary anything until they have taken care of the interest and sinking fund on the public debt; and then after they pay the constabulary they will have to maintain the Government, and unless they raise more money than they have heretofore been raising—which I hardly think they will be able to do—they will not have a great sum of money to throw away.

Mr. HENSLEY. Let me ask the gentleman a question. We have men of the Marine Corps serving in other sections of the world, other foreign countries, have we not?

Mr. MANN. Yes; we have marines now in Nicaragua and in Haiti and in San Domingo and perhaps elsewhere.

Mr. HENSLEY. Has the gentleman any information as to whether those who are serving in those countries that he has just named receive additional pay, as this bill provides for those serving in Haiti?

Mr. MANN. I think not; but they do not serve individually. They serve collectively—a company of marines, or possibly a smaller number.

Mr. PADGETT. A detachment.

Mr. MANN. Yes. But the purpose here is to have these marines go in as officers of colored native constabulary companies, where in some cases they will be the only white persons in a locality at all. There will be no other marines there, unless it be a captain.

Mr. HENSLEY. Would not that be true in the Philippines and in Hawaii?

Mr. MANN. Oh, no; it is not true elsewhere where we have marines.

Mr. ROBERTS of Massachusetts. Nowhere else are our marines doing such work.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

Mr. SISSON. Reserving the right to object, Mr. Speaker, how does this affect the pay of the officers detailed or the enlisted men detailed out of our Treasury?

Mr. PADGETT. It does not change it at all.

Mr. SISSON. The service in the Tropics gives them the 20 per cent increased pay, does it not?

Mr. PADGETT. They do get that in the Marine Corps, in the case of enlisted men, who get 20 per cent for foreign-service pay and the officers 10 per cent additional.

Mr. SISSON. Is this considered foreign-service pay?

Mr. PADGETT. Yes; I believe so.

Mr. SISSON. So, in addition to the regular pay, they would get the tropical additional pay, and then whatever pay they could get out of the Hawaiian Government?

Mr. PADGETT. No; not the Hawaiian Government, but the Haitian Government, as the President of the United States would approve.

Mr. SISSON. I expect the President would not object to anything that the Haitian Government would give them.

Mr. PADGETT. I do not think he would object to any reasonable rate, because under the treaty we are administering the finances of Haiti, and the President would not permit our marines to receive unreasonable compensation to be taken out of the treasury of that Government, of whose finances we were the administrator.

Mr. SISSON. The Federal Government having assumed control of this situation, it will be morally bound for the payment of these joint obligations, will it not?

Mr. PADGETT. We do not assume to pay any of their debts. We assume to collect their revenues and faithfully to pay those revenues out.

Mr. SISSON. All of which is true. But we who have served any length of time in Congress know that whether the specific law grants it to them or not, if there is any failure of administration on the part of the Federal Government to get the amount of revenue that the Haitian Government ought to produce, all claims incurred thereby will necessarily come to Congress for payment.

Mr. PADGETT. I think not. I think the gentleman is assuming that Congress would undertake to pay the debts of the Republic of Haiti.

Mr. SISSON. That is not what I want the Federal Government ever to do indirectly, even to put itself in a place where in any sense of the word it would be morally responsible for it.

Mr. PADGETT. It would not be morally responsible.

Mr. SISSON. Why?

Mr. PADGETT. Simply because the Government is not guaranteeing the payment of the obligation. We are administering it and paying their money out wisely and properly, so far as received and collected.

Mr. SISSON. But we have virtually taken charge of the finances of their Government.

Mr. PADGETT. Yes; under a treaty that has been ratified.

Mr. SISSON. That is true; but having taken charge of the fiscal affairs of the Government, if there should be any mismanagement, if there were any money improperly expended, any shortages in revenue, or any impropriety in the manner in which the revenue is expended, why would we not then be putting ourselves in a position where, having assumed the control of it, we would be responsible for whatever resulted from it?

Mr. PADGETT. Those are matters that address themselves——

Mr. MANN. This bill does not touch that at all. A treaty has already been ratified by the Senate, though I believe it has not yet been proclaimed, under which on the nomination of the President there is appointed a general receiver and a financial adviser for the Haitian Government. That is provided for regardless of this bill. Now, one of the provisions of the treaty is that we may send officers there, or the President of Haiti may appoint officers to run the constabulary. That is all this bill involves. The President can not do it without the consent of Congress.

Mr. SISSON. What I know about the treaty is only what I have seen in the newspapers. I have not seen the treaty.

Mr. MANN. I propose to ask to put the treaty in the RECORD.

Mr. SISSON. That treaty, referred to by the gentleman from Illinois, provides virtually that the Government of the United States shall keep the peace there and endeavor to assist those people in establishing a stable government, I presume somewhat due to the fact that we are insisting upon the Monroe doctrine; and this being a part of the Western Hemisphere, it becomes our duty to maintain or assist in maintaining a stable government, with the consent of those people.

Mr. MANN. I suspect that has a good deal to do with it.

Mr. SISSON. All right. Now, this increases, to a certain extent, the liability of our Government—to what extent we can not tell from the face of this bill.

Mr. MANN. In what respect?

Mr. SISSON. For instance, the pay and the number of the constabulary.

Mr. MANN. My information—I will not say it is accurate—is that they expect to put about 35 officers down there from the Marine Corps.

Mr. SISSON. Only about 35?

Mr. MANN. Yes; and, of course, we pay their salaries.

Mr. SISSON. That comes out of our Treasury?

Mr. MANN. Yes; to that extent. We pay that sum of money for the purpose of having the opportunity of assisting to organize a stable government on the island of Haiti.

Mr. SISSON. Under that treaty or this bill, who selects the balance of the constabulary—the native constabulary?

Mr. PADGETT. The Haitian Government.

Mr. MANN. The treaty provides that—

> This constabulary shall be organized and officered by Americans, appointed by the President of Haiti upon nomination by the President of the United States. The Haitian Government shall clothe these officers with the proper and necessary authority and uphold them in the performance of their functions. These officers will be replaced by Haitians as they, by examination, conducted under direction of a board to be selected by the senior American officer of this constabulary and in the presence of a representative of the Haitian Government, are found to be qualified to assume such duties.

Mr. STEENERSON. Reserving the right to object, I should like to ask the chairman a question. The proviso on page 1 reads:

> Provided, That the officers and enlisted men so detailed be, and they are hereby, authorized to accept from the Government of Haiti the said employment with compensation and emoluments from the said Government of Haiti, subject to the approval of the President of the United States.

Now, the ordinary construction to be placed upon that language would be this: That these officers would be entitled to the same compensation and the same emoluments provided by our laws which they now receive, and later on in the bill it provides that they shall continue to receive compensation and emoluments from the Government of the United States. So is not the effect of this bill to give them double compensation and double emoluments?

Mr. PADGETT. No, sir.

Mr. STEENERSON. If so, it seems to me it would be a precedent that would be followed in similar cases in the future, and which could not very well be disregarded without a charge of discrimination.

Mr. MANN. If by the word "double" the gentleman means twice the compensation they now receive, it does not mean that, but it does mean pay from two sources.

Mr. STEENERSON. This bill does not say how much the compensation shall be that the Government of Haiti shall give nor what the emolument shall be, but it says the officers and enlisted men are authorized "said employment with compensation and emoluments." Now, "compensation and emoluments" necessarily means what they are now receiving. That would be a fair interpretation of the language.

Mr. PADGETT. No, sir; it means such as the Government of Haiti may pay and the President of the United States may approve.

Mr. STEENERSON. Such emoluments as the Government of Haiti may see fit to determine, subject to the approval of the President of the United States? Now, "subject to the approval of the President of the United States" does not relate to the amount of compensation or emoluments at all. It simply relates to this, that the Government of Haiti can not give the said emoluments and compensation unless the President approves; but the President is not given control of the amount at all, in the way this proviso is written.

Mr. PADGETT. Oh, yes; that is just what it does.

Mr. STEENERSON. I disagree with that construction.

Mr. PADGETT. It puts it in the power of the President of the United States to approve.

Mr. STEENERSON. Then why is it not stated in language that is plain and free from ambiguity? "Subject to the approval of the President of the United States." What is subject—the payment of the emoluments and compensation, which means the full compensation and full emoluments now prescribed?

Mr. PADGETT. Oh, no; not at all.

Mr. STEENERSON. All that the President is given authority to approve is whether they can accept employment with compensation and emoluments. The amount would be fixed by the other Government and they would be almost in honor bound to pay the same as prescribed by our laws. That is the way it seems to me.

Mr. PADGETT. Oh, no; I think not.

Mr. MANN. The gentleman can readily see that the President of the United States can refuse his approval of the right to receive anything unless the amount is satisfactory to the President.

Mr. STEENERSON. He can say whether or not they shall have compensation and emoluments, but the compensation and emoluments are those mentioned by our laws.

Mr. MANN. I think not. Our law would not govern the Republic of Haiti.

Mr. STEENERSON. Will the chairman of the committee say that that would not be the construction to be placed upon this?

Mr. PADGETT. I think it leaves the whole question of what they shall receive—how much, or whether they shall receive anything, much or little—to the President of the United States.

Mr. STEENERSON. I do not like to set my opinion up against that of the chairman of the committee, but it seems to me if you pass this bill you will find that these men will be entitled to the payment of the full amount from the Haitian Government and the full amount from this Government also.

Mr. PADGETT. How could we prescribe what the Haitian Government should pay?

Mr. STEENERSON. I do not say they should not have as much as that, but I hate to see this bill go through with a misunderstanding about this. If that is what we intend to do, we should say so in clear language.

Mr. PADGETT. We have no authority to prescribe how much the Haitian Government shall pay. They will determine for themselves what they will offer, and that will be submitted to the President of the United States for his approval or rejection, and he can state how much additional he will approve, and no more, and they can not receive any more.

Mr. STEENERSON. It seems to me that all we can do here is to say yes or no whether we shall pay them.

Mr. CALLAWAY. Mr. Speaker, have we passed the objecting stage?

The SPEAKER. No; we have not got to it. Is there objection?

Mr. CALLAWAY. I object.

Mr. PADGETT. Mr. Speaker, as this is suspension day, will the Chair entertain a motion to suspend the rules and pass the bill?

The SPEAKER. Not now.

Mr. PADGETT. I am engaged in trying to get the naval appropriation bill ready, and I have a meeting at 2 o'clock. I would be glad if the Speaker would entertain a motion to suspend the rules.

The SPEAKER. In regard to suspensions, after much controversy and thought, the Chair has finally concluded that on unanimous-consent day at about 3.30 or 4 o'clock in the afternoon he will recognize Members for a motion to suspend the rules, and not until then, unless it is a matter of prime importance and of a pressing nature.

Mr. PADGETT. Will the Chair recognize me at 4 o'clock this afternoon?

The SPEAKER. The Chair will recognize the gentleman third on that list.

Mr. PADGETT. I will be here.

THE INTERSTATE COMMERCE COMMISSION.

The next business on the Calendar for Unanimous Consent was the bill (H. R. 308) to amend an act to regulate commerce as amended, and for other purposes.

The Clerk read the bill as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That section 24 of an act entitled "An act to regulate commerce," approved February 4, 1887, as amended, be further amended to read as follows:

"SEC. 24. That the Interstate Commerce Commission is hereby enlarged so as to consist of nine members, with terms of seven years, and each shall receive $10,000 compensation annually. The qualifications of the members and the manner of the payment of their salaries shall be as already provided by law. Such enlargement of the commission shall be accomplished through appointment by the President, by and with the advice and consent of the Senate, of two additional Interstate Commerce Commissioners, one for a term expiring December 31, 1921, and one for a term expiring December 31, 1922. The terms of the present commissioners, or of any successor appointed to fill a vacancy caused by the death or resignation of any of the present commissioners, shall expire as heretofore provided by law. Their successors and the successors of the additional commissioners herein provided for shall be appointed for the full term of seven years, except that any person appointed to fill a vacancy shall be appointed only for the unexpired term of the commissioner whom he shall succeed. Not more than five commissioners shall be appointed from the same political party."

SEC. 2. That section 17 of said act, as amended, be further amended to read as follows:

"SEC. 17. That the commission may conduct its proceedings in such manner as will best conduce to the proper dispatch of business and to the ends of justice. The commission shall have an official seal, which shall be judicially noticed. Any member of the commission may administer oaths and affirmations and sign subpœnas. A majority of the commission shall constitute a quorum for the transaction of business, except as may be otherwise herein provided, but no commissioner shall participate in any hearing or proceeding in which he has any pecuniary interest. The commission may, from time to time, make or amend such general rules or orders as may be requisite for the order and regulation of proceedings before it, or before any division of the commission, including forms of notices and the the service thereof, which shall conform, as nearly as may be, to those in use in the courts of the United States. Any party may appear before the commission or any division thereof and be heard in person or by attorney. Every vote and official act of the commission, or of any division thereof, shall be entered of record, and its proceedings shall be public upon the request of any party interested.

"The commission is hereby authorized by its order to divide the members thereof into as many divisions as it may deem necessary, which may be changed from time to time. Such divisions shall be denominated, respectively, division 1, division 2, etc. Any commissioner may be assigned to and may serve upon such division or divisions as the commission may direct, and the senior in service of the commissioners constituting any of said divisions shall act as chairman thereof. In case of vacancy in any division, or of absence or inability to serve thereon of any commissioner thereto assigned, the chairman of the commission, or any commissioner designated by him for that purpose, may temporarily serve on said division until the commission shall otherwise order.

"The commission may by order direct that any of its work, business, or functions arising under this act, or under any act amendatory thereof, or supplemental thereto, or under any amendment which may be made to any of said acts, or under any other act or joint resolution which has been or may hereafter be approved, or in respect of any matter which has been or may be referred to the commission by Congress or by either branch thereof, be assigned or referred to any of said divisions for action thereon, and may by order at any time amend, modify, supplement, or rescind any such direction. All such orders shall take effect forthwith and remain in effect until otherwise ordered by the commission.

"In conformity with and subject to the order or orders of the commission in the premises, each division so constituted shall have power and authority by a majority thereof to hear and determine, order, certify, report, or otherwise act as to any of said work, business, or functions so assigned or referred to it for action by the commission, and in respect thereof the division shall have all the jurisdiction and powers now or then conferred by law upon the commission, and be subject to the same duties and obligations. Any order, decision, or report made or other action taken by any of said divisions in respect of any matters so assigned or referred to it shall have the same force and effect, and may be made, evidenced, and enforced in the same manner as if made or taken by the commission as a whole. The secretary and seal of the commission shall be the secretary and seal of each division thereof.

"The salary of the secretary of the commission shall be $7,500 per annum.

"Nothing in this section contained, or done pursuant thereto, shall be deemed to divest the commission of any of its powers."

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

Mr. COOPER of Wisconsin. Reserving the right to object, I would like to ask the gentleman from Georgia what does the Interstate Commerce Commission think about this bill, does the gentleman know?

Mr. ADAMSON. The Interstate Commerce Commission has been recommending it. We passed a similar bill some 10 years ago, but the Senate did not pass it. The commission has so much work thrust upon it first by the Hepburn bill in 1896, and then by the bill which was engineered through the House by our distinguished Republican leader, Mr. MANN, and then the physical-valuation act, that they find themselves overburdened with work.

They have this difficulty: They have to send examiners and attorneys around over the country to hear cases, and the people are dissatisfied with that; they want the members of the commission instead of agents. Furthermore, they say it is important that they should be allowed to subdivide. They have not that privilege now. They say that if they have nine members, and they can subdivide into sections of two or three, they can assign a certain section to physical valuation and a certain section to hearing cases, and they can get along a great deal better and a great deal faster. We have heard all the commissioners on the subject.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. ADAMSON. Mr. Speaker, this bill is on the Union Calendar, and I ask unanimous consent to consider it in the House as in Committee of the Whole.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Georgia?

There was no objection.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Speaker, I move to strike out the last word. This bill raises the salary of the secretary to the Interstate Commerce Commission $2,500; it raises it to $7,500, which I think is proper and just.

Mr. FERRIS. How much is it now?

Mr. MANN. Five thousand dollars. Section 18 of the interstate-commerce act fixed the salary of the secretary at $3,500, and several years ago in the sundry civil bill we raised it to $5,000. Now we raise it to $7,500 by an amendment to section 17. Hereafter we will have the interstate-commerce act printed, and section 17 will fix the salary at $7,500, while section 18 will fix it at $3,500.

Mr. ADAMSON. Is not the gentleman from Illinois mistaken about the provision in the sundry civil act being a permanent provision?

Mr. MANN. It is a permanent provision under the Fitzgerald amendment, which fixes salaries carried in appropriation bills.

Mr. ADAMSON. The gentleman from Illinois is usually very accurate and knows more different things than any man on earth now or in the past, but the Fitzgerald amendment he speaks of applies to provisions in two certain bills only.

Mr. MANN. It applies to all appropriation bills.

Mr. ADAMSON. My understanding has been that the statutory salary was $3,500, and it is dependent on annual appropriations to give the Secretary $5,000.

Mr. MANN. The Fitzgerald amendment applied to all appropriation bills. I have no objection to this; I do not know who the secretary is, but he ought to have $7,500.

Mr. ADAMSON. The gentleman from Illinois does not think there will be any trouble about the apparent discrepancy?

Mr. MANN. Oh, no; there will be no trouble about his getting the money, but we have the interstate-commerce law printed from time to time—you can get it in the document room at any time—and it will show that the House and the Senate passed the bill changing the salary of the secretary to $7,500 in one section but left in the provision in the next section fixing the salary at half the amount.

Mr. ADAMSON. If the gentleman does not think the codifiers can omit it, we can strike it out.

Mr. MANN. I do not think the codifiers will get a chance at it very soon.

Mr. ADAMSON. Then we can fix it in this bill.

Mr. MANN. We ought to provide that so much of section 18 fixing the salary of the secretary be repealed.

Mr. ADAMSON. That can be done very easily. Has the gentleman the act before him?

Mr. MANN. No; I have not.

Mr. ADAMSON. I would like to have it correct when we come to make the motion.

Mr. MANN. We usually refer to that as the act to regulate commerce.

Mr. ADAMSON. Why not just amend that declaration in this present bill by saying that the salary is increased?

Mr. MANN. I suggest that we amend by adding a section to be known as section 3 of the bill and provide that so much of section 18 of the act to regulate commerce as fixes the salary of the secretary of the commission is hereby repealed.

Mr. ADAMSON. What does the gentleman say to the suggestion that I make, to amend by saying that the salary is increased from the present amount to $7,500?

Mr. MANN. I think we better add the new section.

Mr. ADAMSON. Very well.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Speaker, I offer that as an amendment, to add a new section as section 3, that so much of section 18 of the act to regulate commerce as fixes the salary of the secretary of the commission is hereby repealed.

Mr. ADAMSON. And leave the present provision in the bill as it is?

Mr. MANN. Yes.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Illinois withdraws the pro forma amendment and offers an amendment, which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

Add a new section as follows:

"SEC. 3. So much of section 18 of the act to regulate commerce as fixes the salary of the secretary of the commission is hereby repealed."

The SPEAKER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment.

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill as amended was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, was read the third time, and passed.

On motion of Mr. ADAMSON, a motion to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed was laid on the table.

ACT TO REGULATE COMMERCE.

The next business on the Calendar for Unanimous Consent was the bill H. R. 722, to amend section 20 of an act to regulate commerce, approved February 4, 1887, as amended, and for other purposes.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Speaker, I hope the gentleman from Georgia will ask to have this go over, and also the next on the calendar.

Mr. ADAMSON. Mr. Speaker, I was going to suggest that the gentleman from Virginia [Mr. SLEMP] has requested that the bill now before us be passed over without prejudice. I promised him that I would comply with his request, and as the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MANN] prefers a similar request to the next number on the calendar, Senate joint resolution 60, creating a joint subcommittee from the membership of the Senate Committee on Interstate Commerce and the House Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce, to investigate the conditions relative to interstate and foreign commerce, and so forth, I ask unanimous consent that the bill H. R. 722 and the Senate joint resolution 60 be passed over without prejudice.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Georgia asks unanimous consent that the bill H. R. 722 and Senate joint resolution 60 be passed over without prejudice. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

TERMS OF THE DISTRICT COURT AT RALEIGH, N. C.

The next business on the Calendar for Unanimous Consent was the bill S. 4480, providing for the establishment of two additional terms of the district court for the eastern district of North Carolina at Raleigh, N. C.

The Clerk read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That two additional terms of the district court, for the trial of civil cases, for the eastern district of North Carolina shall be held at Raleigh, N. C., on the first Monday in March and the first Monday in September.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the consideration of the bill?

There was no objection.

The SPEAKER. This bill is on the Union Calendar.

Mr. FOSTER. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that it be considered in the House as in the Committee of the Whole.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Speaker, I move to strike out the last word. I would like to get some information from some gentleman from North Carolina or from some one who is on the Committee on the Judiciary.

The SPEAKER. Who has charge of the bill?

Mr. MANN. The gentleman who made the report on the bill is the gentleman from Minnesota [Mr. VOLSTEAD], but he does not seem to be present. This bill provides for two additional terms of court "for the trial of civil cases." Does anyone know whether it is usual to provide for additional terms of court for the trial of civil cases, excluding criminal cases, and keeping the criminals in jail while the court is being held?

Mr. OGLESBY. Mr. Speaker, I can say to the gentleman that the practice in New York is to have two separate calendars.

Mr. MANN. I understand that. Of course, there always is a separate calendar.

Mr. OGLESBY. I mean that the terms of court are civil and criminal terms.

Mr. MANN. In New York they have the criminal court in session practically all of the time, and civil terms also.

Mr. OGLESBY. Practically; but not all of the time.

Mr. MANN. But I wondered whether we usually provided for terms of court simply to try civil cases, while a man who happens to be in jail could not have his case called up?

Mr. FOSTER. It looks to me like a peculiar situation.

Mr. MANN. There seems to be no one here in the House from the Committee on the Judiciary or from the State of North Carolina.

Mr. FOSTER. The gentleman from North Carolina [Mr. POU] is here.

Mr. MANN. Then I will address my inquiry to him. I wanted to know whether I could learn whether it is customary for us to provide for terms of the Federal court providing that they shall only be for the trial of civil cases?

Mr. POU. I will say to the gentleman that I think this bill is drawn in accordance with the desire of the members of the bar who practice in that court.

Mr. MANN. That is not what I am inquiring about. Are we inaugurating a new practice to say that a court must not dispose of criminal business at a certain term of court? Of course I know that the court may not try them, but to say that it can not is another matter. There are now two terms of the district court held at Raleigh in a year.

Mr. POU. I have no objection to striking out the words "for the trial of civil cases."

Mr. MANN. I think they ought to be stricken out, if the gentleman has no objection.

Mr. IGOE. Would it not be just as well that the matter be passed over without prejudice? There was some correspondence with the attorneys in that district, and the explanation was made as to why the bill was worded in this way.

Mr. MANN. I know the explanation was made that criminal business took precedence over civil business, but that is not what I am inquiring about. My inquiry is whether you ought to keep a man in jail in order to try civil cases and not give him a chance to be heard, and whether we are spreading that practice all over the United States. I think that a man who is in jail is entitled to be tried if he wants to be.

Mr. POU. It was considered, I will say to the gentleman from Illinois, by gentlemen who appear in that court, that there is no necessity for any additional cost for the trial of criminal cases.

Mr. MANN. If there is no criminal business at that time, then it will not delay the civil business. That is perfectly patent. If there is criminal business, it seems to me they ought to be permitted to dispose of it.

Mr. POU. I have no objection to striking out the words "for the trial of civil cases," and I make that motion.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Page 1, lines 3 and 4, strike out the words "for the trial of civil cases."

The question was taken, and the amendment was agreed to.

The bill as amended was ordered to be read a third time, was read the third time, and passed.

Subsequently,

Mr. POU. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to return to Unanimous Consent Calendar No. 89 and to reconsider the action by which the bill was amended.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from North Carolina asks unanimous consent to return to Unanimous Consent Calendar No. 89. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. POU. Mr. Speaker, since the colloquy a while ago between the gentleman from Illinois and myself I have looked up my correspondence with respect to the bill providing two additional terms of court for the United States court at Raleigh. I find that after a conference between the members of the bar and the judge a request was made that two additional terms of the court be provided for the trial of civil cases only. The statement was made that there were ample court facilities for disposing of the criminal docket speedily. I ask unanimous consent that the action of the House in amending the bill be reconsidered, and that the bill be passed by the House as it came from the Senate.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from North Carolina asks unanimous consent that the bill as passed be reconsidered.

Mr. POU. That the amendment be reconsidered.

Mr. MANN. First, we want to reconsider the action of the House by which the bill was passed and then reconsider the vote by which the amendment was agreed to.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. That is the proper request. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The question is on the amendment.

The amendment was rejected.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, and was accordingly read the third time and passed.

USE OF NAMES OF PUBLIC OFFICIALS BY PATENT ATTORNEYS.

The next business on the Calendar for Unanimous Consent was the bill (S. 683) prohibiting the use of the name of any Member of either House of Congress or of any officer of the Government by any person, firm, or corporation practicing before the Patent Office in advertising his business.

The Clerk read the title of the bill.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

Mr. MONDELL. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, I should like to inquire of the gentleman who has charge of this bill whether he would have any objection to striking out the words "Patent Office" in line 4 and inserting "any department of the Government"?

Mr. OGLESBY. I will say to the gentleman this is a Senate bill and was introduced by a Senator who felt outraged because his name had been used in this way. The Commissioner of Patents is very much in favor of this measure.

Mr. MONDELL. What special reason is there for legislation of this kind relating to the Patent Office that does not apply equally to all departments of the Government? Why should we single out the Patent Office?

Mr. OGLESBY. The only reason I know is that the practice complained of has led to very grave abuses.

Mr. MONDELL. Is it to be inferred that it will be lawful for people practicing before other bureaus or departments of the Government to use the name of a Member of Congress in advertising his business? Is that the theory of the legislation?

Mr. OGLESBY. No.

Mr. MONDELL. That would be a fair inference, would it not?

Mr. OGLESBY. I do not think so. The peculiar business before the Patent Office has offered opportunities to men who wish to advertise their patent business, and they really do their clients more harm, I believe, than they do any Member of Congress by the use of their names.

Mr. MONDELL. My constituents write me frequently asking if I know some responsible patent attorney, and they frequently write me asking if I could not give the names of attorneys having to do with other matters, and I felt it my duty to recommend generally half a dozen people in the business whom I know are entirely responsible. I felt that it is not only proper I should do that, but it is a duty I owe my constituents. Now, that same attorney in writing in regard to a patent—and that would apply to any other business before the Government—might say, "I am acquainted with Mr. So-and-so, and I am sure he will be very glad to give information in regard to my honesty and ability."

Mr. OGLESBY. I would say to the gentleman I do not see any objection to his amendment. I only attempted to answer his question in the absence of Mr. MORRISON, who has charge of the bill, but since he is now here I will yield to him.

Mr. MONDELL. It occurs to me that if we are to legislate along this line at all the legislation should be general.

Mr. MANN. Will the gentleman from Wyoming yield?

Mr. MONDELL. Yes.

Mr. MANN. The gentleman will notice that there is no penalty attached to this bill, and it would not amount to a row of pins except for the fact that the Patent Office has a list of attorneys permitted to practice before it, and I think no other department of the Government has.

Mr. MONDELL. I think the Interior Department and certain of its bureaus other than the Patent Office has.

Mr. OGLESBY. If the gentleman will permit, I will also suggest the Commissioner of Patents has the power to disbar a man from practicing before him.

Mr. MANN. There being no penalty in this bill a violation of its terms could only be reached by the Commissioner of Patents taking the name from his list of persons permitted to practice before his office. I do not know that that applies to any other branch of the Government.

Mr. MONDELL. I think it is true that there is in several of the bureaus a list of attorneys——

Mr. CANNON. I think it applies to pension and land matters.

Mr. MONDELL (continuing). Who are qualified to practice before the office. Frequently on charges made and proven the name of such attorneys are stricken from the list. I think that is probably true in a number of departments of the Government. If there is a crying necessity for legislation of this character it should be general, in my opinion. I have some doubt about the necessity for any such legislation. I do not know why an attorney practicing before a department should not refer to the fact that he is acquainted with Members of Congress, but if it is deemed wise that he should not do that, then prohibit it generally. This looks rather too much like legislating against some one individual somewhere.

Mr. OGLESBY. If the gentleman will pardon me, a man does not have to be an admitted attorney to be allowed to practice before the Patent Office. I do not think an attorney at law who has been regularly admitted to practice is as apt to abuse a privilege of this kind as a man who is not.

Mr. MORRISON. Mr. Speaker, I would like to make this suggestion. It was suggested that if there is a demand for legislation that demand is for general legislation.

I have been a member of the Committee on Patents ever since I became a Member of the House. I have no knowledge of any demand in relation to any department or bureau of the Government except that which has come to me because of my membership in this House. My membership here has brought to my attention a crying need for legislation, not only this but other legislation, that will protect the inventors of the country and those men who think they are inventors, from being exploited by attorneys who are dealing unfairly with their clients. This is mild. It is limited to a known demand. It can be enforced only by the regulations in the Patent Office. It can do no injustice, and it may be a short step in the right direction; be the only step that can be taken so far as this feature of an unhappy condition is concerned.

Our Patent Office is as great a Patent Office, I think, as there is in the world. The great body of patent lawyers are as fine professional men as there are in the world, and yet when I go through my district I am met on every corner by men who have not been fairly dealt with and who think I should have protected them.

Mr. MONDELL. Have they been unfairly dealt with by patent attorneys, because the patent attorneys stated to the gentleman's constituents that they were acquainted with and were vouched for by my friend?

Mr. MORRISON. I can not answer that.

Mr. MONDELL. This bill would not cure the condition that is complained of unless these attorneys base their practices on recommendations or upon alleged recommendations or commendations of Members of Congress. This is not the way to meet improper practices of patent attorneys, it seem to me, except as those practices may be based on the improper use of the names of Members in advertising the business. I do not believe it is wise to legislate with regard to one bureau of the Government, leaving it as a matter of inference that the very thing we prohibit as to the Patent Office may be done by people who do business before the other departments of the Government or practice before the other departments of the Government.

Mr. MORRISON. Mr. Speaker, the remark made by the gentleman from Wyoming [Mr. MONDELL] that this will not cure everything is sustained by the little knowledge I have of this entire situation; but it will help to cure—it will start a cure—and it so happens that those attorneys who deceive most inventors, most poor and would-be inventors, and wrong the most of them, and, in the last analysis, rob the most of them and make them homeless are the advertising attorneys.

Mr. MANN. Why not amend it, anyhow? What is the difference?

Mr. MORRISON. If I thought it would be applicable all along the line, I would have no objection. But I do want it vital and effective so far as the Patent Office is concerned. I will not oppose an amendment. I will say that.

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. I would ask the gentleman right on that point if it is not a fact that the great bulk of the advertising that is done by attorneys is done in connection with this Patent Office, and that within no other department is the advertising carried on so extensively? As I understand it, they not only advertise extensively in journals and papers, but they send out a large amount of circulars to persons who are supposed to be inventors, or have invented something, to solicit business in that way. And so it seems to me that this strikes the evil that exists especially with reference to the Patent Office business.

Mr. MORRISON. I know it exists there. I have no knowledge as to what it is elsewhere. I will not object to an amendment if some Member will offer an amendment that will make this bill effective.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. Would not the Commissioner of Patents have it within his own power to regulate these matters?

Mr. MORRISON. Not under existing laws.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. Is there not some method by which he could discourage this apparently unprofessional practice without asking Congress to pass a law that might deal harshly with others?

Mr. MORRISON. I do not think he could do it fairly. He could make a statement of facts as they appear from the record, but the statement would relate to certain attorneys or firms of attorneys, and it would not be proper for him to do that. But if you can pass this act, making the practice itself unlawful, and then the regulations can be made in general terms so as to make this effective, you get to the end of the practice without pointing out any particular person who is regarded as having been an offender.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. The presumption is that it is unprofessional for lawyers to advertise?

Mr. MORRISON. Yes; but not patent lawyers.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. In what way is that regulated?

Mr. MORRISON. It is not regulated.

Mr. OGLESBY. I will say to the gentleman that a good many men appear before the Patent Office who are not admitted attorneys. The commissioner stated at the hearing that he had considered the question as to whether or not anyone except a regularly admitted attorney at law should be excluded from practicing before the Patent Office, but for certain reasons thought, perhaps, he ought not to establish such a rule.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. I know some very high-grade patent attorneys who do not thus advertise. However, I get these circulars, as do other Members of Congress, and I usually throw them into the wastebasket.

Mr. OGLESBY. Many other people throughout the country are not so intelligent as the gentleman from Pennsylvania or they would do the same thing.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. Some people unquestionably would be deceived by seeing letters of Members of the House or Senate indorsing certain patent lawyers if that is what they do. Every Member of Congress wants to be courteous to everybody who writes to him, and he runs the risk that some of these formal acknowledgments might be used as references improperly. But, at the foot of page 2, the report says:

If the Congress shall make the practice unlawful, the rules of practice in the Patent Office will be sufficient to remedy the existing evil.

It is to be implied from that that there are regulations in the Patent Office fixing the qualifications of patent attorneys, and it seems to me it would be in the power of the Commissioner of Patents to adjust this matter himself.

Mr. MORRISON. The rules and regulations can make it a cause for disbarment for the attorney to do anything that is unlawful; but it is now entirely lawful, and the object of this bill is to make it unlawful, so that the Commissioner of Patents, through his regulations, may stop the practice.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. The Commissioner of Patents issues certain regulations with respect to practice by attorneys, does he not? That is to say, there are certain regulations that the office lives up to with respect to agents who practice as attorneys in patent cases?

Mr. MORRISON. That is true; but they can not make that unlawful which Congress has permitted to be considered lawful.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. Well, suppose this act were passed, and this inhibition were made as against those who are members of the bar——

Mr. MORRISON. No; those who practice——

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. Those who are members of the bar and who practice as patent attorneys, and those who are not members of the bar and still are permitted to practice as patent attorneys—suppose this bill were to pass and were to apply specifically to this class of agents or attorneys. In what position would we be as lawmakers with respect to other departments? Would we not be passing what is clearly special legislation with respect to the Patent Office?

Mr. MORRISON. I think not, because I have never learned from any source that there is any growing evil in connection with the practice in other departments. If there is, there should be legislation enacted to meet it, to be sure.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. Let us look at it in this way: Suppose a member of the bar practicing in this vicinity should advertise that he was a specialist in divorce cases. Would not there be some way of checking him up so that the practice could be regarded as unprofessional? Is there no board of censors or anything of that kind?

Mr. MORRISON. I can not answer that question as to the District of Columbia; but I am quite sure that in Indiana, while lawyers do not advertise, they have a legal right to do it, and they could advertise as indicated and still be within their legal rights.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. And suffer such contempt as members of the bar would have for their fellows who committed that practice?

Mr. MORRISON. Yes, sir.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. Now, if the stamp of disapproval were placed by the bar on that practice on the part of patent lawyers and agents doing patent business here, would it not have the desired effect?

Mr. MORRISON. I think not. It has not done it.

Mr. LENROOT. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MORRISON. Yes.

Mr. LENROOT. Even if it did, this bill would be a protection to Members from that sort of annoyance. I want to say that I have had an experience where a patent attorney used my name as a reference. I never gave him permission to do so. It took me two years and several conferences to get him to remove my name from his list of references.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. I can understand how, if the gentleman's name was used in that way, he would have to spend a lot of time in catching up with the damage done. I think the practice should be stopped.

Mr. MANN. I want to say to the gentleman that a few years ago a firm of patent attorneys got letters from some of the most eminent men in public life—they tried to get letters from me, but did not—telling what great men they were, and the men who signed the letters probably did not know what they were, and yet they were sent broadcast throughout the country.

Mr. WATSON of Pennsylvania. Mr. Speaker, I do not think it is fully realized what is involved in this bill. In many cases attorneys apparently of high standing will send a booklet to Congressmen or Senators or to a citizen, describing how to obtain patents, and the Senator or Congressman will thank him by letter for the booklet. That letter is put in the next booklet, and the clients or constituents of that Senator or Congressman living in the district, having a high idea of their Representative or Senator, will employ those attorneys, and very often those attorneys are not of the highest type. It is not only to protect Congressmen and Senators, but also to protect the constituents of Congressmen and Senators. That is the whole purpose of the bill, according to the statement of the Commissioner of Patents.

The SPEAKER. Has the gentleman an amendment that he wants to offer?

Mr. MANN. We did not give consent yet.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the consideration of this bill?

There was no objection.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will read the bill.

The Clerk read as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That it shall be unlawful for any person, firm, or corporation practicing before the Patent Office to use the name of any Member of either House of Congress or of any officer of the Government in advertising the said business.

SEC. 2. That this act shall take effect three months after its date.

The SPEAKER pro tempore (Mr. TAYLOR of Arkansas). The Clerk will report the amendment offered by the gentleman from Wyoming.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. MONDELL: Page 1, line 4, after the word "before," strike out the words "the Patent Office" and insert the words "any department or office of the Government."

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The question is on agreeing to the amendment.

The amendment was agreed to.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The question is on the third reading of the bill.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. Mr. Speaker, I suggest that the words "Patent Office" remain in the title, and that will have to be amended.

Mr. MONDELL. Mr. Speaker, I move that the title be amended to correspond with the amendment to the bill.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Without objection, it is so ordered.

There was no objection.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The question is on the third reading of the bill.

The bill was ordered to be read a third time, was read the third time, and passed.

On motion of Mr. MORRISON, a motion to reconsider the vote whereby the bill was passed was laid on the table.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Clerk will report the next bill.

BRIDGE ACROSS SNAKE RIVER, IDAHO.

The next business on the Calendar for Unanimous Consent was the bill (H. R. 11320) granting the consent of Congress to the counties of Twin Falls and Minidoka, State of Idaho, to construct a bridge across Snake River.

The title of the bill was read.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection?

Mr. MONDELL. Reserving the right to object, Mr. Speaker, I wish to ask the gentleman in charge of the bill if Snake River at this particular point is considerel a navigable stream; and if so, why? What is the necessity of the legislation? As a matter of fact, Snake River is not navigable at or anywhere near this point.

Mr. DILLON. It is a meandered stream, so that I suppose jurisdiction would come under the United States.

Mr. MONDELL. There are many meandered streams that are not navigable. The meandering of a stream does not render it navigable.

Mr. MILLER of Minnesota. Has not the Secretary of War determined at some time in the past that he has jurisdiction over this stream, because it is navigable in some part of it? I know there are such streams.

Mr. DILLON. I think it is considered as a navigable stream. That is my information on the subject.

Mr. MONDELL. This particular locality, as I recall it, is, I think, right between two great falls.

Mr. DILLON. Even if it were not true, it would do no harm.

Mr. McCRACKEN. Mr. Speaker, what does the gentleman desire to know?

Mr. MONDELL. I inquired with regard to the navigability of the Snake River at this point.

Mr. McCRACKEN. The river is not navigable at this point, but the War Department has jurisdiction.

Mr. MONDELL. Has the War Department asserted its jurisdiction?

Mr. McCRACKEN. Yes; all the way up to the source.

Mr. MANN. It may not be navigable all the way up to that point, but it may be navigable between the two falls just the same.

Mr. MONDELL. As a matter of fact it is not navigable.

Mr. MANN. Oh, I have no doubt they have log rafts that go down there.

Mr. MONDELL. I do not know where they would get the logs.

Mr. MANN. They import them from Wyoming.

Mr. MONDELL. That is the only place they could get them. There is timber in Wyoming at the head of the river, but that is a long distance away.

Mr. MANN. It is possible to get timber down over falls, although the gentleman may not be aware of that fact. Some light logs will float down stream and over the falls.

Mr. MONDELL. If there is water enough to float them.

Mr. MANN. There is water enough at some seasons of the year. Some people up in that country have water on the brain.

Mr. MONDELL. Mr. Speaker, a number of gentlemen who seem to know little about it insist that the river is navigable, and I am willing to take their word for it. [Laughter.]

Mr. SLOAN. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MONDELL. I yield to the gentleman from Nebraska.

Mr. SLOAN. Was there any appropriation made for this stream in the river and harbor bill?

Mr. MONDELL. I have no doubt that there will be in a future river and harbor bill.

Mr. SLOAN. Was there an appropriation in the last bill?

Mr. McCRACKEN. There have been appropriations for the Snake River.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. Mr. Speaker, I should like to inquire whether the river runs through a region which is subject to hog cholera. [Laughter.]

The SPEAKER pro tempore (Mr. TAYLOR of Arkansas). Is there objection?

There was no objection.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Clerk will report the bill.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the consent of Congress is hereby granted to the counties of Twin Falls and Minidoka, State of Idaho, and their successors and assigns, to construct, maintain, and operate a bridge and approaches thereto across the Snake River at a point 2 miles north of Hansen, Twin Falls County, in the counties of Twins Falls and Minidoka, in the State of Idaho, in accordance with the provisions of the act entitled "An act to regulate the construction of bridges over navigable waters," approved March 23, 1906.

SEC. 2. That the right to alter, amend, or repeal this act is hereby expressly reserved.

With the following committee amendment:

Page 1, line 7, after the word "point," insert the words "suitable to the interests of navigation."

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill as amended was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, and was accordingly read the third time and passed.

On motion of Mr. DILLON, a motion to reconsider the last vote was laid on the table.

JUDICIAL DISTRICTS IN IOWA.

The next business on the Calendar for Unanimous Consent was the bill (S. 1294) to amend section 81 of the act entitled "An act to codify, revise, and amend the laws relating to the judiciary," approved March 3, 1911.

The Clerk read the title of the bill.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection?

Mr. MANN. Let the bill be read, Mr. Speaker.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Clerk will report the bill.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That section 81 of the act entitled "An act to codify, revise, and amend the laws relating to the judiciary," approved March 3, 1911, be, and it hereby is, amended so as to read as follows:

"SEC. 81. The State of Iowa is divided into two judicial districts, to be known as the northern and southern districts of Iowa.

"The northern district shall include the territory embraced on the 1st day of July, 1910, in the counties of Allamakee, Dubuque, Buchanan, Clayton, Delaware, Fayette, Winneshiek, Howard, Chickasaw, Bremer, Blackhawk, Floyd, Mitchell, and Jackson, which shall constitute the eastern division of said district; also the territory embraced on the date last mentioned in the counties of Jones, Cedar, Linn, Iowa, Benton, Tama, Grundy, and Hardin, which shall constitute the Cedar Rapids division; also the territory embraced on the date last mentioned in the counties of Emmet, Palo Alto, Pocahontas, Calhoun, Carroll, Kossuth, Humboldt, Webster, Winnebago, Hancock, Wright, Hamilton, Worth, Cerro Gordo, Franklin, and Butler, which shall constitute the central division; also the territory embraced on the date last mentioned in the counties of Dickinson, Clay, Buena Vista, Sac, Osceola, O'Brien, Cherokee, Ida, Lyon, Sioux, Plymouth, Woodbury, and Monona, which shall constitute the western division.

"Terms of the district court for the eastern division shall be held at Dubuque on the fourth Tuesday in April and the first Tuesday in December, and at Waterloo on the second Tuesdays in May and September; for the Cedar Rapids division, at Cedar Rapids on the first Tuesday in April and the fourth Tuesday in September; for the central division, at Fort Dodge on the second Tuesdays in June and November; and for the western division at Sioux City on the fourth Tuesday in May and the third Tuesday in October.

"The southern district shall include the territory embraced on the 1st day of July, 1910, in the counties of Louisa, Henry, Des Moines, Lee, and Van Buren, which shall constitute the eastern division of said district; also the territory embraced on the date last mentioned in the counties of Marshall, Story, Boone, Greene, Guthrie, Dallas, Polk, Jasper, Poweshiek, Marion, Warren, and Madison, which shall constitute the central division of said district; also the territory embraced on the date last mentioned in the counties of Crawford, Harrison, Shelby, Audubon, Cass, Pottawattamie, Mills, and Montgomery, which shall constitute the western division of said district; also the territory embraced on the date last mentioned in the counties of Adair, Adams, Clarke, Decatur, Fremont, Lucas, Page, Ringgold, Taylor, Union, and Wayne, which shall constitute the southern division of said district; also the territory embraced on the date last mentioned in the counties of Scott, Muscatine, Washington, Johnson, and Clinton, which shall constitute the Davenport division of said district; also the territory embraced on the date last mentioned in the counties of Davis, Appanoose, Mahaska, Keokuk, Jefferson, Monroe, and Wapello, which shall constitute the Ottumwa division of said district.

"Terms of the district court for the eastern division shall be held at Keokuk on the sixth Tuesday after the fourth Tuesday in February and the eighth Tuesday after the third Tuesday in September; for the central division, at Des Moines on the tenth Tuesday after the fourth Tuesday in February and the tenth Tuesday after the third Tuesday in September; for the western division, at Council Bluffs on the fourth Tuesday in February and the sixth Tuesday after the third Tuesday in September; for the southern division, at Creston on the fourth Tuesday after the fourth Tuesday in February and the third Tuesday in September; for the Davenport division, at Davenport on the eighth Tuesday after the fourth Tuesday in February and the second Tuesday after the third Tuesday in September; and for the Ottumwa division, at Ottumwa on the second Tuesday after the fourth Tuesday in February and the fourth Tuesday after the third Tuesday in September.

"The clerk of the court for said district shall maintain an office in charge of himself or a deputy at Davenport and at Ottumwa for the transaction of the business of said divisions."

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

There was no objection.

The bill was ordered to a third reading, and it was accordingly read the third time and passed.

FOREST HOMESTEADS.

The next business on the Calendar for Unanimous Consent was the bill (H. R. 10668) to repeal section 4 of the act of Congress approved June 11, 1906, known as the forest-homestead act, and for other purposes.

The Clerk read the title of the bill.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection?

Mr. HAWLEY. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, I would like to inquire of the gentleman in charge of the bill what it proposes to do.

Mr. GANDY. Mr. Speaker, section 4 of the forest-reserve homestead act contains one limitation, which applies only to the lands within the forest reserves in Lawrence and Pennington Counties, S. Dak., and provides that that land may only be homesteaded by persons who occupied the land on January 1, 1906. Now the only thing this bill does is to remove that restriction providing that the lands may be disposed of the same as any other agricultural land in any other reserve under the various homestead laws.

Mr. HAWLEY. Section 4 relates to the land in these two counties.

Mr. GANDY. Pennington and Lawrence Counties, in South Dakota.

Mr. HAWLEY. And the lands in no other State?

Mr. GANDY. And the lands in no other State.

Mr. HAWLEY. The bill does not propose to change the forest-homestead act in any other particular.

Mr. GANDY. No, sir.

Mr. HAWLEY. I do not object.

Mr. MONDELL. Mr. Speaker, I am heartily in accord with the object sought, but I am inclined to the opinion that the bill as reported will not accomplish what the gentleman from South Dakota desires. If he has before him section 4 of the act in question he will find that it prohibits, to a certain extent, and to a certain extent only, forest homesteads within Pennington and Lawrence Counties. It is not a complete prohibition; it is a prohibition under certain conditions. It prohibits new settlements with a view to homestead entry. But it does provide for approval of these entries made prior to the passage of the act.

Now, the second act of legislation referred to in the amendment of the committee is the legislation of February 8, 1907, which still further modifies the provisions of section 4.

Mr. GANDY. If the gentleman will yield, subsequent to the passage of the forest-reserve act——

Mr. MONDELL. If the gentleman will yield until I complete my statement. The second legislation still further modified section 4 by eliminating from the provisions of section 4 certain townships in Pennington and Lawrence Counties. So section 4 as amended, as a matter of fact, does allow forest homesteads within certain townships in these two counties. The effect, therefore, of the legislation, as I see it, will be to still leave it very doubtful whether the forest homestead act applies without qualification in these two townships.

Let me suggest to my friend from South Dakota that he would accomplish all he desires to accomplish, without raising any questions, if he struck out all of his bill down to the word "all," on line 1, page 2. There is a substantive proposition, with one slight amendment, as all lands within a national forest in Lawrence and Pennington Counties, in South Dakota, shall be and remain subject to all the provisions of the said act of June 11, 1906, and acts amendatory thereof and supplementary thereto.

That is what you desire to do; and my opinion is that in repealing section 4, which is not a clear prohibition but is a prohibition only to a certain extent, and then repealing the amendment to section 4, which limited the effect of section 4 in the first instance, you leave the whole matter in doubt as to just what was intended to be accomplished.

I happen to know about this region, because it is pretty nearly in sight of my home. There are some lands in that part of Lawrence and Pennington Counties that people have been trying to hold ever since the passage of this law. It occurs to me that the way to legislate on the subject is to legislate without reference to these old acts, but simply say that all the provisions of the forest homestead act and the acts amendatory thereto apply to these two counties. Then there would be no question as to what you meant.

Mr. GANDY. I might say that the only thought in enumerating the acts heretofore passed was to make the matter clear and bring them all in.

Mr. MONDELL. It does not make it clear. The section 4 referred to provides:

That no homestead settlements or entries shall be allowed in that portion of the Black Hills Forest Reserve in Lawrence and Pennington Counties in South Dakota except to persons occupying lands therein prior to January 1, 1906, and the provisions of this act shall apply to the said counties in said reserve only as far as is necessary to give and perfect title of such settlers or occupants to lands chiefly valuable for agriculture therein occupied or claimed by them prior to the said date, and all homestead entries under this act in said counties in said reserve shall be described by metes and bounds survey.

Does the gentleman understand that the repeal of that would prohibit a person who was occupying land at that time now taking advantage of the forest homestead law?

Mr. GANDY. No; those folks have already taken it.

Mr. MONDELL. I am not so sure about that. Why raise that question? All that is now desired is to apply the homestead act to the parts of the counties to which the homestead law does not now apply. That can be done very easily by the language at the last part of your bill. Then you come to the other act of 1907, which is as follows:

That the following described townships in the Black Hills Forest Reserve in Pennington County, S. Dak., to wit: Townships 1 north, 1 east; 2 north, 1 east; 1 north, 2 east; 2 north, 2 east—are hereby excepted in the operation of section 4 of an act entitled "An act to provide for the entry of agricultural land within the forest reserve, approved June 11, 1906." The lands within the said township to remain subject to all other provisions of said acts.

Query: Does the repeal of that legislation operate to prohibit a forest homestead within the townships that were excepted by that act from the prohibition of the act first referred to?

Mr. GANDY. No; it would not; because the bill itself carries the express provision that all the land shall be subject to entry under the general forest reserve homestead act.

Mr. MONDELL. In other words, then, if the bill is clear, it is simply clear by reason of the substantive provisions on page 2. If there is no ambiguity, that is entirely due to the fact that on page 2 you have attempted to make a statement of just what you desire to accomplish, and I am not so sure that that statement is entirely clear if you leave in the word "other" in line 4—

Shall remain subject to all other provisions of the said act.

What other provisions of said act? Section 4 would be stricken out. It would no longer be a part of the act; it was a partially prohibitive and partially restrictive provision of the act. What is the effect of such repeal?

Mr. GANDY. I want to say to the gentleman in all sincerity that I have gone over this matter very carefully with the Forestry Service and with officials in the office of the Secretary of the Interior, and, in order to remove the restrictions on the land, it is thought that this will accomplish the result.

Mr. MONDELL. I am willing to admit that many Secretaries and bureaus had to do with this. It must have taken many Secretaries and a number of bureaus to have reached the conclusion that has been reached in the bill and its various amendments. What you desire to accomplish can be easily accomplished, and I do not understand why it becomes necessary to involve the matter as this bill does. Let me call the gentleman's attention to another matter. The statute referred to as being in the Statutes at Large, volume 37, page 239, has no reference whatever to this.

Mr. GANDY. It is the act of July 3, 1912.

Mr. MONDELL. Volume 37, page 239, if I have it correctly, has to do with the Lighthouse Service.

Mr. GANDY. The act of July 3, 1912 removed the restriction from two or three other townships.

Mr. MONDELL. That further complicates the situation, in any event. I would like to help my friend from South Dakota [Mr. GANDY], because these townships are very near my home town, and I know some good people who would like to homestead out there. My opinion is that the gentleman will accomplish all he desires to accomplish, and accomplish it without any question, if he uses the language in the bill beginning with the word "all," on page 2 of the bill, changing only the word "other," in line 4, to the word "the." It may be necessary for clearness to amplify your description of the act of 1912 by adding "the forest-reserve homestead act."

Mr. LENROOT. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MONDELL. Yes.

Mr. LENROOT. Suppose we do not, then section 4 will remain a part of the act?

Mr. MONDELL. Yes.

Mr. LENROOT. And the language the gentleman suggests will make this national forest subject to the provisions of section 4 as well as the balance of the section, and I suggest if that is done it leaves the matter exactly where it is now, and you have accomplished nothing.

Mr. MONDELL. That is not true. Section 4, so far as it is prohibitive of the forest-reserve homesteads, would be repealed by the language referred to, so far as it prescribes the way in which certain people can file and hold their homesteads; it will remain in force providing there is any necessity for it, and that is just exactly what ought to be done. So far as there is anything in the law that prohibits homestead settlements in these townships on the forest reserves, you want to withdraw that prohibition, and that is all you need to do.

Mr. FERRIS. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MONDELL. Yes.

Mr. FERRIS. The trouble with the citation in the bill is that the page is wrong. The correct citation is July 3, 1912, Thirty-seventh Statutes at Large, page 188, and it should be so amended.

Mr. MONDELL. Why do you want to repeal a statute which does open certain townships to entry?

Mr. FERRIS. But this is the situation. There was a feeling at the time this act was passed that there was some mineral in the Black Hills.

Mr. MONDELL. I know all about that.

Mr. FERRIS. And they excluded two counties in the gentleman's district, and now the Department of Agriculture and the Department of Interior both say there is no longer any necessity for such exclusion, and this bill repeals that section 4 which withheld them from the law and adds to it a provision which makes them open to homestead settlement.

Mr. MONDELL. The law was not extended, because at that particular time there was considerable mineral activity in this particular locality.

Mr. FERRIS. Precisely.

Mr. MONDELL. And that condition has long since passed.

Mr. FERRIS. Precisely.

Mr. MONDELL. And there is no reason why what is proposed should be done, but I do not believe that this legislation does it.

Mr. FERRIS. Both of these departments that have to administer it say that it does, and why not let them go ahead. It affects only two counties, and you can not redraft this bill now.

Mr. MONDELL. Is there objection to amend the error of description?

Mr. FERRIS. Certainly not; that ought to be amended, and the gentleman from South Dakota [Mr. GANDY] and I are indebted to the gentleman for pointing that out; but let us amend it and get ahead.

Mr. MONDELL. It affects the gentleman's district only, and I shall not object; but it is a tremendously clumsily drafted piece of legislation, and it will take a Philadelphia lawyer to determine what it all means after it is done. The first amendment to this section 4 did open certain of these townships to homestead settlement. The second amendment to section 4 did open certain townships for homestead settlement. Now you are repealing two provisions of law that did do the thing you now want to do in a general way. I am not sure what the effect will be. The department might interpret it to mean to accomplish just what you gentlemen desire to accomplish.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

Mr. McLAUGHLIN. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, I should like to ask the gentleman a question. I have before me the report on that bill, and I read that the Secretary of Agriculture approves it conditionally. He evidently thinks that the bill 8807—I guess that is the bill relating to highways through the national forests—should be passed first. What is the status of House bill 8807?

Mr. GANDY. Well, I am unable to advise the gentleman as to that, but let me say in reply that applications for land within forest reserves must pass through the Forestry Department and be approved by the Secretary of Agriculture before they go to the Department of the Interior, and that the forestry people have ample opportunity in the administration of affairs under the forest homestead act to take care of any of those propositions.

Mr. McLAUGHLIN. That is true to a certain extent. The officials of the Department of Agriculture have certain authority, but in other respects authority is taken away from them by the statutes. Now, it is very clear to me that the Secretary of Agriculture expects—he certainly advises, as must be drawn from this statement in the last paragraph of his letter—that House bill 8807 be passed before this bill now before the House is passed.

Mr. GANDY. House bill 8807 is another matter entirely. I discussed this bill with the Forest Service people——

Mr. McLAUGHLIN. Here is the letter of the Secretary, and he calls attention to the fact that there is now pending before the gentleman's committee a bill (H. R. 8807) providing for the reservation of necessary rights of way across lands open to entry under the forest homestead act, and he advises that the matter of these highways or rights of way be taken care of evidently before this bill is passed. If this bill is passed and the other one fails, then the matter of highways is not taken care of at all, and can not be.

Mr. GANDY. If the gentleman will yield to me, I call his attention to another sentence in that letter which is to this effect:

> However, in the interest of simplicity of legislation, it has been considered best to leave this proviso to be taken care of by the general measure now before your committee.

Mr. McLAUGHLIN. That is the suggestion of the Secretary of Agriculture, which is his opinion in reference to that matter, but there is no doubt in reading the letter of the Secretary that the bill H. R. 8807 ought to be passed and that the House ought not to fail to make provision for and take care of that right-of-way matter; but if this bill should pass and the other should not, the situation will be one that is not desirable at all.

Mr. FERRIS. The gentleman is entirely wrong.

Mr. GANDY. If the gentleman will permit, here is a bill which pertains to a few townships in two counties and to nowhere else; and the other bill pertains to all forest-reserve lands in the United States.

Mr. FERRIS. Let me call the attention of the gentleman, here is a case of a few townships in two counties in South Dakota. There are 165,000,000 acres of forest reserves scattered over the United States. That is the general right-of-way bill, and after what the gentleman read, the Secretary goes on and says:

> However, in the interest of simplicity of legislation, it has been considered best to leave this proviso to be taken care of by the general measure now before your committee. Therefore, with the addition of the words suggested in the preceding paragraph, this measure meets with the hearty approval of this department, it being clearly understood that this recommendation is not inconsistent with the approval of H. R. 8807 and the view expressed regarding its urgency.

Mr. McLAUGHLIN. Well, the Secretary of Agriculture wishes to save H. R. 8807. He wishes to do that, but he does not wish this act to interfere with it, and it seems to me it would be better to have that bill reported from the committee and passed before we pass this bill.

Mr. FERRIS. But the gentleman does not want to hold up a local bill for some great nation-wide bill which is now pending?

Mr. McLAUGHLIN. The item involved is small, but the same condition exists as in the other——

Mr. MONDELL. If the gentleman will permit, I know this country very well; it is very near my home. It is of comparatively small area, and I do not think there will be any serious question over rights of way in this small area, and clearly the committee could hardly withhold action on this bill, involving a few acres of land, until they could act upon a bill which refers to and had to do with many million acres of land.

Mr. McLAUGHLIN. Why should we not wait; what is the need of haste on this particular bill?

Mr. MONDELL. Well, I think these lands ought to be settled.

Mr. McLAUGHLIN. The other bill, H. R. 8807, has been before the Committee on Public Lands. The Secretary's attention has been called to it, and he has expressed an opinion on it, and he says it contains some very important provisions, and, as I read his letter, he thinks it ought to be enacted into law before the passage of this bill, because if the other should fail the situation would not be at all desirable.

Mr. FERRIS. Oh, no; he does not say that.

Mr. McLAUGHLIN. That is clearly to be drawn from what the Secretary does say.

Mr. FERRIS. Oh, no; it is not.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Speaker, I ask for the regular order.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

Mr. McLAUGHLIN. I object, Mr. Speaker.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Michigan objects, and the Clerk will report the next bill.

BUFFALO PASTURE IN SOUTH DAKOTA.

The next business on the Calendar for Unanimous Consent was the bill (H. R. 8669) authorizing the Secretary of the Interior to continue lease of land in Stanley County, S. Dak., for a buffalo pasture.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the consideration of the bill? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

Mr. FERRIS. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that this bill may be considered in the House as in the Committee of the Whole.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. FERRIS. I ask unanimous consent that the substitute be read in lieu of the original text. The entire bill has been stricken out and a new bill has been substituted.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Oklahoma asks that the committee substitute be read in lieu of the original bill. Is there objection?

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. Mr. Speaker, the bill itself has not yet been read.

Mr. FERRIS. You would not want to read it——

Mr. MANN. It would take less time to read it than to talk about it.

Mr. FERRIS. Well, read it.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Clerk will read the bill.

The Clerk read as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized to continue the lease of not exceeding 3,500 acres of the public domain in townships 5 and 6 north, range 30, and townships 5 and 6 north, range 31 east, Black Hills meridian, in the county of Stanley, State of South Dakota, under rules and regulations to be by him prescribed, to be used exclusively for the pasturing of native buffalo, and for no other purpose: Provided, That no lands shall be leased except such tracts as are now included in said buffalo pasture or as may have been subject to homestead entry for a period of 15 years, and have not been entered or appropriated, unless abandoned for a sufficient period so that entries that may have been made have been canceled and the land has reverted to the public domain: Provided further, That the Secretary of the Interior may at any time cancel any lease which may hereafter be made under the provisions hereof and restore said land to the public domain.

Also the following committee amendment, in the nature of a substitute, was read:

Amend by striking out all after the enacting clause, down to and including line 10, on page 2, and substitute the following:

"That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized to extend, for a period of not exceeding 10 years, to the heirs or personal representatives of James Philip, deceased, or to their assignees or transferees, the lease executed to him July 1, 1907, for a buffalo pasture, of sections 26 and 27 north half of section 34, north half of the northeast quarter and north half of the northwest quarter of section 35, and lot 4 of section 26, township 6 north, range 30 east, Black Hills meridian, containing 1,614.50 acres, and he is authorized to withdraw said lands from entry during the terms of said lease: Provided, That the Secretary of the Interior may at any time cancel said renewed lease, which shall contain all the provisions of the original lease: Provided further, That the parties in interest shall be allowed an extension of time until July 1, 1917, to pay the last two installments of rent under the original lease."

Mr. MANN. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word. Does the gentleman know whether these are fractional sections or not?

Mr. FERRIS. I do not. Perhaps the gentleman from South Dakota [Mr. GANDY] may know. The only thing I have is the description given in the letter.

Mr. MANN. Well, being of a mathematical turn of mind, I naturally read of two full sections, a two and one-half section, two quarter sections, and a one-eighth section, and I wondered how much it would amount to.

Mr. GANDY. There are 1,614 acres.

Mr. MANN. Well, section 26 would have 640 acres, section 27 would have 640 acres, and that would make 1,280 acres, north half of section 34 would be 320 acres, and the north half of the northeast quarter would have 80 acres, and the north half of the northwest quarter of section 35 would have 80 acres, and that would make 1,760 acres, and lot 4 of section 25 is still unaccounted for. That is the reason I asked whether these were fractional sections or not. They are not so described.

Mr. GANDY. I take it that they are, in that the figures for the total were furnished by the department.

Mr. MANN. Well, I take it that the department was mistaken. If it was correctly described, it would be described as a fractional section if it be a fractional section. Of course I am perfectly well aware that the description of the number of acres is entirely superfluous and amounts to nothing.

Mr. FERRIS. Let us strike out the acres.

Mr. MANN. I think it would be wise to strike it out.

Mr. LENROOT. The gentleman says that in the north half there are 1,280 acres in sections 26 and 27, the north half of the northeast corner——

Mr. MANN. The north half of 34 first. It would amount to 1,760 acres without considering lot 4. Whatever that is I do not know.

Mr. FERRIS. I move, Mr. Speaker, that on page 2, beginning on line 20, with the word "containing," to strike out the word "containing," in line 20, and all of line 21 and the two first words in line 22.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Clerk will report the amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amend, on page 2, by striking out the word "containing," in line 20, all of line 21, and the first two words in line 22.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The question is on agreeing to the amendment.

The question was taken, and the amendment was agreed to.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. Mr. Speaker, I move to strike out the last word. I note in the letter written by the Secretary of the Interior to the chairman of the committee, Mr. FERRIS, that the rental for this land is fixed at $50 per annum, and then, at the foot of the letter, the Secretary suggests an amendment or a proviso that "the parties in interest shall be allowed an extension of time until January 1, 1917, to pay the last two installments of rent under the original lease."

Mr. FERRIS. This land belongs to an estate. The estate is very poor and it is not settled. I will say to the gentleman that the State of South Dakota is trying to do all it can to try to preserve the buffalo. The Secretary says he thinks it proper to make the extension.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. I am in sympathy with the policy, but I wanted to know if it was accurately stated that the amount was only $50 per annum, and that two years was asked for in which to make the payment.

Mr. FERRIS. That is correct.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The question is on agreeing to the substitute.

The question was taken, and the substitute was agreed to.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The question is on the engrossment and third reading of the bill as amended.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, was read the third time, and passed.

On motion of Mr. FERRIS, a motion to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed was laid on the table.

LIFE JACKETS AND LIFE BUOYS.

The next business on the Calendar for Unanimous Consent was the bill (H. R. 13112) to amend section 14 of the seamen's act of March 4, 1915.

The Clerk read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That section 14 of the seamen's act of March 4, 1915, be amended by striking out subdivisions 3 and 4 of subsection headed "Life jackets and life buoys," regarding the number of life buoys with which steamers navigating the ocean, or any lake, bay, or sound of the United States shall be equipped, and inserting, in lieu thereof, the following:

Third. The minimum number of life buoys with which vessels are to be provided is fixed as follows:

"Vessels under 100 feet in length, minimum number of buoys, 2; vessels 100 feet and less than 200 feet in length, minimum number of buoys, 4, of which two shall be luminous; vessels 200 feet and less than 300 feet in length, minimum number of buoys, 6, of which 2 shall be luminous; vessels 300 feet and less than 400 feet in length, minimum number of buoys, 12, of which 4 shall be luminous; vessels 400 feet and less than 600 feet in length, minimum number of buoys, 18, of which 9 shall be luminous; vessels 600 feet and less than 800 feet in length, minimum number of buoys, 24, of which 12 shall be luminous; vessels 800 feet and over in length, minimum number of buoys, 30, of which 15 shall be luminous.

"Fourth. All the buoys shall be fitted with beckets securely seized. Where two buoys only are carried, one shall be fitted with a life line at least 15 fathoms in length, and where more than two buoys are carried, at least one buoy on each side shall be fitted with a life line of at least 15 fathoms in length. The lights shall be efficient self-igniting lights which can not be extinguished in water and they shall be kept near the buoys to which they belong, with the necessary means of attachment."

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the consideration of the bill?

Mr. KAHN. Reserving the right to object, Mr. Speaker, I would like to have an explanation of the bill.

Mr. ALEXANDER. Mr. Speaker, under the seaman's act, section 14, subhead entitled "Life jackets and life buoys," it is provided under the third subdivision thereof that the minimum number of life buoys that each of the vessels coming within the terms of the act is to be provided with shall be fixed as follows: For a vessel of 400 feet in length or less the minimum number of life buoys is fixed at 12, and then an increased number of life buoys is provided for vessels of more than 400 feet in length.

Section 14 of the act is adopted from the International Convention on Safety of Life at Sea. When we had this act under consideration in the Committee on the Merchant Marine and Fisheries we modified the provisions of the convention, as it appears in section 14, to our lakes and bays and sounds, but overlooked this provision as to life buoys. The law went into effect on the 4th day of November last, and when the Steamboat-Inspection Service began to enforce its provisions with reference to life buoys on tugs and craft of less than 400 feet in length it was discovered that the number of life buoys was in excess of the number necessary for saving life. A conference was had at the office of the Secretary of Commerce in December last at which I was present. All the parties in interest were present, and we agreed that vessels under 400 feet in length might be provided with life buoys as provided in the bill under consideration.

Mr. KAHN. I have no objection, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. Mr. Speaker, I would like to ask the gentleman from Missouri if the chief complaint against section 14, to which he has referred, did not come from the owners of small boats under 400 feet in length engaged in coastwise traffic and traffic on inland waters?

Mr. ALEXANDER. Chiefly from the tugboat men, but including all who own and operate vessels less than 400 feet in length.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. If section 14 under the seamen's law had been put into effect, it would have put 12 life buoys on every vessel under 400 feet in length?

Mr. ALEXANDER. Yes; on every vessel under 400 feet in length. The provision is all right for ocean-going vessels, but it is unnecessary and a hardship on vessels of 100 or 200 or 300 feet in length. In fact, on a tug it would be difficult to find places for 12 life buoys. Then, again, there are only four or five men on board some of the smaller tugs. If attention had been called to this requirement when the seamen's law was under consideration by the committee, it would have been modified, because it is manifestly unnecessary to have 12 life buoys on these smaller vessels as life-saving appliances.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. In section 14 the conditions were, as I recall them, that on all vessels under 400 feet there was to be a minimum of 12 life buoys.

Mr. ALEXANDER. On all vessels under 400 feet in length.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. Under the amendment to section 14 proposed in this bill the number of life buoys required for vessels under 100 feet in length is reduced from 12 to 2. That is correct, is it not?

Mr. ALEXANDER. Yes.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. On vessels of 100 feet in length and not more than 200 feet in length the number of life buoys is reduced from 12 to 4?

Mr. ALEXANDER. Yes; two of which are to be luminous.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. Yes; two of which are to be luminous. That is, they are to carry lights?

Mr. ALEXANDER. Yes; lights that will ignite when the buoy strikes the water—calcium carbide lights.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. So that it will be luminous under the surface?

Mr. ALEXANDER. Yes; on the surface, and will indicate where the buoy is, so that a man can locate it in the nighttime.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. And on vessels from 200 feet in length to 300 feet in length the number of life buoys required is reduced from 12 to 6, and on vessels from 300 feet in length to 400 feet in length you retain 12 buoys as necessary?

Mr. ALEXANDER. Yes, sir.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. And this is done very largely because it was manifest to the committee, after hearings and after conference at the Department of Commerce, that it would be impracticable and onerous to carry as many as 12 life buoys on these small boats?

Mr. ALEXANDER. Yes. The provisions of the International Convention on Safety of Life at Sea were intended to apply to vessels in the over-sea trade.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. Over-seas vessels?

Mr. ALEXANDER. Yes; and in recasting the convention and applying it to our inland waters, including the Great Lakes, this provision was overlooked, otherwise we would have modified it at the time.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. Exactly. The gentleman from Missouri was a member of that convention?

Mr. ALEXANDER. I was a member of the London conference on safety of life at sea.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. Mr. Speaker, I am very glad the Committee on the Merchant Marine and Fisheries has started out to amend and correct the so-called seamen's law. The gentleman from Missouri [Mr. ALEXANDER] and his committee labored hard to frame this law, and they carried into it certain provisions which at the time were believed by practical seagoing men to be impossible of enforcement. Some of the provisions were extremely onerous, as for instance this provision of requiring 12 life rafts on a tug of less than 100 feet in length. It was evident that the committee was acting upon some other impulse than that of information derived from the men who were practically in the business on the inland waters and along the coast line of the United States, and the gentleman from Missouri has very correctly stated that in framing this section 14 the committee was following the lines laid down in this London conference or convention, which was providing for over-seas traffic—that is to say, for vessels engaged in the ocean-going trade, in the foreign trade—and they were such conditions as did not apply to inland waters, where tugboats are constantly employed, nor to our general coastwise trade.

Now, there are many other provisions of this seamen's law to which public attention has been called which may invite the careful scrutiny of the committee later on. The committee has made a break in the law now by reducing the number of life rafts carried on the vessels——

Mr. ALEXANDER. Was the gentleman speaking of life rafts or life buoys?

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. Life buoys.

Mr. JOHNSON of Washington. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. I will yield to the gentleman for a question.

Mr. MILLER of Minnesota. Mr. Speaker, who has the floor?

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. MOORE] has the floor.

Mr. MILLER of Minnesota. For what purpose?

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. Reserving the right to object.

Mr. ALEXANDER. There was no objection whatever, was there?

Mr. JOHNSON of Washington. If the gentleman from Pennsylvania has completed his statement, I would like to ask him a question.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. I have not completed my statement. It may be that the committee in due course will find it necessary to amend this seaman's law in other particulars.

Mr. ALEXANDER. The gentleman from New Jersey [Mr. SCULLY], a Member of this House, is the owner of tug boats. He had copies of the seamen's bill, and we sent them to other tug boat owners. They overlooked this matter at the time, as did other vessel owners, and just as soon as my attention was called to it in December last I agreed that this change ought to be made and introduced the bill now being considered.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. I have just commended the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. ALEXANDER] for making that statement. I think he has acted wisely. I think the committee acted wisely.

Mr. ALEXANDER. There may be some other provisions of the seaman's act which we may find it necessary to amend if they are found to work hardship.

Mr. MILLER of Minnesota. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. ALEXANDER. Yes.

Mr. MILLER of Minnesota. Was this act ever submitted to the tugboat men of the Great Lakes and this provision ever called to their attention, the one now being amended, which relates to the number of life buoys to be carried?

Mr. ALEXANDER. I have had letters from people on the Great Lakes and the Pacific coast and wherever the attempt has been made to enforce the law protesting against the provision requiring 12 life buoys on vessels under 400 feet in length.

Mr. MILLER of Minnesota. I understood the gentleman to state that the gentleman from New Jersey [Mr. SCULLY], a member of the committee, knew about it.

Mr. ALEXANDER. No; I said he was a Member of this House, and that he had had copies of the seamen's bill when it was under consideration in the committee and in the House, as did many of the vessel owners, but they overlooked this provision.

Mr. MILLER of Minnesota. I wish to state that I have had the most vigorous protests from the Great Lakes against this provision of the seaman's bill, and I doubt if it was ever called to their attention or if they ever knew about it.

Mr. ALEXANDER. I said when the bill was pending nobody discovered this apparent hardship, and as soon as it was called to our attention the committee reported this bill to amend the seamen's act in that regard.

Mr. MILLER of Minnesota. Does the gentleman think the committee have gone far enough in reducing the number of buoys that should be carried by tugboats less than 100 feet in length? They have reduced the number to two. Would it not be just as well to reduce the number to one?

Mr. ALEXANDER. The representatives of the tugboat men were present and these provisions were agreed upon. I think there ought to be two life buoys—one on either side of the vessel—in the interest of saving life.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. Mr. Chairman, I think the committee acted wisely in bringing in this bill, and in doing so they will have afforded great relief to the small boat owners of this country, who were seriously affected by the seaman's law as originally passed. The committee will find, of course, that they made some errors in the original seaman's law. There have been numerous complaints about it, coming up from all sections of the country. It has to a large extent interfered with transportation by water. I am glad this change has been suggested by the committee, and for the information of the gentleman from Minnesota, as well as others, I wish to repeat that I believe in due course of time the committee will find it necessary to bring in other amendments to the seaman's bill, and I trust they will.

Mr. MILLER of Minnesota. Will the gentleman yield for an inquiry?

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. Yes.

Mr. MILLER of Minnesota. Is the gentleman aware of the condition existing among the small craft engaged in fishing on the lakes of the United States, boats of from 50 to 60 feet in length, and is he aware that the seaman's law would practically have put them all out of business, by compelling them to carry so great a number of life buoys that they could not carry their fish?

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. I want to say, in fairness to the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. ALEXANDER] that he made substantially that statement as being the consensus of opinion of the conference held here recently at the Department of Commerce, and to that extent this bill is going to relieve these small boat owners, and to that extent it is a good thing.

Mr. ALEXANDER. The gentleman knows that the provision of the existing law has been the subject of a conference with the representatives of these boats.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. That is the reason I asked the gentleman about the reduction in the number of life buoys on boats of a certain length, to show the graduated scale by which the gentleman worked out the conclusions found in the bill.

Amongst other complaints against the seaman's law has been one that it has caused the removal of the American flag from the high seas. I have no doubt much will have to be said about that before we get much further into the business of this Congress.

Mr. ALEXANDER. I will say to the gentleman that there are more vessels under the American flag now than at any time since the Civil War.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. I know that the present war conditions have brought about very many changes, but it nevertheless remains a fact that under the seamen's bill as it stands to-day many vessels have had to change their flag, and some of them are now sailing under the flags of foreign countries because of the oppressive conditions imposed upon them by the seamen's act.

Mr. ALEXANDER. I am not advised of many such vessels.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. The gentleman knows that out on the Pacific coast——

Mr. ALEXANDER. There are the vessels of the Pacific Mail Steamship Co. I do not care to go into that now. It would make an interesting recital, but not relative at this time.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. I do not intend to, but merely make a passing reference to it. I want to commend the committee for having made the first break in the seamen's law. I think that is a matter upon which we ought to congratulate the committee and the country as showing that we are going to break into the law and make corrections of the errors in it, of which the committee may not have been fully advised at the time the law was passed.

Day before yesterday a vessel started out of the port of New York, and it did not get very far before, under the provisions of this law, the crew suddenly decided not to go any farther, and the vessel necessarily had to come back to port. Now, that is a condition that has been brought about by this law, which exempts a certain class of people from fulfilling their contracts. This bill has made it possible, apparently, to stop voyages. That happened in one instance in New York Harbor only day before yesterday. I say there are many things in the seamen's law to be remedied.

Mr. LENROOT. Mr. Speaker, I call for the regular order.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Wisconsin calls for the regular order. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, was read the third time, and passed.

On motion of Mr. ALEXANDER, a motion to reconsider the vote whereby the bill was passed was laid on the table.

FOREST HOMESTEADS.

Mr. FERRIS. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to reinstate House bill 10668, stricken off awhile ago on the objection of the gentleman from Michigan.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Oklahoma [Mr. FERRIS] asks unanimous consent to have the bill H. R. 10668, or 94 on the Unanimous Consent Calendar, reinstated.

Mr. McLAUGHLIN. Mr. Speaker, I agreed to withdraw my objection to the bill and let it be passed without prejudice.

Mr. FERRIS. We do not propose to take it up to-day.

The SPEAKER. It has to be reinstated first. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. FERRIS. Now, Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that the bill be passed without prejudice.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Oklahoma?

There was no objection.

LEAVE TO ADDRESS THE HOUSE.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. GRAHAM] be permitted to address the House for five minutes.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Illinois asks unanimous consent that the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. GRAHAM] be permitted to address the House for five minutes. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE.

A message from the Senate, by Mr. Waldorf, one of its clerks, announced that the Senate had insisted upon its amendments to the bill (H. R. 12207) making appropriations for the legislative, executive, and judicial expenses of the Government for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1917, and for other purposes, disagreed to by the House of Representatives, had agreed to the conference asked by the House on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses thereon, and had appointed Mr. MARTIN of Virginia, Mr. OVERMAN, and Mr. SMOOT as the conferees on the part of the Senate.

ENROLLED BILL SIGNED.

The SPEAKER announced his signature to enrolled bill of the following title:

S. 4889. An act to renew patent No. 21053.

MESSAGE FROM THE PRESIDENT OF THE UNITED STATES.

A message from the President of the United States, by Mr. Sharkey, one of his secretaries, announced that the President had on April 17, 1916, approved and signed joint resolution and bills of the following titles:

H. J. Res. 171. Joint resolution to continue in effect the provisions of the act of March 9, 1906;

H. R. 9923. An act granting the consent of Congress to the county of Mitchell or to the county of Baker, both of the State of Georgia, acting jointly or separately, and their successors and assigns, to construct a bridge across the Flint River;

H. R. 10139. An act to authorize the city of Fairmont to construct and operate a bridge across the Monongahela River at or near the city of Fairmont, in the State of West Virginia; and

S. 1424. An act incorporating the American Academy of Arts and Letters.

GLENORA G. HARRIS.

Mr. GRAHAM. Mr. Speaker, I desire to ask the attention of the House to a matter which requires in order to give relief that immediate action should be taken with respect to it. There is on the calendar an act (S. 3560) passed by the Senate and referred to the Judiciary Committee of the House, passed through its subcommittee and through the general committee and reported here for action.

It is a bill providing for specific relief in a specific case up in Clearfield, Pa. A property was sold under judicial proceedings. The purchase money was paid by the woman purchaser—$5,000—which went into the hands of the receivers, and under the direction of the court was distributed among the creditors, and the receivers have been discharged. The property originally belonged to this woman. She sold it to a corporation, a telephone company, for bonds. That corporation had it and collected the rents from it for six years, and then failed. The bonds were never paid; not a penny of the bonds was ever recovered. The corporation was adjudged a bankrupt and receivers were appointed. Upon a petition filed, the court ordered a private sale to Mrs. Harris. Prior to making the order for sale, a reference was made by the court, and upon the referee's report the order for the private sale was made. This same property which Mrs. Harris had originally owned and sold to the telephone company for $7,500 in bonds was purchased by her for $5,000 and paid for, and now, two or three years after that transaction, she is about selling the property to the Order of Elks. Counsel who are passing the title to the Order of Elks, the purchasers, have pointed out a defect in the title, namely, that the district court of the middle district of Pennsylvania had no power to make an order to sell at private sale.

The Judiciary Committee of the Senate and the Senate and the Judiciary Committee of the House all have agreed that the facts are of such a character as to require a remedy, and that for the relief of Mrs. Harris the only remedy is by a bill to perfect the title to that property. This bill is a remedial act, and will cure the title. The sale to the Order of Elks is pending, and has been pending for some time. Unless speedy action is taken, the sale of this property will be lost, and this woman will be left with her imperfect title, unmarketable and unsalable. She ought not to lose her money and her title also.

I ask unanimous consent to have the bill S. 3560 on the Private Calendar considered and passed at this time.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Pennsylvania asks unanimous consent to have the bill S. 3560 considered at this time. Is there objection?

Mr. NORTON. Reserving the right to object, may I inquire where is the bill now?

Mr. GRAHAM. On the Private Calendar.

Mr. NORTON. How long has it been on the Private Calendar?

Mr. GRAHAM. Since April 14.

Mr. NORTON. When was the bill introduced?

Mr. GRAHAM. It was introduced in the Senate. I knew nothing about it there. My attention was called to it after it was sent to the House, and it then came before the Judiciary Committee and I was instructed to take charge of it on the floor of the House.

Mr. NORTON. When did it reach the Judiciary Committee of the House?

Mr. GRAHAM. April 14; and it passed the Senate March 9.

Mr. NORTON. I wanted to inquire about it to find the reason why this bill should have the right of way.

Mr. MANN. Because it is an emergency matter.

The SPEAKER. The Chair has proceeded with reference to unanimous consent in this way: That unless bills are on the Unanimous Consent Calendar or unless it is an emergency matter of some sort the Chair will not recognize any Member to ask unanimous consent for the consideration of a bill. Once in a while there is a matter of emergency, and it seems to the Chair, from what the Chair was told about this bill, that this is a case of emergency.

Mr. NORTON. I have no objection.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

The bill was ordered to be read the third time, was read the third time, and passed.

RECORD OF ASSIGNMENTS OR CONVEYANCES IN PATENT OFFICE.

The next business on the Private Calendar was the bill (H. R. 12716) amending sections 4898, 4906, 4921, 4934, and 4935 of the Revised Statutes of the United States.

The Clerk read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That section 4898 of the Revised Statutes be, and the same is hereby, amended to read as follows:

"SEC. 4898. Every patent or any interest therein shall be assignable in law by an instrument in writing, and the patentee or his assigns or legal representatives may in like manner grant and convey an exclusive right under his patent to the whole or any specified part of the United States. An assignment, grant, or conveyance shall be void as against any subsequent purchaser or mortgagee for a valuable consideration, without notice, unless it is recorded in the Patent Office within three months from the date thereof or prior to such subsequent purchase or mortgage.

"If any such assignment, grant, or conveyance of any patent shall be acknowledged before any notary public of the several States or Territories or the District of Columbia, or any commissioner of any court of the United States for any district or Territory, or before any secretary of legation or consular officer authorized to administer oaths or perform notarial acts under section 1750 of the Revised Statutes, the certificate of such acknowledgment, under the hand and official seal of such notary or other officer, shall be prima facie evidence of the execution of such assignment, grant, or conveyance."

SEC. 2. That section 4906 of the Revised Statutes be amended to read as follows:

"SEC. 4906. The clerk of any court of the United States, for any district of Territory wherein testimony is to be taken for use in any contested case pending in the Patent Office, shall, upon the application of any party thereto, or of his agent or attorney, issue a subpœna for any witness residing or being within such district or Territory commanding him to appear and testify before any officer in such district or Territory authorized to take depositions and affidavits at any time and place in the subpœna stated. But no witness shall be required to attend at any place more than 40 miles from the place where the subpœna is served upon him; and the provisions of section 869 of the Revised Statutes relating to the issuance of subpœnas duces tecum shall apply to contested cases in the Patent Office."

SEC. 3. That section 4934 of the Revised Statutes be amended to read as follows:

"SEC. 4934. The following shall be the rates for patent fees:

"On filing each original application for a patent, except in design cases, $15.

"On issuing each original patent, except in design cases, $20.

"In design cases: For 3 years and 6 months, $10; for 7 years, $15; for 14 years, $30.

"On every application for the reissue of a patent, $30.

"On filing each disclaimer, $10.

"On an appeal for the first time from the primary examiners to the examiners in chief, $10.

"On every appeal from the examiners in chief to the Commissioner, $20.

"For certified copies of patents and other papers, including certified printed copies, 10 cents per hundred words.

"For recording every assignment, agreement, power of attorney, or other paper under one patent, application, or invention, of 300 words or under, $1; of over 300 and under 1,000 words, $2; and for each additional thousand words or fraction thereof, $1; and for each additional patent, application, or invention included in one writing, 25 cents.

"For copies of drawings, the reasonable cost of making them."

SEC. 4. That section 4935 of the Revised Statutes be amended to read as follows:

"SEC. 4935. Patent fees shall be paid to the Commissioner of Patents, and the commissioner, or such person as he may deputize, shall make daily deposits in some bank in the District of Columbia, to be designated by the Secretary of the Treasury for this purpose, of all moneys received as patent fees; and shall make deposits of such fees with the Treasurer of the United States at such times and in such manner as the latter may direct; and shall also make monthly reports in aggregate to the Secretary of the Treasury of all remittances received and moneys refunded."

SEC. 5. That section 4921 of the Revised Statutes be amended to read as follows:

"SEC. 4921. The several courts vested with jurisdiction of cases arising under the patent laws shall have power to grant injunctions according to the course and principles of courts of equity, to prevent the violation of any right secured by patent, on such terms as the court may deem reasonable, and upon a decree being rendered in any such case for an infringement the complainant shall be entitled to recover, in addition to the profits to be accounted for by the defendant, the damages the complainant has sustained thereby, and the court shall assess the same or cause the same to be assessed under its direction. And the court shall have the same power to increase such damages, in its discretion, as is given to increase the damages found by verdicts in actions in the nature of actions of trespass upon the case; but in any suit or action brought for the infringement of any patent there shall be no recovery of profits or damages for any infringement committed more than six years before the filing of the bill of complaint or the isssuing of the writ in such suit or action, and this provision shall apply to existing causes of action. And it shall be the duty of the clerks of such courts within one month after the filing of any action, suit, or proceeding arising under the patent laws to give notice thereof in writing to the Commissioner of Patents, setting forth in order the names and addresses of the litigants, names of the inventors, and the designating numbers of the patents involved, and it shall be the duty of the Commissioner of Patents on receipt of such notice forthwith to indorse the same upon the file wrapper of the said patent or patents and to incorporate the same as a part of the contents of said file or file wrapper, and for each notice required to be furnished to the Commissioner of Patents in compliance herewith a fee of 50 cents shall be taxed by the clerk as costs of suit."

Mr. OGLESBY. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that this bill be considered in the House as in the Committee of the Whole.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from New York asks unanimous consent to consider this bill in the House as in the Committee of the Whole. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

The SPEAKER. The question is on the engrossment and third reading of the bill.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, was read the third time, and passed.

On motion of Mr. OGLESBY, a motion to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed was laid on the table.

ADDITIONAL LAND DISTRICT IN CALIFORNIA.

Mr. KETTNER. Mr. Speaker, I move to suspend the rules and pass the bill H. R. 529, as amended, which I send to the desk and ask to have read.

The Clerk read as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That an additional land district is hereby created for the State of California, to embrace the lands contained in the following-described boundaries: Beginning at the intersection of the range line between ranges 5 and 6 east of the San Bernardino meridian with the southern boundary of California; thence north along the range line, between ranges 5 and 6 east, to the northwest corner of township 9 south, range 6 east; thence east along the second standard parallel south to the southwest corner of township 8 south, range 7 east; thence north along the range line, between ranges 6 and 7 east, to the northwest corner of township 2 south, range 7 east; thence east along the township line between townships 1 and 2 south to its intersection with the Colorado River; thence southerly along the Colorado River to its intersection with the south boundary of California; thence southwesterly along the southern boundary of California to its intersection with the range line between ranges 5 and 6 east, to the place of beginning; that the land district shall be known as the Imperial district, and the Secretary of the Interior shall be authorized to select the site of the land office.

SEC. 2. That the Secretary of the Interior shall cause all plats, maps, records, and papers in the Los Angeles land office which relate to or form a necessary part of the records of the lands embraced in the district hereby created to be transferred to the Imperial land distfict.

SEC. 3. That the President is hereby authorized to appoint, by and with the advice and consent of the Senate, a register and receiver for said land district, and they shall be subject to the same laws and entitled to the same conpensation as is or may be hereafter provided by law in relation to the existing land offices and officers in said State.

The SPEAKER. Is a second demanded?

Mr. MANN. Mr. Speaker, I demand a second.

Mr. KETTNER. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that a second be considered as ordered.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from California is entitled to 20 minutes and the gentleman from Illinois to 20 minutes.

Mr. KETTNER. Mr. Speaker, this bill proposes to create a land office in Imperial County. It is recommended by the Secretary and has twice passed the committee unanimously. The business transacted in thirty-odd land offices now in the United States does not exceed that transacted in the Los Angeles office in connection with lands in the Imperial Valley, and 80 per cent of the contested cases in that office are from Imperial Valley, on account of three different surveys having been made. The people of Imperial Valley are cut off from the rest of the world, as it were. It takes them 12 hours to go from Imperial Valley to Los Angeles, at an expense of $7.90 each way, and in addition to that they have to pay their Pullman fare. I know of several contested cases where the settlers have had to go to Los Angeles to the land office, take their witnesses with them, then found that the cases were postponed, and they could not afford to keep the witnesses there. The witnesses went home, and the settlers were put to the expense of bringing them back; and in some cases, where they could not borrow the money to do so, have lost their land.

Mr. STEENERSON. Mr. Speaker, will the gentelman yield?

Mr. KETTNER. Yes.

Mr. STEENERSON. Do I understand that the settlers on the public domain and their witnesses in Imperial Valley ride in Pullman sleepers to the land office, and back again?

Mr. KETTNER. Well, there are tourist sleepers from Imperial Valley to Los Angeles.

Mr. STEENERSON. With us they have to travel 150 miles with a team of oxen.

Mr. KETTNER. All sleeping cars at the present time, I I believe, are known as Pullman sleepers, whether of the second or third class.

Mr. STEENERSON. Where is this land located?

Mr. KETTNER. In Imperial Valley.

Mr. STEENERSON. And where is the land office to be?

Mr. KETTNER. It is for the Secretary to decide—in which town in Imperial Valley.

Mr. STEENERSON. It is simply an additional land office?

Mr. KETTNER. Yes. I believe the gentleman from Minnesota [Mr. STEENERSON] had the pleasure of visiting Imperial Valley last year, and perhaps he can describe it and state to the House the condition of the people there at the present time.

Mr. STEENERSON. Oh, I would not think of competing with the gentleman in describing the glories of Imperial Valley. It is true that it is separated from the rest of California by a ridge of mountains, and it is quite a long distance to travel. I agree with him on the point that we ought to have a land office there, but what I thought was remarkable was the fact that the settlers who went to the land office rode in Pullman cars. The land is very rich there and I do not wonder at it. It is the richest land I ever saw anywhere.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. KETTNER. Yes.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. Does this new division take in the whole of southern California?

Mr. KETTNER. It takes in all of Imperial County, part of Riverside, part of San Diego, and part of San Bernardino Counties.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. How far does it run along the coast line?

Mr. KETTNER. It is on the east side of the mountains.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. And does not touch the coast line at all?

Mr. KETTNER. No.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. And at the present time all those in this part of southern California having to do with land matters are obliged to travel to Los Angeles to have their business attended to?

Mr. KETTNER. I will try to explain to the gentleman. In my own county, San Diego, the department has just opened up part of the Cleveland National Forest, and the people living 70 miles from San Diego in the mountains could go down to Imperial Valley in two or three hours and be at the land office, where, as it is at present, they have to travel 70 miles to San Diego and then take a train to Los Angeles, 132 miles from San Diego.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. San Diego is not in this district.

Mr. KETTNER. A part of San Diego County is in this proposed district.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. There is a very large settlement going on in Imperial Valley at the present time?

Mr. KETTNER. Yes.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. It is extending southward and increasing very rapidly?

Mr. KETTNER. Yes. Mr. Speaker, I reserve the remainder of my time.

The SPEAKER. The question is on suspending the rules and passing the bill.

The question was taken; and two-thirds having voted in favor thereof, the rules were suspended and the bill was passed.

NATIONAL PARK IN HAWAII.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Speaker, I move to suspend the rules and pass the bill (H. R. 9525) to establish a national park in the Territory of Hawaii, with committee amendments, which I send to the desk and ask to have read.

The Clerk read as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the tracts of land on the island of Hawaii and on the island of Maui, in the Territory of Hawaii, hereinafter described, shall be perpetually dedicated and set apart as a public park or pleasure ground for the benefit and enjoyment of the people of the United States, to be known as Hawaii National Park. Said tracts of land are described as follows: First. All that tract of land comprising portions of the lands of Kapapala and Keauhou, in the district of Kau, and Kahaualea, Panaunui, and Apua, in the district of Puna, on the island of Hawaii, containing approximately 35,865 acres, bounded as follows: Beginning at a point on the west edge of the Keamoku Aa Flow (lava flow of 1823), from which point the true azimuth and distance to Government survey trigonometrical station Ohaikea is 166° 20′, 6,350 feet, and running by true azimuths: (1) Along the west edge of the Keamoku lava flow in a northeasterly and northwesterly direction, the direct azimuth and distance being 198° 10′, 14,700 feet; (2) 256°, 11,400 feet, more or less, across the land of Kapapala and Keauhou to a marked point on the Humuula trail; (3) 328° 15′, 8,725 feet, across the land of Keauhou to the top of the fault north of the Kau road; (4) along the fault in a northeasterly direction, the direction azimuth and distance being 251° 30′, 4,330 feet; (5) 245°, 6,000 feet, to a point near the southwest boundary of the land of Olaa; (6) 337° 10′, 8,650 feet, more or less, to the junction of the Hilo and Keauhou roads; (7) 332° 20′, 3,300 feet, more or less, to the southwest corner of the land of Keaau; (8) 332° 10′, 7,000 feet, along the land of Kahaualea; (9) 281°, 30,375 feet, more or less, across the land of Kahaualea, passing through the north corner of the land of Panaunui, to the north corner of the land of Laepuki; (10) 31° 30′, 13,200 feet, more or less, along the land of Laepuki and across the land of Panaunui; (11) 89° 10′, 32,900 feet, more or less, across the land of Panaunui, Apua, and Keauhou to "Palilele-o-Kalihipaa," the boundary point of the Keauhou-Kapapala boundary; (12) 51° 30′, 5,500 feet, across the land of Papapala; (13) 102° 50′, 19,150 feet, across the land of Kapapala to a small cone about 1,500 feet southwest of Puu Koae trigonometrical station; (14) 166° 20′ 21,000 feet, across the land of Kapapala to the point of beginning.

Second. All that tract of land comprising portions of the lands of Kapapala and Kahuku, in the district of Kau, island of Hawaii; Keauhou second, in the district of North Kona; and Kaohe, in the district of Hamakua, containing 17,920 acres, bounded as follows: Beginning at Pohaku Hanalei of Humuula, a small cone on the brow of Mauna Loa, and at the common boundary points of the lands of Humuula, Kapapala, and Kaohe, from which the true azimuth and distance to Government survey trigonometrical station Omaokolii is 195° 12′ 18″, 78,286 feet, and running by true azimuths: First, 298°, 5,240 feet; second, 28° 36,960 feet; third, 118,° 21,120 feet; fourth, 208°, 36,960 feet; fifth, 298°, 15,880 feet, to the point of beginning.

Third. A strip of land of sufficient width for a road to connect the two tracts of land on the island of Hawaii above described, the width and location of which strip shall be determined by the Secretary of the Interior.

Fourth. All that tract of land comprising portions of the lands of Honuaula and Kula, in the district of Makawao, and Kipahulu, Kaupo, and Kahikinui, in the district of Hana, on the island of Maui, containing approximately 21,150 acres, bounded as follows: Beginning at a point called Kolekole, on the summit near the most western point of the rim of the crater of Haleakala, and running by approximate azimuths and distances: First, 193° 45′, 19,350 feet along the west slope of the crater of Haleakala to a point called Puu-o-Ili; second, 208°, 23,000 feet up the western slope and across Koolau Gap to the point where the southwest boundary of Koolau Forest Reserve crosses the east rim of Koolau Gap; third, 306° 30′, 17,150 feet along the southwest boundary of Koolau Forest Reserve to a point called Palalia, on the east rim of the crater of Haleakala; fourth, along the east rim of the crater of Haleakala, the direct azimuth and distance being 354° 15′, 18,300 feet to a point on the east rim of Kaupo Gap, shown on Hawaiian Government survey maps at an elevation of 4,208 feet; fifth, 88° 45′, 3,300 feet across Kaupo Gap to a point called Kaumikaohu, on the boundary line between the lands of Kipahulu and Kahikinui; sixth, 102° 30′, 40,750 feet along the south slope of the crater of Haleakala to the point of beginning.

SEC. 2. That nothing herein contained shall affect any valid existing claim, location, or entry under the land laws of the United States, whether for homestead, mineral, right of way, or any other purpose whatsoever, or shall affect the rights of any such claimant, locator, or entryman to the full use and enjoyment of his land. Whenever consistent with the primary purposes of the park the act of February 15, 1901, applicable to the location of rights of way in certain national parks and the national forests for irrigation and other purposes, shall be and remain applicable to the lands included within the park. The Secretary of the Interior may, in his discretion and upon such conditions as he may deem wise, grant easements or rights of way for steam, electric, or similar transportation upon or across the park.

SEC. 3. That no lands located within the park boundaries now held in private or municipal ownership shall be affected by or subject to the provisions of this act.

SEC. 4. That the said park shall be under the executive control of the Secretary of the Interior, whose duty it shall be, as soon as practicable, to make and publish such rules and regulations as he may deem necessary or proper for the care and management of the same. Such regulations shall provide for the preservation from injury of all timber, birds, mineral deposits, and natural curiosities or wonders within said park, and their retention in their natural condition as nearly as possible. The Secretary may in his discretion grant leases for terms not exceeding 20 years, at such annual rental as he may determine, of parcels of land in said park of not more than 20 acres in all to any one person, corporation, or company for the erection and maintenance of buildings for the accommodation of visitors; but no such lease shall include any of the objects of curiosity or interest in said park or exclude the public from free and convenient approach thereto or convey, either expressly or by implication, any exclusive privilege within the park except upon the premises held thereunder and for the time granted therein; and every such lease shall require the lessee to observe and obey each and every provision in any act of Congress and every rule, order, or regulation of the Secretary of the Interior concerning the use, care, management, or government of the park, or any object or property therein, under penalty of forfeiture of such lease. The Secretary may in his discretion grant to persons or corporations now holding leases of land in the park, upon the surrender thereof, new leases hereunder, upon the terms and stipulations contained in their present leases, with such modifications, restrictions, and reservations as he may prescribe. All of the proceeds of said leases and other revenues that may be derived from any source connected with the park shall be expended under the direction of the Secretary, in the management and protection of the same and the construction of roads and paths therein. The Secretary may also, in his discretion, permit the erection and maintenance of buildings in said park for scientific purposes: Provided, That no appropriation for the maintenance, supervision, and improvement of said park in excess of $10,000 annually shall be made unless the same shall have first been expressly authorized by law: And provided further, That no appropriation shall be made for the improvement or maintenance of said park until proper conveyances shall be made to the United States of such perpetual easements and rights of way over private lands within the exterior boundaries of said park as the Secretary of the Interior shall find necessary to make said park reasonably accessible in all its parts, and said Secretary shall when such easements and rights of way have been conveyed to the United States report the same to Congress.

The SPEAKER. Is a second demanded?

Mr. FERRIS. I demand a second.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that a second be considered as ordered.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Illinois has 20 minutes and the gentleman from Oklahoma 20 minutes.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Speaker, on the Island of Hawaii, which is one of the Hawaiian group of islands, is the living volcano called Kilauea, which I believe is the only perpetual and perennial living volcano in the world. Not a great way from it is the mountain called Mauna Loa, which is an occasional volcano and which rises so very high that it is covered with snow. It is proposed now to make a national park of the Government-owned land embracing these two volcanoes and a strip which will connect the two. The land is valueless except for scenic purposes. On the island of Maui, which is another one of the Hawaiian group, is the largest extinct volcanic crater in the world, a crater about 30 miles in circumference, from which people look down on the sunrise and sunset upon the clouds below. While I do not propose to describe the scene that some other gentlemen belonging to this House and I witnessed last year, I never expect to see at any time or place in this world any scenic effect that will compare with what I saw up there. It is proposed to make the Government-owned land there a national park. The total area of land which is embraced within the limits described in the park is about 75,000 acres, of which more than half is privately owned or municipally owned land, and we do not interfere to the title to any of this land, except we provide in the bill that appropriations for the support of the park shall not be made until any privately owned land which is required for roads or access from one part to another shall have been donated without expense to the United States Government. The total expense under the bill which can be appropriated any time for the care of those two parks—really three parks, which are called one park—is limited to $10,000, which I regret, although it is a committee amendment and I have included it in my motion. I do not care to detain the House unnecessarily. This does not interfere with anybody, except that it will prevent any private party, if he should undertake to do it, from getting control of all the sites of Kilauea, the living volcano—that is, where you look down into the crater into the boiling lava.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MANN. I do.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. Will the gentleman, who is well posted on the subject, give us some description as to the plant life around about the vicinity of Kilauea, such as the fern life?

Mr. MANN. The most notable thing around there, of course, is the tree fern, some of which grow to 30 or 40 feet in height and have leaves 20 to 30 feet in length, with innumerable leaflets; and if one who never has seen them can imagine the ordinary fern which we are familiar with unfolding its leaves and reaching up until it has reached with its leaf 40 to 50 feet, with its trunk of 30 or 40 feet high, you can get some indefinite notion of what you see there. Of course, that is a tropical country, though not so warm and not so tropical as Panama or the Philippine Islands. I would be very glad to yield to the distinguished gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. MOORE] to give a further description of this beautiful and royal scene which we both witnessed with Uncle Joe and others out there a year ago.

Mr. CANNON. And at the trunk of each leaf of the fern, when the strands are stripped off, is a deadly weapon.

Mr. MANN. Not being in a military mood, I shall not describe that part of it and will yield to the gentleman from Pennsylvania. I will yield him time if he will take it. I reserve the balance of my time.

Mr. FERRIS. Mr. Speaker, the Public Lands Committee held hearings on this bill, and we had before us Prof. Jagger, a scientist from Boston, Mass., who for a number of years has conducted investigations on the very brink of this most wonderful volcano. I want to second everything that the gentleman from Illinois said and perhaps add a word to it. I, with others, witnessed the spectacle out there last summer, and to my mind this is a spot that is certainly entitled through its natural scenic beauty to be made into a national park. The Delegate from Hawaii introduced the bill and it was brought before the House Public Lands Committee. The committee gave it careful consideration, and after hearing the Delegate, Mr. Desho, Prof. Jagger, and Mr. Ballou, from the islands, and after having made trips back and forth to the department three or four times with correspondence to perfect this bill, the committee think that they have very well safeguarded the bill and have brought these three wonderful natural scenic affairs into a national park.

Mr. MANN. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. FERRIS. I will.

Mr. MANN. If the gentleman will permit me to say in this connection, I am making the motion to suspend the rules on the bill introduced by the gentleman from Hawaii, Delegate KALANIANAOLE, at his request.

Mr. FERRIS. Certainly; and I am sure that both he and the committee are very much obliged to the gentleman from Illinois for helping to get the bill through. On the last unanimous-consent day it was called up under unanimous consent, but it was objected to, and I am very much obliged to the gentleman from Illinois for his help.

The total acreage of the proposed park is 75,295 acres. Mauna Loa has 17,920 acres in the mountain tract, and about half of that is public land and the rest is owned by an estate.

Mr. SLAYDEN. Do you propose to buy that?

Mr. FERRIS. No part of it is to be purchased. There are 35,685 acres in the Kilauea tract. Four-ninths of that is in public ownership and the rest is in private ownership. The Haleakala tract has about 21,150 acres, and about one-third of it is public land.

As stated by the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MANN], no part of that private land is to be bought. Four-ninths of the entire area is public land, and proper reservations are to be made for the right of way, and without expense to the Government before the park is created. It is limited to $10,000 appropriation each year, so that if the amount gets larger than that it will be subject to a point of order and can be stricken off by any Member of the House who objects to such increase. The volcano of Kilauea is said by Prof. Jagger and other scientists to be the most active and the most continuous volcano in the world, for essentially it has been active practically every moment during the last century. It is a boiling, gurgling sea of lava that can be seen there at any time of the night and day—certainly the most wonderful spectacle I ever beheld. Mauna Loa is another part of the park, and that volcano is active about every 10 years, and when it is active it is more active than the other. The lava flows across the island for many miles and becomes dangerous to the cities and towns and the people who live there. The mountain of Haleakala is 10,000 feet high. The gentleman from Illinois described the wonderful sight of a sunset on the mountain at that height. The indentation, or the rift, in the top of the mountain is 3,000 feet deep and is some 8 miles in circumference. It is a wonderful spectacle. I think the people out there are entitled to the park. I think they ought to have it. I think it has sufficient natural scenic beauty to be worthy of the name of a national park. So many proposals come in that do not really have merit, so many proposals come in that the Government is asked to appropriate for, in which there are really no natural wonders; but this is not one of those cases. It is to be a real park. It ought to be passed, and passed now.

I hope the bill will receive the vote of everyone in the House. I am sure all who saw it or have taken occasion to look it up and know of the wonders to be found there will give full approval of it.

I desire to print herewith the report, which shows the proposal is approved by Secretary Lane and was unanimously reported by the House Public Lands Committee:

[House of Representatives, Report No. 131, Sixty-fourth Congress, first session.]

NATIONAL PARK IN HAWAII.

Mr. FERRIS, from the Committee on the Public Lands, submitted the following report:

The Committee on the Public Lands, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. 9525) to create a national park in the Territory of Hawaii, having had the same under consideration, report it back to the House with the recommendation that it do pass with amendment as follows:

"Provided, That no appropriation for the maintenance, supervision, or improvement of said park in excess of $10,000 annually shall be made unless the same shall have first been expressly authorized by law: And provided further, That no appropriation shall be made for the improvement or maintenance of said park until proper conveyance shall be made to the United States of such perpetual easements and rights of way over private lands within the exterior boundaries of said park as the Secretary of the Interior shall find necessary to make said park reasonably accessible in all its parts, and said Secretary shall, when such easements and rights of way have been conveyed to the United States, report the same to Congress."

The bill proposes to establish the Hawaiian National Park, including the three crater areas and natural wonders of the three great volcanoes of Hawaii, respectively, Mauna Loa volcano, Kilauea volcano, and Haleakala volcano.

By the provisions of this bill 75,295 acres are set aside, four-ninths of which is public land, and the balance, chiefly waste land, belongs to educational and eleemosynary trusts, said to be willing to cede the land in large measure.

No appropriation is carried by the bill, and it is provided that no appropriation shall be made until proper conveyances in the matter of the private lands shall be made to the United States such as the Secretary of the Interior shall find necessary. Otherwies existing claims and privately owned lands are unaffected by the bill.

Strong reasons for creating a national park in this district are that the craters in question are among the most remarkable of natural wonders. Kilauea is the most continuously active volcano, Mauna Loa the largest volcano, and Haleakala the largest and most spectacular crater in the world. There is urgent need for the protection of curiosities now being damaged. Scientific studies in inaccessible parts of the area, of importance for the public safety, will be furthered by Federal control and park improvement. Scientifically and popularly, the volcanoes are a national rather than a local asset, and the opinions of travelers appear to be unanimous that this area is of national importance for park preservation.

The Secretary of the Interior favors the bill, and his report is printed herewith:

FEBRUARY 2, 1916.

MY DEAR MR. FERRIS: Your letter of January 22 has been received, inclosing H. R. bill 9525, with request for report thereon. This bill proposes the establishment of a national park in the Territory of Hawaii, such park to include two of the great craters on the island of Hawaii and one on the island of Maui. I am in favor of the preservation of these great natural wonders, and would be glad to see them made a part of our national park system.

Cordially, yours,

FRANKLIN K. LANE, Secretary.

Hon. SCOTT FERRIS,
Chairman Committee on the Public Lands,
House of Representatives.

Mr. MANN. Just one word. This bill provides for the Government making into a park two active volcanoes. My recollection is—and I may be wrong about it—that there are about 75 active volcanoes in the world, of which about half, strange to say, are on territory belonging to the United States. And there are scientists who believe, by constant observation of volcanic and earthquake activities, they may be able, possibly, to predict when a volcanic eruption will occur, or possibly when an earthquake will occur, or, at least, advise those who are to be affected, when it comes or starts, as to how dangerous it will be and how long it will last. And it is quite fitting that in a country that really does not possess a very large proportion of the world's surface, but that has about half of the active volcanoes, that we should have a place where our people can see them.

Mr. SLAYDEN. Will the gentleman yield for a question?

Mr. MANN. Yes.

Mr. SLAYDEN. Is it not true that Prof. Jagger, who has been observing the volcano at Kilauea, is predicting now—and with a considerable degree of confidence, based on his observation—a renewed and a very much increased activity in a couple of years or such a matter? In his address to us——

Mr. MANN. I would not say that it was not true, because very likely it is true; and I am sure it is if the gentleman from Texas thinks it is.

Mr. SLAYDEN. He said so in his address to us that Sunday afternoon.

Mr. MANN. Very likely. I think Prof. Jagger has been in Washington this winter, more or less. I met him several times and I heard him deliver a lecture here which was very interesting, by the way. He is one of the most interesting scientists I have ever met. I do not recall that he is making predictions now. He is predicting that if we make examinations he will know more in the future.

The SPEAKER. The question is on suspending the rules and passing the bill.

The question was taken; and two-thirds having voted in the affirmative, the rules were suspended and the bill was passed.

ADDITIONAL CADETS AT WEST POINT ACADEMY.

Mr. DENT. Mr. Speaker, I move to suspend the rules and pass the bill S. 4876, with certain committee amendments.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the bill.

The bill as subsequently modified was as follows:

An act (S. 4876) to provide for an increase in the number of cadets at the United States Military Academy.

Be it enacted, etc., That the Corps of Cadets at the United States Military Academy shall hereafter consist of 2 for each congressional district, 2 from each Territory, 4 from the District of Columbia, 2 from natives of Porto Rico, 4 from each State at large, and 80 from the United States at large, 20 of whom shall have been recommended to the President as honor graduates of an educational institution having an officer of the Regular Army detailed as professor of military science and tactics under existing law or any law hereafter enacted for the detail of officers of the Regular Army to such institutions, and which institutions are designated in War Department orders as "honor schools" upon the determination of its relative standing at the last preceding annual inspection regularly made by the War Department. They shall be appointed by the President and shall, with the exception of the 80 appointed from the United States at large, be actual residents of the congressional or Territorial district, or of the District of Columbia, or of the island of Porto Rico, or of the States, respectively, from which they purport to be appointed: Provided, That so much of the act of Congress approved March 4, 1915 (38 Stats. L., p. 1128), as provides for the admission of a successor to any cadet who shall have finished three years of his course at the academy be, and the same is hereby, repealed: Provided further, That the appointment of each member of the present Corps of Cadets is validated and confirmed.

SEC. 2. That the President is hereby authorized to appoint cadets to the United States Military Academy from among enlisted men in as near equal proportion as possible of the Regular Army and the National Guard between the ages of 19 and 20 years who have served as enlisted men not less than one year, to be selected under such regulations as the President may prescribe: Provided, That the total number so selected shall not exceed 180 at any one time.

SEC. 3. That, under such regulations as the President shall prescribe, the increase in the number of cadets provided for by this act shall be divided into four annual increments, which shall be as nearly equal as practicable and be equitably distributed among the sources from which appointments are authorized.

SEC. 4. That hereafter when all vacancies in cadetships at the United States Military Academy shall not have been filled as a result of the regular annual entrance examination the President is hereby authorized to appoint candidates who were found qualified for admission at such entrance examination and for whom no vacancy would exist under present law: Provided, That the number of qualified candidates so appointed shall not be in excess of the number of such unfilled vacancies remaining at the time of such appointment: Provided further, That cadets admitted under the provisions of this section shall be credited to the United States at large and their admission shall not interfere with or affect in any manner any appointment authorized under existing law or under any of the provisions of this act. The authorized number of cadetships at the Military Academy is temporarily increased by the number of admissions made in any year under the provisions of this section: Provided further, That whenever by the operation of this or any other law the Corps of Cadets exceeds its authorized maximum strength the admission of candidates as prescribed in this section shall cease until such time as the Corps of Cadets may be reduced below its authorized strength.

The SPEAKER. Is a second demanded?

Mr. MANN. I demand a second.

Mr. DENT. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that a second may be considered as ordered.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Alabama asks unanimous consent that a second may be considered as ordered. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none. The gentleman from Alabama [Mr. DENT] is entitled to 20 minutes and the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MANN] to 20 minutes.

Mr. MANN. May I ask the gentleman was the language as submitted, in reference as to whether the appointee came from congressional districts or not, changed and printed in the bill?

Mr. DENT. I will say to the gentleman from Illinois I want to offer a substitute to that committee amendment.

Mr. MANN. The gentleman has to do that in his motion.

Mr. DENT. Mr. Speaker, I move——

Mr. MANN. I have another one.

Mr. ADAMSON. So have I. I want to ask him a question before he changes it.

Mr. MANN. In line 23, on page 2, the committee inserted the words "in as near proportion as possible," evidently it being the purpose of the committee, in reference to the cadets appointed from the Regular Army and National Guard, to distribute them between those two services.

Mr. DENT. That is the purpose of the committee.

Mr. MANN. But the way it was inserted would be "in as near proportion as possible between the ages of 19 and 20 years." If the gentleman would insert in line 22, after the word "men," this language: "In as near equal proportion as possible," it would read:

The President is hereby authorized to appoint cadets to the United States Military Academy from among enlisted men in as near equal proportion as possible of the Regular Army and the National Guard.

Mr. DENT. I think that is better language, and I will make that motion.

Mr. MANN. The gentleman has to have his amendments in the motion to suspend the rules. They are to be a part of the motion.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Alabama [Mr. DENT] asks to have the language indicated read into the bill as a part of it. Of course, you can not amend it, really or technically.

Mr. ADAMSON. Mr. Speaker, I have an amendment to propose.

Mr. KAHN. Mr. Speaker, I understand also that the gentleman from Alabama desires to include in the motion the proposition to put the words "congressional or," in line 8, page 2, between the word "the" and the word "Territorial."

The SPEAKER. Let us get through the first one. The Clerk will report it.

The Clerk read as follows:

SEC. 2. That the President is hereby authorized to appoint cadets to the United States Military Academy from among enlisted men, in as near equal proportions as possible, of the Regular Army and the National Guard between the ages of 19 and 20 years who have served as enlisted men not less than one year.

The SPEAKER. What was the suggestion of the gentleman from California [Mr. KAHN]?

Mr. KAHN. Ought not the gentleman also to include as a part of his motion an amendment to insert, on line 8, page 2, between the words "the" and "Territorial," the words "congressional or of the"?

Mr. DENT. And also strike out the words "the congressional district or of the," in line 10?

Mr. KAHN. Yes; leave that out in line 10.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report it.

The Clerk read as follows:

Page 2, line 8, after the word "the" and before the word "Territorial," insert the words "congressional or," and strike out, on page 2, line 10, the committee amendment.

Mr. ADAMSON. Mr. Speaker——

Mr. MANN. Now, I understand that the gentleman proposes to modify his amendment.

The SPEAKER. Technically speaking, he can not amend it, but he asks leave to insert that language. The gentleman from Georgia [Mr. ADAMSON] is recognized.

Mr. ADAMSON. Mr. Speaker, I have not been able up to this time to get hold of a copy of the bill, and I did not understand clearly the reading of section 4. Does that mean that if any of the candidates nominated by Congressmen fail, the President can fill any of those vacancies from other parts of the country?

Mr. DENT. No. That means this: In case the gentleman from Georgia appointed a principal and several alternates, and his principal and all the alternates passed the examination, his principal would be admitted, and his alternates would be qualified for appointment by the President of the United States, but would not be charged to the gentleman's district but to the country at large.

Mr. ADAMSON. And not charged to my congressional district?

Mr. DENT. He would not be charged to the gentleman's congressional district.

Mr. CANNON. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield for a question?

Mr. DENT. Yes.

Mr. CANNON. Under the law as it now exists the age of a cadet or a candidate is to be between 16 and 20 years, as I understand it?

Mr. DENT. No; between 17 and 22. The age limit is between 16 and 20 at the Naval Academy, and the limit is 17 and 22 at West Point.

Mr. CANNON. This is for the Naval Academy, is it not?

Mr. DENT. No; this is for the Military Academy at West Point. We have already passed the bill doubling the capacity at the Naval Academy.

Mr. CANNON. Was the age limit changed?

Mr. DENT. No.

Mr. CANNON. It ought to have been. They are so severe in their examinations that the 16-year-old and the 17-year-old fall down.

Mr. McKENZIE. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. DENT. Yes.

Mr. McKENZIE. I was not present in the committee when this bill was reported out, and I would like to ask my colleague a question as to the language on page 3. It appears to me from that language that where a Member of Congress had nominated candidates to take the examination for West Point and they had all failed, for instance, in that event the President might name a candidate at large from any portion of the United States other than the district from which the Congressman had named his candidate.

Mr. DENT. Does the gentleman refer to the committee amendment to section 4?

Mr. McKENZIE. Yes.

Mr. DENT. The intention of the committee with respect to that amendment, as I stated a moment before, was simply to allow the President to name those alternates who failed simply because the principal had qualified and entered. It would still leave to the Member of Congress the right to nominate a cadet from his district the following year.

Mr. McKENZIE. Would it not deprive the Member of Congress of the right of naming a cadet during that year? Would not that congressional district be robbed of a cadet in that particular year?

Mr. DENT. No. It would apply only to a case where a Congressman had named a cadet who entered the academy, but who still has an alternate who has shown his qualifications by successfully passing the examination. It allows the President to appoint such alternate from the country at large.

Mr. McKENZIE. The President, of course, is limited to the 80 he has to appoint under the bill. It does not interfere with the Congressman's or Senator's right to appoint at all. In other words, the President is just permitted to appoint one of these young men as a part of his 80?

Mr. FERRIS. He can appoint the new candidate.

Mr. SLAYDEN. What is the necessity of this legislation, then?

The SPEAKER. To whom does the gentleman from Alabama yield?

Mr. DENT. I yielded to the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. McKENZIE]. I do not know whether he finished or not.

The SPEAKER. Is the gentleman from Illinois through?

Mr. McKENZIE. I will say that it is not exactly clear to my mind yet, but I will yield the floor, so that the gentleman can answer other interrogatories.

Mr. SLAYDEN. Mr. Speaker, I would like to ask the gentleman whether it is true that the President may appoint successful alternates—successful as to examination—to these places without having them charged against the district of the regular Member? And if he has already the power to select 80, and if this appointment of the alternate is to be one of the 80, what is the occasion for this language at all?

Mr. DENT. The only occasion is to express by law the authority of the President to make that selection. The gentleman is aware of the fact that it has been the rule of all the Presidents to give the sons of Army officers the preference. If the gentleman will read the report here, he will find that when the academy opened last year there were 95 vacancies in the academy. This section would have authorized the President, if the gentleman from Texas had appointed a principal and two or three alternates who had passed the examination, to have appointed not only his principal who had entered the academy but his first alternate also who had passed the examination without charging it to the gentleman's district at all. In other words, the object of it is to keep the academy full.

Mr. SLAYDEN. You do not require that the President shall do it?

Mr. DENT. Oh, no.

Mr. SLAYDEN. He may still appoint the sons of Army officers?

Mr. DENT. Yes; he may still appoint the sons of Army officers.

Mr. TILSON. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. DENT. Yes; I yield to the gentleman from Connecticut.

Mr. TILSON. Does it not mean, Mr. Speaker, that the additional man is appointed, and while he does not become charged to the district from which the man has failed, he takes the place in the academy that that man would have taken? In other words, he helps to keep the academy full?

Mr. DENT. That is the whole object of it.

Mr. TILSON. And it is to allow the appointment of a number of men additional to the 80 that the President has the right to appoint?

Mr. DENT. Yes.

Mr. TILSON. He can appoint so many more that are hanging out, after having successfully passed the examination?

Mr. DENT. Yes.

Mr. SLAYDEN. Oh, I understood the gentleman from Alabama to say it was a part of the 80.

Mr. DENT. No; it is in addition to the 80, with a view to filling up the academy.

Mr. NORTON. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. DENT. Yes.

Mr. NORTON. What, if anything, has been provided to meet this condition: In case, say, where 200 candidates named by Members of Congress failed at the examination, the President would then have the right to appoint 200 to fill those vacancies—200 alternates, or 200 who had qualified at the examination to enter the academy. Then, if the appointment of those 200 filled up the quota for which there was room at the academy, at the next examination would those 200 Members of Congress whose candidates had failed have the right to nominate 200 more candidates?

Mr. DENT. The following year they certainly would. The act expressly provides for that.

Mr. NORTON. Then, if all those qualified, the academy would be filled to more than its quota?

Mr. DENT. No; I do not think the academy would be filled to more than its quota. When we come to consider the appropriation bill we will have to consider the question as to how many we can take care of. Of course, the President is not going to use the power that is given him here in such a way as to fill the academy beyond the quota that it can accommodate.

Mr. NORTON. Would it not really result in this, that no examination would be held for the other 200 until a sufficient number had graduated from the academy to reduce the quota and permit the 200 to be admitted?

Mr. DENT. This section expressly provides that the President shall not exercise this power when the number would go beyond the quota necessary to fill the full complement.

Mr. SLAYDEN. When it would go beyond the number provided by law.

Mr. NORTON. The gentleman gets my point, does he not? Take this extreme case for illustration: We will say there are now 600 cadets to be appointed, and that the Members of Congress nominate 600 principal candidates and the full number of alternates permitted to be nominated. Four hundred of the principals fail and also all their respective alternates. Then, the President appoints from the alternates 400 to fill these vacancies. Then next March there are 400 vacancies, and the 400 Members of Congress whose candidates failed this year nominate 400 principals, all of whom qualify and become entitled to enter. That would then more than fill the quota for which room is to be provided at the academy. Could not that condition arise under the terms of section 4 in this bill?

Mr. DENT. That might be possible, but it is not probable.

Mr. TILSON. It would not be probable that one year 400 would fail and that the next year none would fail. As a matter of fact, taking the law of averages, they run along about the same, and we know about how many fail, on an average.

Mr. DENT. Of course, there are many possibilities that might happen, but which never do happen.

Mr. BORLAND. Will the gentleman yield for a question?

Mr. DENT. Certainly.

Mr. BORLAND. Am I correct in believing that this bill will practically double the Cadet Corps at West Point?

Mr. DENT. In fact, yes. That is the object of it.

Mr. BORLAND. How many will that make at West Point—about 1,200, will it not?

Mr. DENT. Between 1,200 and 1,300.

Mr. BORLAND. I have always been under the impression that the price we pay for educating a young man at West Point is too high. Will this in any way reduce the average cost per capita of educating officers at West Point?

Mr. DENT. Of course this bill has nothing to do with the appropriation which is to come later. I do not think it is the intention of the committee, however, to make any reductions in pay, or anything of that kind.

Mr. BORLAND. My understanding is that it costs about $20,000 to educate an officer at West Point, and it has always seemed to me that $5,000 is a liberal estimate of the amount necessary to educate a young man in this country.

Mr. DENT. I will say to the gentleman from Missouri that that question will come up in the consideration of the appropriation bill for the maintenance of the Military Academy.

Mr. BORLAND. The gentleman's committee has charge of that.

Mr. DENT. That will come up later.

Mr. BORLAND. If we are going to have a more effective Army, we ought to reduce the per capita expense.

Mr. McKELLAR. Of course the proportionate overhead charges will be greatly reduced, and that will reduce the per capita expense.

Mr. SLAYDEN. Mr. Speaker, returning to the question of appointments and the possible failure of alternates, and using the hypothetical case to which the gentleman refers—of the failure of 400 principals—each Member of the House will have nominated alternates, perhaps first, second, and third alternates, as the law, I believe, authorizes them to do. Then if the principal fails the first alternate would get in provided he passed the examination, would he not?

Mr. DENT. Not absolutely. It is entirely in the discretion of the President whether he will make the appointment or not.

Mr. SLAYDEN. He does it now.

Mr. DENT. Are you referring to section 4? That is an entirely new provision.

Mr. SLAYDEN. No; I am referring to the number at the present time. Suppose you nominate a principal and three alternates, and your principal fails and your first alternate passes the examination. He is admitted.

Mr. DENT. That is true. He is admitted.

Mr. SLAYDEN. Would not that continue to be the case under this bill?

Mr. DENT. Yes; absolutely.

Mr. SLAYDEN. Then the President is not given any additional power of appointment, except that the number at the academy is increased?

Mr. DENT. That is all.

Mr. HUDDLESTON. Under the increase allowed in this bill how many appointments will the President have?

Mr. DENT. He has the right to appoint 80—double the present number.

Mr. HUDDLESTON. That is 80 each year, is it not?

Mr. DENT. He has the right to appoint 40 now, and under this bill he would have the right to appoint 80. Then he has the right to appoint from the National Guard.

Mr. HUDDLESTON. Will the gentleman give us the total?

Mr. DENT. Eighty from the United States at large and 180 from the enlisted men of the Regular Army and the National Guard; then section 4 authorizes him to fill vacancies out of alternates who have passed the examination.

Mr. HUDDLESTON. Which would give a possibility of how many nominees by the President in the 1,200 at the Academy?

Mr. DENT. I can not tell the gentleman how many alternates would be qualified by section 4. That is an impossibility.

Mr. HUDDLESTON. There will be several hundred that the President would have there of his own nominees.

Mr. DENT. Eighty and 180, if he wants to exercise the power.

Mr. HUDDLESTON. And possibly others.

Mr. DENT. Yes; but only to be selected from certain alternates.

Mr. HUDDLESTON. Will the President have the power to continue to make these appointments from the sons of Army officers exclusively?

Mr. DENT. That is entirely within the discretion of the President.

Mr. PLATT. Those vacancies must be filled from nominees selected by Members of Congress, congressional nominees.

Mr. HUDDLESTON. The point I am getting at is this: Is it good public policy that we should have our Naval Academy filled up to such a large extent with the sons of Army officers? That is the point I have in mind.

Mr. DENT. I will state to the gentleman that there is absolutely nothing in the law which compels the President to select sons of Army officers to be appointed to the Military Academy or sons of naval officers to be appointed to the Naval Academy. It is simply the practice of the President.

Mr. TAYLOR of Colorado. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. DENT. Yes.

Mr. TAYLOR of Colorado. Ought there not be something in the law which would prevent him from doing that?

Mr. DENT. The object of this section is to call his attention to the fact that he must make the selection from other sources.

Mr. TAYLOR of Colorado. But it does not prevent him from doing so?

Mr. DENT. No.

Mr. TAYLOR of Colorado. He ought to be required to fill these vacancies from districts and from alternates.

Mr. DENT. I do not think the President's discretion ought to be controlled absolutely by an act of Congress.

Mr. TAYLOR of Colorado. But we give him 80 to appoint all of the time from the sons of Army and Navy officers, and it seems to me we ought not give him the whole 260.

Mr. DENT. The extra 180 he has to appoint must be selected from the National Guard and the enlisted men in the Army.

Mr. TAYLOR of Colorado. He can appoint 80 or such a number now.

Mr. DENT. Yes; under this bill, except that 20 must be selected from the graduates of honor military schools.

Mr. TAYLOR of Colorado. But they might be the sons of Army officers just the same.

Mr. DENT. That is true.

The SPEAKER. The time of the gentleman from Alabama has expired.

Mr. SISSON. Mr. Speaker, I can make the point of order of no quorum, but I do not want to do that if I can get some questions answered.

Mr. DENT. My time is all out.

Mr. SISSON. I have been trying to get recognition for some little time, and I think we ought to have a quorum here to transact business. I make the point of order that there is no quorum present.

Mr. MANN. Oh, we will let the gentleman have some time. Do not make the point of order. We can extend the time.

Mr. SISSON. Mr. Speaker, I make the point of order that there is no quorum present.

Mr. MANN. That is all right; but the gentleman will not get any time in that way.

Mr. SISSON. I do not expect to get any time and I am not asking it.

Mr. MANN. I thought the gentleman was.

Mr. SISSON. Mr. Speaker, I make the point of order that there is no quorum present. I will not withdraw it, as requested. I make the point of order that there is no quorum present.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Mississippi makes the point of order that there is no quorum present. The Chair will count. [After counting.] One hundred and one Members present, not a quorum.

Mr. KITCHIN. Mr. Speaker, I move a call of the House.

The motion was agreed to.

The SPEAKER. The Doorkeeper will close the doors, the Sergeant at Arms will notify absent Members, and the Clerk will call the roll.

The Clerk called the roll, and the following Members failed to answer to their names:

Anderson	Flynn	Key, Ohio	Pou
Anthony	Focht	Kless, Pa.	Price

Fitzgerald	Kettner	Porter	Winslow

The SPEAKER. On this roll call 300 Members have answered to their names—a quorum.

Mr. KITCHIN. Mr. Speaker, I move that further proceedings under the call be dispensed with.

The motion was agreed to.

The doors were opened.

Mr. SISSON. A parliamentary inquiry, Mr. Speaker.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. SISSON. If I understand the rule in a parliamentary situation like this, where a second is demanded, the party demanding the second is opposed to the bill. In this case the gentleman from Illinois demanded a second, and he will vote, as I understand, for the bill. In that way you exclude any person who is not in favor of the bill from any control of time. I shall not vote for this bill.

The SPEAKER. The trouble about that is this: In the first place, the Chair is not required to ask if a second is demanded; but the practice is for the Chair to do so. Some man demands a second, and ordinarily it ought to be some one who is opposed to the bill, but it is now too late to raise that question.

Mr. SISSON. The question was raised once by Mr. Tawney, of Minnesota, in a situation somewhat like this. The gentleman demanding a second was also in favor of the bill, and when that developed, the gentleman from Minnesota rose and stated that he found both gentlemen were in favor of the bill.

The SPEAKER. If the gentleman from Mississippi had risen at the right time, he might have interposed the objection.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Speaker, this is all idle talk. I had already informed the gentleman from Mississippi that I would be glad to yield him some time; in fact, all time in opposition to the bill. I do not think it was quite fair for the gentleman to make the parliamentary inquiry under the circumstances.

Mr. SISSON. I am trying to be entirely fair.

The SPEAKER. This discussion is out of order.

Mr. SISSON. It was not out of order when I made the parliamentary inquiry.

The SPEAKER. No; but the Chair has answered that.

Mr. SISSON. And I answered, and I thought that ended it. I was trying to ascertain the decision of the Chair whether in my own right, if I stated that I would not vote for the bill, I might be recognized.

The SPEAKER. There is no way to get more than 40 minutes' debate on this bill except by unanimous consent.

Mr. MANN. How much time does the gentleman from Mississippi want?

Mr. SISSON. Not more than five minutes.

Mr. MANN. I yield to the gentleman five minutes; yes, six minutes. [Laughter.]

Mr. SISSON. Mr. Speaker, I am in favor of increasing the number of cadets at West Point Academy. I think there has been a great need for that, and right at this particular time a greater need than ever before. What I am opposed to in this bill is section 4. Under this bill, if the average number of failures shall take place, the President of the United States will appoint 200 cadets which ought to be filled by Members of Congress. In addition to that he is given the right to appoint so many enlisted men, thus making it possible for the President to select 360 cadets, and if he should pursue the policy heretofore pursued there will be 360 sons of Army and naval officers appointed to the academy.

Mr. PLATT. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield there?

The SPEAKER. Does the gentleman yield to the gentleman from New York?

Mr. SISSON. I do not right now; I only have five minutes. At the end of four years if this proportion keeps up you will have 4 times 360 at the beginning of the fourth year. Now, I am not in favor of that academy ever becoming so that a majority of the cadets there can come from one particular rank or one particular class of men. As it is now, if a cadet shall fail from your district or mine, you can have an examination, and if that examination is had in time to make entries—and it has occurred to me twice—on the second examination, and the two young men are now in the academy were men who stood the examination under the second opportunity which I was given. If this had been the law then, on the first failure the President of the United States could have appointed two men and they would not have been from my district.

A bill of this much importance to every individual Member of this House, and there are numbers here who are going to vote for this bill who are opposed to it, and would not do so save and except with the idea that section 4 could be amended in conference, but you bring it up under suspension of the rules and you have no opportunity to amend it, and you only have 20 minutes of debate on a side, and you must take the bill or vote it down as a whole. I would rather, as far as I am concerned, as I want this bill to pass in a proper form—I would rather vote it down and have a special rule brought in for the consideration of this bill so as to be able to let every Congressman know exactly what is contained in the bill and have the right to offer amendments to the bill instead of taking the chances of its becoming a law in its present form. How many Members are there who have studied section 4? How many of them are there in favor of section 4? It came from the Senate in this form. I do not know how it got out of committee in this form, except if it was thought if it passed here it would become the law, because I do know some Members of the Committee on Military Affairs who are opposed to section 4. I am not in favor of the President of the United States being put in that position, where he would appoint 360 of these cadets each year.

Mr. PLATT. The gentleman knows these vacancies must be filled from nominees already made by Members of Congress.

Mr. SISSON. I do not.

Mr. PLATT. That is the fact.

Mr. SISSON. In other words, if I should nominate three men and all three should fail in their examination, then——

Mr. PLATT. Then one man already nominated by some Member of Congress would get in.

Mr. SISSON. Then it deprives my district of a cadet.

Mr. PLATT. Not a bit; it would not deprive the gentleman's district of anything.

Mr. SISSON. Now, gentlemen, if the English language in the report means anything here, the gentleman is wrong about that.

Mr. PLATT. Only three would get in.

Mr. SISSON. Oh, no; you are simply wrong. Under the present law that vacancy does not exist until the entrance closes at the beginning of the next year, and if you can get a special examination in the meantime you can send them——

Mr. PLATT. This does not prevent that.

Mr. SISSON. It does prevent it. It says in so many words it shall be filled by the President of the United States.

The SPEAKER. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Speaker, I yield five minutes to the gentleman from Arkansas [Mr. WINGO].

Mr. WINGO. Mr. Speaker, I think that most of us are in favor of increasing the number of cadets. I for one would be perfectly willing to vote for the bill without section 4. The gentleman from New York [Mr. PLATT] is mistaken when he says that the President will fill these vacancies from men who have been designated by Congressmen. The language specifically excludes that and is found in line 15, on page 3, of the bill.

Let us take section 4 now and read it. Section 4 says:

That hereafter when all vacancies in cadetships at the United States Military Academy shall not have been filled as the result of the regular annual entrance examination the President is hereby authorized to appoint candidates who were found qualified for admission at such entrance examination and for whom no vacancy would exist under present law.

Now, take line 15, and from whom shall he make the appointment? From what list? From the list of men who have taken examination and for whom no vacancy would exist under the present law.

Mr. PLATT. Let me ask the gentleman, who can be qualified except those already nominated?

Mr. WINGO. In other words, he will take those who have taken the examination under appointment at large or as enlisted men and are qualified, and for whom no vacancy exists under present law. Under present law, if the principal of the Congressman fails, then the alternate that passed the examination can be appointed, and if his first alternate fails, as well as his principal, then the second alternate is appointed. If all three fail, another examination is held, for which the Congressman designates, but if section 4 becomes the law the Congressman could not designate others, but the President would make appointments at large. It simply means that, according to the language of the bill, he would take those who had been designated alternates by the President under the 80 appointments at large, and those who had been examined in the Army, and from those two lists he would fill the vacancies caused by the failures of the young men designated by the Congressman. I repeat, that under the language of the bill he is required to make the appointment from those who have taken the examination and have passed, but for whom there is no vacancy existing. There will be but one list existing, and that will be those examined out of the Army and those nominated by the President, and from that list he will fill the congressional vacancies, and the congressional district would lose the place.

Mr. DENT. The gentleman is entirely mistaken.

Mr. WINGO. That is the plain language of the bill, is it not?

Mr. DENT. It is not.

Mr. WINGO. Show me the language of the bill that will permit——

Mr. DENT. The gentleman is entirely mistaken. The bill simply provides that wherever at the beginning of a scholastic year at West Point there shall be a certain number of vacancies the President may fill those vacancies temporarily, and that he shall select to fill those vacancies some young man that the gentleman from Arkansas——

Mr. WINGO. I can not yield further on that.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Arkansas declines to yield further.

Mr. WINGO. I want to show the gentleman from Alabama that he is mistaken. He certainly does not mean what he says when he states that the President will make a temporary appointment to West Point.

Mr. DENT. The gentleman has not read this section if he says that.

Mr. WINGO. Do you mean to tell me you want a young man appointed to West Point temporarily, and as soon as the Congressman can put in some one to take his place he will get out?

Mr. DENT. In line 23, page 3, it says:

The authorized number of cadetships at the Military Academy is temporarily increased by the number of admissions made in any year——

Mr. WINGO. Why, certainly.

Mr. DENT. One moment—

Provided further, That whenever by the operation of this or any other law the Corps of Cadets exceeds its authorized maximum strength the admission of candidates as described by this section shall cease until such time as the Corps of Cadets may be reduced below its authorized strength.

Mr. WINGO. Let me call the gentleman's attention to this: There is quite a difference between your statement that the President make temporary appointments——

The SPEAKER. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. WINGO. Will the gentleman from Illinois give me three minutes more?

Mr. MANN. I yield three minutes more, and I will take some of it in order to ask the gentleman from Alabama if he would be willing to let section 4 go out?

Mr. DENT. Why, if it is going to create any great disturbance, I have no objection.

Mr. MANN. It seems to be creating quite a disturbance.

Mr. DENT. Then, I ask unanimous consent to strike out section 4.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Alabama asks unanimous consent to modify his motion eliminating section 4. Is there objection?

Mr. HUDDLESTON. I object.

Mr. WINGO. If I may proceed, I want to call the attention of the gentleman from Alabama to this: The statement that he makes that the President would make temporary appointments is quite different from his temporarily filling vacancies. It is true after he had filled all these vacancies it makes no difference whether he fills them under one section or another. Once he appointed a man from one State to fill a vacancy from a congressional district in another State, that man would stay in West Point until graduated. The vacancy may be temporary by reason of the failure of the young men designated by the Congressman, but the appointment of the President is permanent, not temporary, as the gentleman from Alabama [Mr. DENT] contends.

The viciousness of section 4 lies in the language which I read, and that is that the President is limited in making his appointments to those who have already taken the examination but for whom no vacancy exists. That makes it impossible for the President to make a designation of a cadet from your congressional district or any particular congressional district in the country; but if the congressional applicants fail, then the President will take the list of alternates, who have passed the examination under his appointments at large, and the enlisted men in the Army who have successfully passed the examination but for whom no vacancy exists under present law, and from these two classes fill vacancies from the congressional districts where the young men designated by the Congressmen have failed to pass the examination. Eliminate section 4 and we will accept the bill.

Mr. DENT. Mr. Speaker, I withdraw the original motion that I made and move to suspend the rules.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Alabama withdraws the original motion he made to suspend the rules, and the Chair will recognize him to make another motion.

Mr. DENT. I move, Mr. Speaker, to suspend the rules and pass the bill S. 4876, with the amendments already agreed to, omitting section 4 of the bill.

The SPEAKER. Is a second demanded? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none. The Clerk will report the bill as it will read now.

The Clerk read as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Corps of Cadets at the United States Military Academy shall hereafter consist of 2 for each congressional district, 2 from each Territory, 4 from the District of Columbia, 2 from natives of Porto Rico, 4 from each State at large, and 80 from the United States at large, 20 of whom shall have been recommended to the President as honor graduates of an educational institution having an officer of the Regular Army detailed as professor of military science and tactics under existing law or any law hereafter enacted for the detail of officers of the Regular Army to such institutions, and which institutions are designated in War Department orders as "honor schools" upon the determination of its relative standing at the last preceding annual inspection regularly made by the War Department. They shall be appointed by the President and shall, with the exception of the 80 appointed from the United States at large, be actual residents of the congressional or Territorial district, or of the District of Columbia, or of the island of Porto Rico, or of the States, respectively, from which they purport to be appointed: Provided, That so much of the act of Congress approved March 4, 1915 (38 Stat. L., p. 1128), as provides for the admission of a successor to any cadet who shall have finished three years of his course at the academy be, and the same is hereby, repealed: Provided further, That the appointment of each member of the present Corps of Cadets is validated and confirmed.

SEC. 2. That the President is hereby authorized to appoint cadets to the United States Military Academy from among enlisted men, in as near equal proportions as possible, of the Regular Army and the National Guard between the ages of 19 and 21 years who have served as enlisted men not less than one year, to be selected under such regulations as the President may prescribe: Provided, That the total number so selected shall not exceed 180 at any one time.

SEC. 3. That, under such regulations as the President shall prescribe, the increase in the number of cadets provided for by this act shall be divided into four annual increments, which shall be as nearly equal as practicable and be equitably distributed among the sources from which appointments are authorized.

The SPEAKER. The question is on suspending the rules and passing the bill.

The question was taken; and two-thirds having voted in the affirmative, the rules were suspended and the bill was passed.

HOUR OF MEETING TO-MORROW.

Mr. KITCHIN. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that when the House adjourns to-day it adjourn to meet at 11 o'clock to-morrow.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from North Carolina [Mr. KITCHIN] asks unanimous consent that when the House adjourns to-day it adjourn to meet at 11 o'clock a. m. to-morrow. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

SERVICE OF NAVY AND MARINE CORPS IN HAITI.

Mr. PADGETT. Mr. Speaker, I move to suspend the rules and pass the bill (H. R. 12835) to authorize and empower officers and enlisted men of the Navy and Marine Corps to serve under the Government of the Republic of Haiti, and for other purposes, with the committee amendment.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. PADGETT] moves to suspend the rules and pass the bill with the amendment read into it. The Clerk will report it.

The Clerk read as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the President of the United States be, and he is hereby, authorized, in his discretion, to detail to assist the Republic of Haiti such officers and enlisted men of the United States Navy and the United States Marine Corps as may be mutually agreed upon by him and the President of the Republic of Haiti: Provided, That the officers and enlisted men so detailed be, and they are hereby, authorized to accept from the Government of Haiti the said employment with compensation and emoluments from the said Government of Haiti, subject to the approval of the President of the United States.

SEC. 2. That to insure the continuance of this work during such time as may be desirable, the President may have the power of substitution in the case of the termination of the detail of any officer or enlisted man for any cause: Provided, That during the continuance of such details the officers and enlisted men shall continue to receive the pay and allowances of their ranks or ratings in the Navy or Marine Corps.

SEC. 3. That the following increase in the United States Marine Corps be, and the same is hereby, authorized: Two majors, 12 captains, 18 first lieutenants, 2 assistant quartermasters with the rank of captain, 1 assistant paymaster with the rank of captain, 5 quartermaster sergeants, 5 first sergeants, 5 gunnery sergeants, and 11 sergeants.

SEC. 4. That the following increase in the United States Navy be, and the same is hereby, authorized: One surgeon, 2 passed assistant surgeons, 5 hospital stewards, and 10 hospital apprentices, first class.

SEC. 5. That officers and enlisted men of the Navy and Marine Corps detailed for duty to assist the Republic of Haiti shall be entitled to the same credit for such service, for longevity, retirement, foreign service, pay, and for all other purposes, that they would receive if they were serving with the Navy or with the Marine Corps.

The SPEAKER. Is a second demanded?

Mr. CALLAWAY. I demand a second, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. PADGETT. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that a second may be considered as ordered.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. PADGETT] asks unanimous consent that a second be considered as ordered.

Mr. CALLAWAY. I object.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Texas [Mr. CALLAWAY] objects, and the Chair appoints the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. PADGETT] and the gentleman from Texas [Mr. CALLAWAY] as tellers. The question is on seconding the motion to suspend the rules and pass the bill H. R. 12835 with the committee amendment.

The question was taken; and the tellers reported—ayes 127, noes 11.

So a second was ordered.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. PADGETT] is entitled to 20 minutes and the gentleman from Texas [Mr. CALLAWAY] is entitled to 20 minutes.

Mr. CALLAWAY. Mr. Speaker, I make the point of no quorum.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Texas [Mr. CALLAWAY] makes the point of no quorum. The Chair will count. [After counting.] One hundred and ninety-nine Members are present—not a quorum.

ADJOURNMENT.

Mr. KITCHIN. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House do now adjourn.

The motion was agreed to; accordingly (at 5 o'clock and 32 minutes p. m.) the House adjourned, under the special order, until to-morrow, Tuesday, April 18, 1916, at 11 o'clock a. m.

SENATE.

TUESDAY, April 18, 1916.

(Legislative day of Monday, April 17, 1916.)

The Senate met at 12 o'clock meridian, on the expiration of the recess.

JOINT MEETING OF THE TWO HOUSES.

A message from the House of Representatives, by J. C. South, its Chief Clerk, announced that the House had agreed to a concurrent resolution providing that the two Houses of Congress assemble in the Hall of the House of Representatives on Wednesday, the 19th day of April, 1916, at 1 o'clock in the afternoon, for the purpose of receiving such communication as the President of the United States shall be pleased to make to them, in which it requested the concurrence of the Senate.

The VICE PRESIDENT laid before the Senate the concurrent resolution (No. 30) of the House of Representatives, which was read, as follows:

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES,
April 18, 1916.

Resolved by the House of Representatives (the Senate concurring), That the two Houses of Congress assemble in the Hall of the House of Representatives on Wednesday, the 19th day of April, 1916, at 1 o'clock in the afternoon, for the purpose of receiving such communication as the President of the United States shall be pleased to make to them.

Mr. KERN. I move that the Senate concur in the resolution of the House.

The motion was agreed to.

NATIONAL DEFENSE.

The Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, resumed the consideration of the bill (H. R. 12766) to increase the efficiency of the Military Establishment of the United States.

Mr. CHAMBERLAIN. Mr. President, there are one or two committee amendments that I desire to offer to the bill this morning. I send the following to the desk.

The VICE PRESIDENT. It will be read.

The SECRETARY. On page 121, line 13, after the word "act," insert a comma and the words "except as otherwise specifically provided herein" and a comma.

Mr. CHAMBERLAIN. That is just to save any question about the Insular Bureau. There is some little difference of opinion as to the provisions in the existing law.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The amendment to the amendment will be agreed to, without objection.

Mr. CHAMBERLAIN. On page 124, line 23, after the word "grade," the last word in the section and line, I move to insert the following.

The VICE PRESIDENT. It will be read.

The SECRETARY. On page 124, line 23, change the period to a colon and insert the following additional proviso:

And provided further, That any retired officer, while on active duty, shall receive the pay and allowances of the grade, not above that of major, that he would have attained in due course of promotion if he had remained on the active list for a period beyond the date of his retirement equal to the total amount of time during which he has been detailed on active duty since his retirement.

The amendment to the amendment was agreed to.

Mr. CHAMBERLAIN. There is one further amendment I wish to offer, and that is the last the committee has to present. I ask the Secretary to read it. I may state, so that the Senate may understand it as it is read, that it is to provide for the equalization of the promotions of officers in view of the increases which have been made by the pending bill.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The amendment to the amendment will be stated.

The SECRETARY. On page 138, line 19, after the word "eleven," insert a colon and the following proviso:

Provided, That original and subsequent vacancies in the list of detached officers shall be filled as follows: When the duties to be discharged by an officer on detached service are peculiarly those of an officer of one of the four arms, Infantry, Cavalry, Field Artillery, and Coast Artillery Corps, the officer to be placed on the detached officers' list for the discharge of the duties will be selected from that arm; when the duties to be discharged by an officer on detached service are not peculiarly those of an officer of one of the arms named above, the officer to be placed on the detached officers' list for the discharge of the duties will be selected from that arm in which the senior officer of the next lower grade has had, at the date of the selection, the longest commissioned service in the Army; when an officer of any arm is removed from the detached officers' list and the resulting vacancy thereon is filled by an officer of another arm, selected as prescribed herein, the officer removed from such list shall be carried as an extra number in his grade and arm, and promotion therein shall cease until he has been absorbed in such grade and arm: Provided further, That for the purposes of this section the President shall assign constructive dates of commissions to officers now holding anomalous positions on the lineal lists of the Infantry, Cavalry, Field Artillery, and Coast Artillery Corps, and nothing in this section shall be construed to change the lineal rank of any officer in his own arm: Provided further, That except as otherwise provided in this act vacancies created or caused by this act in the several branches of the Army, line and staff, shall be filled in the manner now prescribed by law, and thereafter vacancies created or caused by transfers to the detached officers' list herein provided shall be filled in the manner herein prescribed: Provided further, That not to exceed 50 per cent of any vacancies in the commissioned grades below that of lieutenant colonel in the Infantry, Cavalry, Field Artillery, or Coast Artillery Corps created or caused by this act, due to the increase in any of said arms by the provisions of this act, may, for each increment, in the discretion of the President and under such regulations as he may prescribe, be filled by the transfer of officers from other of said branches of the Army; but no such transfer shall be made in the case of any officer unless it shall have been recommended by an examining board composed of officers senior in rank to such officer, who, after having made an examination of such officer as to his professional and physical fitness for such transfer, shall have reported him qualified for service in said arm in the grade to which his transfer shall have been proposed, and thereafter any officer so transferred shall take such rank in his grade in the arm to which transferred as he would have held had he been commissioned in that arm on his original entry into the service: And provided further, That hereafter not more than one colonel shall be assigned or attached to any one regiment.

The amendment to the amendment was agreed to.

Mr. HARDWICK. Mr. President, I offer the following amendment.

The VICE PRESIDENT. It will be read.

The SECRETARY. On page 161, at the end of line 9, insert the following section, and renumber the remaining sections accordingly:

SEC. 57. The reserve army: The Secretary of War is authorized and directed to detail for service as instructors in military tactics one or more commissioned officers of the United States Army to every college or school in the United States where there are as many as 50 male students, 16 years of age and over, in all cases where the authorities of such school or college make application for such detail and where the requisite number of students desire and consent, with the full consent of their parents or guardians, to receive such training and agree to become a part of the reserve forces of the United States. The term for which said students shall enlist in the reserve forces shall be for and during the term of their connection with school or college, including vacations, and shall in no case be for less than 12 months. Such students shall not be subject to active military service, except in connection with their training and except in connection with such mobilizations as may be had during school vacations, for which latter service they shall be paid at the same rate that officers and men of corresponding ranks and grades are paid in the Regular Army: Provided, That in the event the United States becomes engaged in war or it should be necessary to use troops in addition to the Regular Army and the National Guard to repel invasion, suppress insurrection, or execute the laws of the United States, then the President of the United States is authorized to call into the active military service the whole or any part of such reserve forces.

The Secretary of War is hereby authorized to prescribe all necessary rules and regulations for the enlistment and discharge of members of the reserve force and for its training and mobilization, and is also authorized to furnish to such reserve forces arms and equipment similar to those furnished to troops in the Regular Army, or such as may be best suited to the needs and requirements of such reserve forces.

Mr. HARDWICK. Mr. President, I wish to say to the Senate that, in my judgment, nothing that is contained in the bill or is likely to be retained in it——

Mr. WARREN. I will ask the Senator from Georgia if the amendment is printed, for I would like to examine it?

Mr. HARDWICK. Yes; the proposition has been printed, although not exactly in the form of this amendment. The substance of it has been printed.

In my judgment nothing that the bill now contains or will contain when it emerges from conference will afford to the United States an adequate reserve force. For one, although I am perfectly willing, and have so voted, to give every proper encouragement to the National Guard. I believe that the constitutional limitations which hedge and restrict the use of that force are such that we can not rely upon it as the only reserve force for this country. I believe we ought to encourage it; I believe we ought to appropriate for it; I believe it ought to occupy its constitutional status in the military forces of the Republic; but I do not believe it is possible by any legislation that we may enact in Congress to change the constitutional status of that force or to do what is commonly known as federalizing the so-called National Guard. After we get through with our futile attempt on that question the National Guard will remain just what the Constitution of the United States made them—the State militia of the several States of the Union.

Nor do I believe, Mr. President, that we are likely to have an efficient volunteer force as a result of section 56 of the bill. In the first place, I believe that that section may itself be stricken out when we come to the final vote thereon in the Senate itself, and even if that should not happen no Senator acquainted with practical legislation as it occurs between the two Houses of Congress can entertain even a reasonable hope, if he is for this section, that section 56 or anything like it can be retained in conference or can be passed at the other end of the Capitol.

If not, what reserve force have we provided, which force shall be subject to the order of the President, unhampered by constitutional limitations, and without allegiance to any authority whatsoever except to the President of the United States? What force of that character will be provided in the bill that finally becomes a law? None whatever unless you shall adopt some amendment of the kind I now propose.

Senators may inquire how much of a reserve force can we reasonably expect from the operation of such an amendment. My reply is that there are almost 2,000,000 American schoolboys 15 years of age and over in the schools and colleges of this country. While I do not know, I believe that a great percentage of them would be not only willing but delighted to receive the instruction, the arms, and the equipment provided in this amendment, and would in consideration therefor readily agree to become a part of the reserve forces of the United States.

At any rate, this system could cost us no more—not one penny more—than an amount that corresponded with the force it provided, and if we got no considerable reserve from it, as I am sure we would, it could cost us no considerable amount of money.

In the next place, the discipline and training itself would be good from every standpoint for the American schoolboy. It would make him not only a better soldier if war should come to this country, more prepared to defend his country, but it would make him a better civilian in time of peace by giving him that training and discipline which would be so valuable to him not only for the purposes of war but for the pursuits of peace.

Now, there is another feature about this system which I wish to commend to the Senate. Every year as each class of college boys and schoolboys go out into the walks of life they would go out with some knowledge, with some training, with some capacity for the military art and some ability to defend their country if the necessity for it came, in case of war. Not only that, but the force that it would create would be already mobilized in every school and college in the land——

Mr. GALLINGER. Mr. President, will the Senator permit a question?

Mr. HARDWICK. Yes.

Mr. GALLINGER. Can the Senator state approximately how many colleges and schools of this character there are in the country?

Mr. HARDWICK. I can not, because the Senator will understand I have made no restriction whatever upon the kind or character of the school or college to be utilized, except that such school must have the requisite number of boys.

Mr. GALLINGER. We would have to provide a very large number of officers to instruct the youths in these schools, and I think we ought to know the number.

Mr. HARDWICK. I would be glad to answer the Senator's question. Sections 42 to 55, inclusive, of this bill will provide us all the officers we can need for that purpose. That is the War College plan. We are training these officers anyway; we call them reserve officers, and we ought to give them some work. That part of the bill is a corollary to my proposition, if it should be adopted. If we adopt some such proposition as this, we will have an efficient mobilized army, already mobilized in accordance with population in every great city of the country. New York alone, it is estimated, would have 50,000 of such reserves; Philadelphia probably 20,000. You can figure it out for every city in the country. It would be made up of our own boys. While they would be Federal reservists, they would have all the characteristics of citizen soldiery and would come directly from the homes of the people themselves.

Mr. President, during the course of this debate the distinguished Senator from Oregon [Mr. CHAMBERLAIN] truly said, eloquently said, that in every war in which this country had engaged the boys had fought its battles. It is true. It was not rhetoric, it was not eloquence alone, it was sober truth, proved by the statistics of every war we have had.

Now, I contend if we have another war the boys of this country from 18 years up, possibly from 16 years up, will fight its battles. If so, why not give to these boys, to every one of them willing to take it, the training that will make him a better soldier and will enable him to give a better account of himself and to give the country more efficient service?

I do not see why a proposition like this ought not to be adopted unanimously by the Senate. I can not tell what it will cost, because I do not know how many boys will go into it. I do believe that a considerable number of the 2,000,000 American schoolboys would gladly go into it. If so, it would cost a considerable amount of money, but no more than would be warranted and justified by the result that would be secured, for if a considerable number went into it, three or four hundred thousand boys, this Republic would have the most splendid, the most efficient army of reserves that any republic ever had in all history.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. Will the Senator permit me to ask him to explain to the Senate just what the cost would be in each school? Would it be anything except for the officers to train the boys and the equipment?

Mr. HARDWICK. Not a thing on earth except that. I have provided, which I think is just, that when these boys are mobilized during vacation time into regiments or brigades or even larger units they shall be paid during the short time of their summer encampment, during the short time of this mobilization, just such pay as the officers and men of the Regular Army of corresponding rank and grade receive.

If the Senate will give this matter its serious attention, if every Senator will put his individual judgment to work on it, I have not the slightest doubt that the amendment will be overwhelmingly adopted.

Mr. JONES. Mr. President——

Mr. HARDWICK. I yield to the Senator from Washington.

Mr. JONES. What provision is made in the Senator's amendment with reference to uniforming the boys?

Mr. HARDWICK. I think "equipment" would be construed to mean uniforms.

Mr. JONES. Is that what is intended?

Mr. HARDWICK. That is what I intended; yes, sir.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. That is a matter which I think would be left to the discretion of the Secretary of War.

Mr. HARDWICK. I have left all those things to the discretion of the Secretary of War.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Senator's time has expired.

Mr. STONE. Mr. President, I will take the floor to ask a question, and the Senator from Georgia may answer in my time. As I understand, this amendment provides for this training in every school having 50 male pupils?

Mr. HARDWICK. In every school having 50 male students above 16 years of age, where they want to get such training and where the students will consent to a voluntary agreement that they will take the training and become in consideration thereof a part of the reserves.

Mr. STONE. The Senator from Georgia says that there are something like 2,000,000 boys in this description of schools in the United States?

Mr. HARDWICK. Yes, sir. Let me state that exactly accurately. There are nearly 2,000,000 boys who are 15 years of age and over in the schools and colleges of the country. In the amendment I have finally fixed the age at 16 years, which, of course, would reduce the total somewhat.

Mr. STONE. The Senator seems to think that probably four hundred or five hundred thousand, that is to say, about 25 per cent, of these boys would avail themselves of this opportunity?

Mr. HARDWICK. Of course, that is a mere opinion; but I hazard that opinion with a good deal of confidence, for I know how anxious the boys are for this sort of training. The Senator from Missouri might have a different opinion or he might not. He might think that there might be even a larger number; but the Senator knows as well as I do that the American schoolboy loves brass buttons and likes this sort of thing, and if you will give it to him free, I believe he will accept it enthusiastically and in large numbers.

Mr. STONE. Well, I will accept the Senator's estimate. They are to serve during the year?

Mr. HARDWICK. They are to serve during their school terms, but not less than one year.

Mr. STONE. They are to serve for not less than one year. And then they become what?

Mr. HARDWICK. After they go out of the school they have no longer any sort of obligation to the Government; but they go out into civil life with a certain amount of military training and with a certain amount of knowledge of military affairs which makes me think they would then go into the National Guard or into the Regular Army, and I am assured that if we had a war they would by reason of this training be much more capable of giving effective service to their country.

Mr. STONE. But that is not the thought I have in mind to inquire about. During what period are these boys to be regarded as a part of the reserves of the United States?

Mr. HARDWICK. They are to be so regarded during the period in which they are connected with the schools, because there is where they are mobilized. They will, of course, come from different communities in many cases.

Mr. STONE. And after that they cease their military connection?

Mr. HARDWICK. They have no connection with it beyond the period they are in the schools.

Mr. DU PONT. May I ask the Senator a question?

Mr. HARDWICK. I am on the floor only by courtesy of the Senator from Missouri.

Mr. STONE. The Senator may ask a question in my time.

Mr. DU PONT. I merely want to ask the Senator from Georgia whether his scheme includes the colored schools of the country?

Mr. HARDWICK. Well, sir, I have not thought to draw the color line, nor is that necessarily involved in this matter. Does the Senator from Delaware want to draw it?

Mr. DU PONT. I do not; but I am asking for information.

Mr. HARDWICK. I do not think the colored students will enlist in my section of the country; I do not know what they will do in the Senator's section of the country.

Mr. DU PONT. The colored schools are separate in my State, and the question may be asked whether they come under the provisions of this bill.

Mr. HARDWICK. If the Senator wants me to answer his question frankly, I am perfectly willing to do so. I think it would be largely a matter of administration by the War Department. There is nothing in the proposed law that would prevent the Secretary of War from exercising a wise administrative discretion in this matter.

If the Senator will let me answer the question further, I will say I do not believe that in the Southern States, at least, the sentiment is such as to encourage that sort of thing there, or that it would be likely to occur, or that any Secretary of War would encourage it or permit it. What might be done in other sections of the country I do not know; but, of course, in presenting a proposition like this I feel that we must leave a matter of this kind to the administration of the War Department.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. Mr. President, we are reaching the last day for the consideration of this bill. Do we really think we have accomplished what we started out to do? Are we really providing an effective force that would be valuable for the national defense next year? Are we making any substantial improvement on what we would have next year if we needed them next year or year after next? I do not think so.

As to the Regular Army, we have provided for its increase by 20,000 men at once. The general increase provided for by this bill is 16,000 a year. We have provided for the first 12 months' increase already and for 4,000 of the increase of the second year, so that we will add only 12,000 to what we have already provided during the second year.

Mr. President, I am in favor of enlisting the full amount we contemplate adding just as quickly as we can enlist them. I am in favor of pulling down this limitation as to time and of obtaining them at once as rapidly as they can be had. I am not interested in the Army five years from now anything like so much as I am interested in the Army next year and the year after. I hope that five years from now, with the object lesson before them of the European struggle, possibly the nations of the world will return to sanity and that disarmament rather than preparation for war may be the governing force of the world. It is now that it is our duty to put ourselves in a reasonable condition for national defense. I hope, Mr. President, that we will change the pending bill and permit the immediate enlistment of all the troops that we contemplate as an increase of the standing army.

I like the amendment of my colleague [Mr. HARDWICK]. It will not be expensive, but it is something substantial. There are 2,000,000 boys, from 16 years of age up, in the schools and colleges of the United States. For a small sum they could be drilled and even equipped. Suppose we estimate that there will be 400,000 or 300,000 who would tender their time and, in groups of 50 or more, accept the provision. I understand that in the high schools of Atlanta, Ga., 1,500 boys applied for the privilege of enlistment and drilling. If we could by the 1st of next September or the 1st of next October have in the schools of the country 300,000 boys who were organized and being drilled, I think it would be beneficial to them throughout their lives. I believe we would have 500,000. I believe that, with the smallest expense, with an expense that would be nominal, we could have 500,000 boys in the schools of the country this fall under a 12-month enlistment, organized and being trained.

The expense would certainly be very small. One Army officer could be detailed to 50 men, and the extent of the equipment, the extent of the uniforms, could be controlled by our determination as to the expense. The equipment, so far as arms are concerned, would be a permanent investment and not exhausted by a year's use.

Mr. GALLINGER. Mr. President, if the Senator will permit me to interrupt him, he will observe that this amendment provides that they shall have similar arms and equipment to those of the Regular Army of the United States.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. Well, it might be proper to amend that.

Mr. HARDWICK. Mr. President, if my colleague will pardon me, the language, in addition to that, is "or such as may be best suited to the needs and requirements of such reserve forces."

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. My colleague has qualified that provision as he has indicated.

Mr. GALLINGER. I did not know that.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. I would largely leave the mode of handling it and the extent of the expenditures to the discretion of the Secretary of War as the force enters the service and as the department finds it practicable to handle the force; but out of it we will have organized by the 1st of next January, I have no question, 400,000 splendid boys, who in a short time, with additional training, will be ready to back the first line of our troops. It would mean something substantial.

I have no confidence in section 56, because the men under that section are simply to go out and drill for 30 days and then be disorganized. It is something in the shape of a permanent organization that we ought to bring out of this bill. It is something immediately in the shape of a permanent organization for the Regular troops that we ought to bring out of this bill, and something in the shape of the largest number possible of really organized and officered men as a reserve which we should bring out of this bill.

I trust this amendment will be adopted, and I trust a little later on we will amend the provision as to the Regular Army to provide for the immediate enlistment of the troops we contemplate having.

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President, will the Senator yield to me?

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Georgia yield to the Senator from Utah?

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. Yes.

Mr. SMOOT. In relation to the expense attached to this amendment, as I understand, if 400,000 boys, the number suggested by the Senator from Georgia, should take advantage of the amendment, then the expense to the Government would be $5,200,000 each year, for the amendment provides that each boy enlisted shall receive pay at the rate of $13 per month.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. Each boy enlisted?

Mr. SMOOT. That is, during the summer vacation.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. When they are out giving their whole time to the service.

Mr. SMOOT. Yes; during their summer vacation; and I say that for 400,000 of them the cost——

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. If they drill 30 days during the summer as a body it would cost something over $5,000,000.

Mr. SMOOT. Yes; that is as I understand it.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. Now, Mr. President, where could we spend a similar sum and develop as forceful an organization? Where else could we spend that amount of money and realize results as practical? I trust the amendment will be adopted, and a little later on, when the opportunity is presented, I shall again urge, with some figures with reference to the expense, a change in the bill so that enlistments for the Regular Army will not be limited to 16,000 a year, but the full quota can be enlisted immediately.

Mr. McCUMBER. Mr. President, this amendment is in every principle exactly the same as the amendment which I offered the other day, and upon which I did not ask for a yea-and-nay vote. While not in the same language, its purpose and intendment are exactly the same.

Mr. President, we will have no organization in the State of North Dakota, none I believe in Montana, none in South Dakota, and I am doubtful if we will have in the western part of Minnesota under section 56. You will secure the organizations contemplated by that section only in those States and in those districts in which large cities are found. That section will prove a failure, in my opinion. Certainly a mere 30 days' training for a few gentlemen who get together will never make an army.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. Mr. President, if I may ask the Senator a question, with the House of Representatives overwhelmingly voting it down, with the Senate only sustaining it by two majority, is there any possibility of section 56 remaining in the bill? Do we really think seriously it will remain in the bill? We know it will not.

Mr. McCUMBER. I do not think it ought to be in the bill, because I think it will be a failure.

Now, there are in the colleges and in the high schools of the United States about 750,000 young men, energetic and of the right age to take lessons in drill and in maneuvers at the same time that they are fitting themselves for the various avenues of civil life. Nothing could be more beneficial to these young men than to have this training during the two or two and a half months of their vacation. In the one instance we will not have an organization, but, on the other side, we will have in every high school and in every academy and in every college in the United States a body of students organized and ready to step forward; and, in my opinion, at least 90 per cent of them would be eager to take the instruction and spend their summer vacation in camp. Thus we would have the nucleus of a strong army to draw on in the future.

I hope, Mr. President, that this method of building up a civil army that can be made the nucleus for a great military army whenever the Nation may demand their services may be voted into this bill. You will then, Mr. President, succeed in having an organization in every one of the districts throughout the United States. I shall cheerfully vote for this amendment.

I wish to add that, as the amendment offered by the junior Senator from Georgia [Mr. HARDWICK] expresses everything that I intended in my amendment, I shall not offer mine, but shall content myself with casting my vote for his amendment.

Mr. CHAMBERLAIN. Mr. President, just a word or two. The cruel part about this amendment is that it at once makes the young men 16 years and over a part of the enlisted strength of the Army of the United States. I believe there has been current a song about the mother who did not raise her boy to be a soldier; but this proposition is to ingraft into the law a provision compelling every boy 16 years of age and over to be an enlisted man in the Army.

Mr. HARDWICK. Mr. President, will the Senator yield? The Senator does not want to misrepresent the amendment.

Mr. CHAMBERLAIN. Certainly, I do not.

Mr. HARDWICK. The amendment does not have anything compulsory about it. It says that they shall not be required to take this instruction, and nobody will be required to take it who does not want to do so.

Mr. CHAMBERLAIN. Mr. President, I do not intend to misrepresent the amendment, but it provides:

> That in the event the United States becomes engaged in war or it should become necessary to use troops to repel invasion, suppress insurrection, or maintain peace and order under the Constitution and laws of the United States, then the President of the United States is authorized to call into active military service the whole or any part of the reserve forces herein provided for a period not to exceed 12 months.

Mr. HARDWICK. Mr. President——

Mr. CHAMBERLAIN. I will say to the Senator that I have only 10 minutes to speak to this question.

Mr. HARDWICK. The Senator can get more time; we can get it for him in other ways, and we will do that all right. Now, if the Senator will pardon me, no man is required to enlist or is required to take advantage of the provisions of this amendment unless he wants to do so.

Mr. CHAMBERLAIN. No; not to enlist——

Mr. HARDWICK. We do not make him do it by law or in any other way unless he wants to do it.

Mr. GALLINGER. Then, it does not amount to anything.

Mr. CHAMBERLAIN. Then, as suggested by the Senator from New Hampshire, it does not amount to anything.

Mr. President, in the last analysis, the only thing that is going to protect this country and to create a reserve that will absolutely defend the country is some system of compulsory military training. It is said that the country is not ripe for it yet, Mr. President; but whenever the country is in danger the American people are ripe to accept any proposition that will place it in a condition where it can defend itself against the world.

Here is a system of compulsory education, if you please, the Senator to the contrary notwithstanding, because it provides in terms that these schools can have officers detailed in connection with them to assist in giving military training; and the boys at these schools will become soldiers, because, as the Senator from Georgia well said, they like brass buttons; they like the display that follows the life of a soldier. But, Mr. President, aside from the question of drafting the boys of 16 years and over into the service of the United States—and I claim that is what it does do—is the question of expense.

Whenever we try to do anything here toward the reorganization of the Army the first charge that is made is: "You are building a top-heavy institution. You are creating officers here for the Army and neglecting the enlisted men"; and nobody has protested so loudly against that as the distinguished senior Senator from Georgia [Mr. SMITH]. Now, my distinguished friend from North Dakota [Mr. MCCUMBER] says that his State is not interested in it at all. Permit me to say to the Senator that there is an officer detailed to both North and South Dakota for the purpose of training the young men in those States.

There are at present detailed for these services, in the different parts of the country, 685 officers of the Army. The bill as it stands now increases the details from 685 to 1,022; and yet, if this amendment goes through you will have to detail a great many more than that. Take the condition of the schools last year. There are about 100 schools now eligible for the detail of officers to train the young men. Those schools in the past 11 years graduated 44,000 young men, and there are in the schools now 32,000 young men who are receiving military training. If you are going to increase the number, we have not enough officers in the Army to go around to all of these schools where there are 50 young men 16 years of age and over.

So that in the last analysis we have not the men. But more important than that, Mr. President—and I am of necessity compelled to speak hastily—I desire to call the attention of the Senate to sections 42 to 55 of the bill as it stands now, under which, if it becomes a law—that provision has not been assailed yet—we will train young men not for enlisted men but to create an officers' reserve. It seems like cruelty to draft into the enlisted strength of the Army the young men who are the strongest mentally and physically when the same young men ought to be trained, and the bill provides for training them, for officers and to go into the reserve corps.

Just look at the number of officers now that are on detached duty. In the National Guard there are 114; in educational institutions, 61; in the recruiting service, 87; as service-school faculties, 184; in the Philippine Scouts, 11; aids to general officers, 27; Military Academy, 74; other officers detailed for service elsewhere, 96, and the General Staff, 31, making 685. This bill proposes to increase that number to 1,022, and that goes the limit to train young men for the officers' corps rather than to train them for enlisted men.

Mr. President, I hope the amendment will not be adopted. I think the committee has gone as far as it ought to have gone in the preparation of young men for officers under the provisions to which I have called attention; and I think the Senate ought not to go any further than the committee went in its effort to train these young men for the officers' reserve corps.

Mr. REED. Mr. President, the chairman of the committee has just stated as a chief objection to the amendment, which proposes to carry military instruction into the schools and colleges of our land, that we can not spare the number of officers necessary to do the teaching. Truly we are in a remarkable condition if we can not furnish instructors to teach the boys who may want to fit themselves to defend our country. I unhesitatingly say that if we are in so sad a state we had better take out of the Army and out of the Navy every man who is capable of giving military instruction and get busy right now instructing some more men, so that we can get enough skilled men, at least, to teach the people of the country how to protect the country. It is a remarkable argument that we have not enough men so that we can afford to assign them to the duty of making other men competent and fit for service.

An officer detailed to a school like the one spoken of by the Senator from Georgia [Mr. HARDWICK], where 1,500 students are ready to enlist, can in one year's time train 1,500 to a certain point, and in two or three years' time can bring a large number of that 1,500 men to a degree of military knowledge which will render them capable of great service to our country. When a man teaches others he multiplies to the world the knowledge he possesses; in a sense, he multiplies himself. If we are at so low an ebb as the chairman of the committee argues, then so much more the reason to begin teaching, and to begin at once.

The Senator talks about the cruelty to the boys in having them enlist. Let it be plainly understood that there is no provision in this amendment requiring any boy to enlist. The requirements of the amendment are, first, the authorities of the school must request the establishment of military training; second, the parents of the boy must consent; third, the boy must himself consent. There is, therefore, neither coercion nor compulsion.

Is there, as has been charged, any cruelty in enlisting these boys? Is there any cruelty in teaching a boy how to defend himself and his native land? Manifestly not. The only cruelty that could possibly come is when he is put on the battle line.

Mr. President, disguise it as we may, we are preparing to put somebody on the battle line. The question, then, is, Shall we put on the field of battle a man wholly unfitted for his task, incapable either of defending himself, his home, or his native land, or shall we put there a man who is equipped and able to meet all antagonists?

The question of age has been raised. It is asserted that the students who will be embraced within the provisions of the amendment are too young. The answer is given by the facts of history. In their light nothing remains of the appeals to the sympathy on account of youth. It was the youth of the country that fought the great Civil War. The chairman of the committee has furnished me, at my request, with a table which he put into the RECORD a few days ago, and which I shall not repeat, but I call attention to a few of the figures.

There was in the Civil War under 15 years of age 104,987 soldiers.

There was above 22 years of age only 618,511 soldiers.

There was nearly twice as many boys under 15 as there were men over 22.

There was in the Civil War under the age of 17, 844,891 soldiers.

There was under the age of 18, 1,151,434 soldiers.

There was under the age of 21, 2,159,798 soldiers.

The battles of the Civil War were fought by boys. It will be the boys who will fight the battles of the future. When you talk of cruelty, I ask you which is the more cruel—to send these boys out unprepared to slaughter or to send them out prepared to take care of themselves? Which would you rather have happen to your boy? Would you rather have him sent out untrained, half equipped, ignorant of the art of war, without knowledge of the rules necessary to preserve his health in the field, to become the ready food of cannon, a ready sacrifice to bullets and bayonets, the easy prey of disease and pestilence, or would you rather send him forth capable of meeting his foe on equal terms, more skilled than his antagonist, strong, and self-reliant, confident? Would you rather have him brought home on a stretcher or welcome him bearing the laurels of victory? The cruelty is in sending a boy out to slaughter, not in training him to take care of himself.

These boys are already mobilized in our schools. They have the time to give. They can give it without detriment to their school work. They are there, full of enthusiasm, full of energy, full of life, full of ambition. They are where we can get at them and train them. There is more virtue in this one amendment than there is in the entire bill.

You talk about expense. You can readily prepare to spend from $25,000,000 to $40,000,000 a year on an army of volunteers; but when we speak of $5,000,000 a year, which will give the country an army five times as big as the proposed volunteer army, Senators are appalled at the expense.

Mr. President, I repeat this is the most meritorious proposition of the bill. Some one has spoken of the expense of arming the students. We have 1,000,000 rifles now in this country. We ought to have 2,000,000 or more, for men can not fight without arms. But the 1,000,000 rifles we now have are largely stored away in armories, boxed up, oiled, and kept for the future; they would better be kept polished by the hands of the young men of the country who are learning to use them in the Nation's defense.

I am astonished that this amendment should be resisted. It is the one amendment that proposes to train the citizens of this country and that gets at it in the right way. I am not in favor of a great professional Military Establishment.

I have said before, and I repeat, that I do not believe the professional soldier is a good thing in a Republic, except the number be so limited that the strength of the professional soldier shall always be subordinate to the strength of the civil population. I do believe, however, that every boy in this country ought to have a military training; not that he may become a professional, but a citizen soldier. I point to the fact that the chairman of this committee says there should be compulsory training in this country for everybody. If that is true, upon what ground does he dispute the wisdom of giving that training at least to those who will voluntarily take it?

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. And who are already organized.

Mr. NEWLANDS. Mr. President, I favor this amendment. I have favored, and I propose to favor, every reasonable amendment that provides for the union of vocational and military training. I believe in a patriotic and compulsory service. That is unattainable, however; and therefore it is desirable to make the service as attractive and persuasive as possible if we are to encourage recruiting.

There is no age at which military training is so attractive as in youth. There is no period at which it can be so easily acquired. I believe it would be a wise thing to provide for the military training of the youth of our country in our schools. I should like to see that advanced in some practical way by the union of vocational and military training. We have, by amendment, provided for that in our Regular Army. I should like to see it also provided for in this reserve army, but at all events this amendment will give our youth a discipline which will greatly benefit them and will give the country a large number of trained men—partially trained men, at least—who will be prepared to enter upon its service in case of emergency; and I shall, therefore, vote for it.

Mr. CURTIS. Mr. President, I understand the amendment offered is not the exact amendment I hold in my hand. I offer the following amendment to the amendment of the Senator from Georgia: Wherever the word "fifty" occurs, strike it out and insert in lieu thereof "one hundred," so as to make it read "in which there are as many as one hundred male students 15 years of age and over."

I offer that amendment because of the objection urged by the chairman of the committee that it would require too many officers if the number is placed at 50. Of course if the number were placed at 100 not nearly so many officers would be required.

I am very heartily in favor of the amendment of the Senator from Georgia, and hope that the amendment I have offered to it will be agreed to.

Mr. HARDWICK. Mr. President, am I entitled to speak again?

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Senator is, on this amendment; yes.

Mr. HARDWICK. On the entire proposition as it now stands?

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Senator from Georgia knows that he must speak to the question, but he can speak about anything on heaven above or on earth beneath.

Mr. HARDWICK. I will try to restrain my argument as much as I can to the proposition before the Senate.

It seems to me, Mr. President, that the suggestion of the Senator from Kansas by way of amendment is all right, and I propose to accept it—I think I have that power—because it will, to a large extent, meet the objection raised by the chairman of the Committee on Military Affairs.

I want to say just a word or two more about the proposition before the vote of the Senate is taken on it.

I understand that some Senators are under the impression that the amendment provides that this service could be required without the consent of the parents or guardian of the boy who wishes to enlist. Such is not the case. The amendment offered and pending provides in so many words that no boy shall be allowed to take this training or to enlist in the reserves except with the full consent of his parents or guardian.

There is nothing in the objection on the score of expense. This amendment will provide a splendid reserve army at much less cost than any other system that has yet been suggested or that I believe can be devised. There is no provision whatever for any pay for these boys except when they are mobilized outside of their own States; it may be in many cases for short summer vacations, and then the pay, $13 a month, will hardly pay their expenses. It was not designed to give them any financial compensation, but it was thought that when they were carried off into these mobilization camps during vacation the Government ought to pay them enough to pay their expenses; and that is all there is of that proposition.

Mr. President, I am ready for the Senate to vote. I know there are many other amendments to be offered.

Mr. SMITH of Michigan. Mr. President, I was very much interested in the statement of the Senator from Missouri [Mr. REED]. The figures which he gave about the age of soldiers during the Civil War are very striking, and I think the Senator could have gone one step farther and shown with perfect truthfulness that there are more soldiers now living, more than half a century after the war closed, than there were soldiers in the Union Army over 22 years of age in the War of the Rebellion. That was a boy's war. There were 1,840,000 of them under 18 years of age.

Mr. HARDWICK. If the Senator will permit me, I have looked into the question, and the same thing is true about every war this country ever fought, from the Revolution down.

Mr. SMITH of Michigan. I am glad the Senator has said that. I was about to say it myself. I think the record will bear out the statement. The War of the Rebellion was a boys' war; and when you consider that that war was fought and won by boys who were denied by their Government participation in the choice of public servants and in the making of laws, it is a very singular and striking situation. Five years after the war these 1,844,000 boys were permitted to vote, and not before that time. There were over 1,400 boys in the War of the Rebellion on the Union side who were not over 14 years of age.

Mr. President, I do not know how you expect these boys to be prepared for military service. This education will help them and may help the country in its hour of peril, should we be so unfortunate as to need their service, and I can see no impropriety in such training and education at that age when they are most easily trained, especially if it is voluntarily desired. The amendment allows them to have an instructor if they want it; and if they have an instructor, can anyone say that the result will not improve them physically and mentally?

No one can tell what a boy will grow to be under certain favorable environments. Since I have been a Member of Congress I have appointed a good many boys to the Naval Academy and to West Point. I remember at one time appointing one of the most unpromising boys I ever saw in my life, who came because he was moved by high ambition to do so. He had educated himself. I doubted very much whether he would be able to pass the examination, but, much to my astonishment, he did pass. He was the son of a carpenter in the little town in which he lived. He never had very many advantages even in the public schools. Yet that boy is to-day a naval constructor in the New York Navy Yard and has built the battleship New York and the battleship Arizona. You can not tell what a boy will amount to under certain favorable environments, and I am the last man to fix any limitations to his growth.

Environment and necessity are the chief spurs to self-reliance and independence in this world. I put the latter first, because if some loved one depends upon him he will meet any emergency with courage and confidence, and if his environment is helpful you can not tell to what heights he may climb in this blessed Republic, where opportunities are so numerous and the field of individual endeavor so limitless.

If we are to be defended by boys on the field of battle, then I say it is their due that you give them suitable training and put into their hands the implements with which they may defend themselves; for this they will render their country a service which the Government never can repay.

Mr. CUMMINS. Mr. President, I ask the Chair whether the amendment proposed by the Senator from Kansas [Mr. CURTIS] was accepted.

The VICE PRESIDENT. It was.

Mr. CUMMINS. I desire to offer the following amendment, which I will read and then send to the desk. I can read it better possibly than the Secretary from the way it is written. I desire to add to section 58, line 11, page 3, the following words:

Provided further, That no person under 18 years shall be called into active service under this section.

Mr. HARDWICK. Mr. President, I accept that amendment. I had it in mind that the President would not call anyone under that age. I think it is a good one.

Mr. CUMMINS. With that, I desire to say a word regarding the amendment itself. It is my opinion that it would be one of the most valuable parts of the bill, which we all hope will be helpful in our military organizations. I have vastly more faith in the military training taken on by a young man at school when he is engaged in study in preparing himself for whatsoever he may be called upon to do in life than I have in military training at any other age. He not only acquires the mere science of military affairs but he acquires the spirit in which military education ought to be taken on, and he will carry that spirit with him throughout his whole life. It will help to teach him true patriotism.

I am afraid of the military spirit which is imbibed or acquired in the training of mature men, for I think it is difficult to disassociate it from immediate and constant war. But it is not so with the young man who is fitting himself for life and who will accept the military education as a part of the equipment that he needs to perform all the duties of a citizen.

I sincerely hope that the amendment offered by the Senator from Georgia as thus amended will be adopted.

Mr. OVERMAN. Mr. President, I voted for the McCumber amendment; I voted for the Reed amendment; I favor this amendment. I am in favor of training the youth of this land so that if we do have a war the young boys of the country who will have to fight it may be trained. I have a boy myself at a military school, because I know that that is the place where he will be taught to obey and also he will be taught to command. It will make him a better citizen when he comes out of that school, and if he does have to go to war he will be somewhat trained for the duties of war.

I think it is very certain that section 56 can not become a law. It is impossible. The House will never agree to it, and the Senate is really opposed to it. That was shown by the vote on it when it was adopted by a majority of two.

If we are to have a reserve army, the boys of the land from 15 to 20 will be those to put into the reserve force; and we will have a powerful reserve since the adoption of the amendment of the Senator from Iowa, which is a very wise amendment; they can not be called out until they are 18, and there will be 20,000 or 100,000 or perhaps 200,000 boys who will be trained not only for war purposes but for better citizenship. They will be better citizens than they would be without this training, and better prepared for military service.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is on the amendment of the Senator from Georgia as amended.

Mr. REED. Let it be read as amended. I do not mean to ask for the entire reading. I should like to know how it has been changed by amendments to it.

The VICE PRESIDENT. It was changed from 50 to 100, and that no person under 18 shall be called out by the President of the United States.

Mr. REED. I wish to ask the author of the amendment if, in view of the amendment that no one is to be called out until 18, he is not willing to lower the age of entrance to 15?

Mr. HARDWICK. I am perfectly willing to have that amendment made.

Mr. REED. I ask that that amendment be then made to the amendment.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The amendment will be so modified. The question is on agreeing to the amendment offered by the Senator from Georgia [Mr. HARDWICK] as amended.

Mr. SUTHERLAND. What is the change that has just been made?

Mr. HARDWICK. Let it be read as finally amended.

The VICE PRESIDENT. It will be read.

The SECRETARY. As amended, section 57 will read as follows:

SEC. 57. The reserve army: The Secretary of War is authorized and directed to detail for service as instructor in military tactics one or more commissioned officers of the United States Army to every college or school in the United States where there are as many as 100 male students 15 years of age or over in all cases where the authorities of such school or college make application for such detail and where there are the requisite number of students who desire and consent, with the full consent of their parents or guardians, to receive such training and agree to become a part of the reserve forces of the United States. The term for which said students shall enlist in the reserve forces shall be for and during the term of their connection with school or college, including vacations, and shall in no case be for less than 12 months: Provided, That no person under 18 years of age shall be called into the active service under this section. Such students shall not be subject to active military service except in connection with their training, and except in connection with such mobilizations as may be had during school vacations, for which latter service they shall be paid at the same rate that officers and men of corresponding ranks and grades are paid in the Regular Army: Provided further, That in the event the United States becomes engaged in war, or it should be necessary to use troops, in addition to the Regular Army and the National Guard, to repel invasion, suppress insurrection, or execute the laws of the United States, then the President of the United States is authorized to call into the active military service the whole or any part of such reserve forces.

Mr. CUMMINS. The proviso will come in at the end of the section.

The VICE PRESIDENT. At the end of the section. The question is on the amendment of the Senator from Georgia as amended.

Mr. POINDEXTER. Mr. President, before voting upon the amendment, I desire to state my position. I would be very glad, indeed, to vote for that portion of the amendment which provides for the training of boys in school. I think it is worthy of all the encomiums that have been heaped upon it by the speakers this morning. I think it is one of the most important propositions and one of the most valuable that has been suggested in connection with the bill, and I would gladly vote for it.

However, I am not able to reconcile myself to the idea of putting a penalty upon those young men of the country in schools for their willingness to gain a military training. That would be the case if the President is authorized to call them out in case of war. It is a species of conscription. It is compulsory service. Of course, they voluntarily enter into the training, but the proviso attaches to that voluntary entrance the compulsion that they must subject themselves to the orders of the President to serve as soldiers in the Army in time of war.

If there is to be any species of conscription or compulsory military service, it ought to be universal. It ought not to be confined to the young men who are in the schools or to those who are out of the schools.

The amendment is very much improved in that respect—the objection which appealed to me is modified a great deal—by the amendment of the Senator from Iowa which has been adopted, but still it leaves it so that all the young men in the high schools and colleges who accept this training, which in itself is most valuable for them, who are 18 years old or over, will be the first line of battle. They can be ordered out to meet the first needs of the country if there should be a war. I am not myself willing to vote for the amendment with that proposition in it.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. Will they not be better prepared to take the first line?

Mr. POINDEXTER. Undoubtedly.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. Have they not volunteered accepting this training?

Mr. POINDEXTER. Undoubtedly they volunteer to do it by the terms of the bill, but I prefer to give the young men in the schools an opportunity to volunteer for military instruction without thereby constituting themselves a part of the Regular Army who can be compelled to serve in time of war while the rest of the population is not compelled to serve.

Mr. BORAH. Mr. President——

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Washington yield to the Senator from Idaho?

Mr. POINDEXTER. I yield to the Senator.

Mr. BORAH. I think there is some strength in what the Senator suggests, and the further thought occurs to me that it possibly might deter a good many young men from taking this course who otherwise would do so.

Mr. POINDEXTER. I think that is a very probable result of the proviso. If these young boys are subject to be called to war by the order of the President, while all others are exempt from service, their parents and guardians would hesitate to allow them to take this military training. The amendment of the Senator from Georgia will be much more useful without this requirement.

The probabilities are that under the voluntary system young men 18 years of age and over who see the advantages of military training and who accept the provisions of this bill would volunteer at the call of the President, but they ought not to be required to do more than that unless the rest of the young men of the country of the same age and the same duties and the same responsibilities as citizens are subject to the same conscription.

In order, Mr. President, to have an opportunity to vote for that portion of the amendment which provides for training of a military nature in schools without at the same time subjecting every young man who accepts that training to compulsory service in time of war, while the rest of the country is exempted, I move to strike out of the amendment proposed by the Senator from Georgia the proviso on page 3, in section 58, including the amendment to it of the Senator from Iowa.

Mr. VARDAMAN. Mr. President, if this amendment shall be adopted I think it will result in the organization of schools where the science and art of war would be taught. The ordinary school with 100 or more pupils will not take advantage of it at all, because there will be a great many of the boys who will not assume these obligations. If the amendment proposed by the Senator from Washington [Mr. POINDEXTER] should be adopted and every school with a hundred or more boys attending it should make application for an instructor in military tactics, I hardly see where the United States would get officers to instruct them.

Unless there is to be some special benefit to the Government in the way of enlarging or augmenting the reserve force of the Army, it strikes me that the purpose of this legislation will altogether fail. So if this amendment, as proposed by the Senator from Georgia [Mr. HARDWICK], shall be adopted, the result will be, I apprehend, that there will be schools organized throughout the country in different States designed to carry out this plan, and the boys will go there will go for the special purpose of receiving military instruction. If that shall be done, the number of schools will be small enough to enable the United States Government to furnish instructors without increasing the number of officers of the Regular or standing Army or taking them from their duties with the Army; but if the suggestion made by the Senator from Washington shall be adopted, and every school that wants a military man, a West Pointer, to instruct in mathematics and the science and art of war shall make application, it would take a thousand or more such instructors, and yet the United States Government has no guarantee or warrant that any enlargement of the military force will be thereby effected. I have no objection to teaching boys how to handle arms, to ride horseback, and shoot, but, as I have said repeatedly heretofore, it seems to me we are going too far with the whole scheme.

I do not think it would be prudent to amend, as proposed, the amendment of the Senator from Georgia [Mr. HARDWICK]. It embraces a pretty good plan, and there will probably be just enough schools organized under the provisions of the amendment to enable the Government to conveniently furnish the instructors, and possibly some good may grow out of it; that is, if any good can come of legislation of the character of this bill at this time.

Mr. JONES. Mr. President, I am in hearty sympathy with what I conceive to be the general purpose of the amendment of the Senator from Georgia, but I think there is a great deal of force in the suggestion of my colleague [Mr. POINDEXTER] and in the suggestion of the Senator from Idaho [Mr. BORAH]; that is, if this proviso is put in the bill, it will probably deter a great many who would like to be trained from taking the training and going into this organization. I think the main purpose of the amendment, at least as I understand it, is to train the boys who are likely to be called upon or who will volunteer in case of danger to our country hereafter; to give them, as the President expressed it in one of his speeches, a rudimentary knowledge of military training, of camp life, and of military discipline; so that when they do volunteer, as they would volunteer and as they will volunteer in case of need, in a very short while they can be put into such shape that they will make good soldiers. With that purpose I am in hearty accord.

The Senator from North Carolina [Mr. OVERMAN] has told us about the boys being in military schools. My boy went through a military school, but I have seen no evidence in him of great development along military lines, though I did see evidence of improvement and of development that are of great benefit to him now in civil life. I see no special manifestation of any aroused military spirit or anything of that sort. So I have no fear of anything of that kind arising; but I do not believe that we can follow a better course toward preparing for defense in future than by adopting the general principle involved in the amendment of the Senator from Georgia. The general benefits contemplated by the amendment will come without the proviso. I do not think that we ought to contemplate for a moment that, while these boys are serving under this form of enlistment, they are to be called into active service by the President of the United States, as the standing Army can be called into service.

The main purpose of this amendment is to train these boys, and I have no fear, if trouble comes, that they will not volunteer and that they will not respond to their country's call without any compulsory feature in connection with the legislation. I hope that that proviso will be stricken out of the amendment. I think the amendment will accomplish all of its purposes without it, and I think that its purpose would be likely to be very seriously impaired by leaving the proviso in the amendment.

Mr. BRANDEGEE. Mr. President, I am heartily in favor of training the boys of this country in military matters, and I think it is going to be absolutely necessary for the Nation to do so. Personally I am in favor of universal military training, and I think, if the rest of the world is going to continue along the lines they have pursued in the last year or two, the time may be very close at hand when we shall be forced to have compulsory universal military service in this country.

The difficulty about amendments of this character, however, to my mind, is this: We are making a complicated Army reorganization bill by piecemeal upon the floor of the Senate. As we go along and Senators examine the paragraphs of the bill it occurs to them that a certain amendment would be desirable here or there, and they present detached and sometimes irrelevant plans, sometimes pretty comprehensive plans, for the insertion of this idea or that proposition in the bill, without at all knowing what other Senators are going to propose later to offer as a part of the bill. The result is likely to be, if we are not careful, I am afraid, that we shall get a bill which will be proceeding upon several different theories, and the parts of which may be very inconsistent and antagonistic. There is nothing that requires unity and organization and absolute singleness of direction so much as an army. Where military discipline is to prevail there must be undivided authority at the head of the organization.

As to this particular amendment, I should like very much if some plan could be developed in a comprehensive way so that the boys in school generally over this country could have some military training, even if for only one year, under competent officers of the Army. Then, when they left school, if the country ever got into trouble, and if volunteers were called for or even if a draft were imposed, you would have men who had had at least one year of military training and who knew the rudiments of the military art, probably how to maneuver, how to load and unload a gun and take care of it, and, to some extent, how to take care of themselves.

I am strongly tempted to vote for this amendment simply to get the matter into conference and to get it before the vision of the conferees, in the hope that after consultation with the department and with, perhaps, members of the War College, some scheme may be reported possibly, if compatible with the other provisions of the bill, that will be of some benefit along this line.

But now, to illustrate the unsatisfactory method of framing a bill in this way, let me call the attention of the Senator who has presented the amendment to page 2 of the amendment providing that the Secretary of War before he details an officer to give this instruction must cause the pupils——

Mr. HARDWICK. If the Senator will pardon me, Mr. President, the amendment is not now offered in that form.

Mr. BRANDEGEE. The amendment which I have before me is in that form.

Mr. HARDWICK. That is not the amendment as now offered. I intended to suggest in an earlier part of the session the amendment a copy of which the Senator has, but I have finally offered the amendment which is now at the Secretary's desk.

Mr. BRANDEGEE. Will the Secretary be kind enough to read from the amendment at the desk the section that corresponds to section 58 in the printed amendment?

Mr. HARDWICK. The provision to which the Senator from Connecticut has just referred is not in the amendment which I have now offered.

Mr. BRANDEGEE. Is there not a provision in the amendment as now proposed that the pupils shall sign an agreement to enlist?

Mr. HARDWICK. There is a provision of that sort.

Mr. BRANDEGEE. That is the provision I should like to have read.

The SECRETARY. That portion of the amendment reads:

Fifteen years of age and over, in all cases where the authorities of such school or college make application for such detail and where the requisite number of students desire and consent, with the full consent of their parents or guardians, to receive such training and agree to become a part of the reserve forces of the United States.

Mr. BRANDEGEE. Now, that is the point. What earthly good does it do for a pupil to agree that he will become a part of the reserve forces of the United States?

Mr. HARDWICK. If the Senator will pardon me, I can answer him, if he addresses his question to me.

Mr. BRANDEGEE. I will pardon the Senator to answer the question.

Mr. HARDWICK. The intention of that language is plain when taken in connection with the provision that the Secretary of War shall make rules and regulations that will provide for the enlistment of those boys as a part of the reserve forces of the United States.

Mr. BRANDEGEE. Mr. President, if the boy is enlisted, if he actually enlists in the reserve, then he is only subject to call during the time he is in school.

Mr. HARDWICK. Yes.

Mr. BRANDEGEE. Does not the Senator think that if there is going to be an absolute reserve built up the boys should be enlisted for a longer period than one or two years?

Mr. HARDWICK. No, if the Senator will pardon me; I think not, in connection with this sort of idea, because this is intended to make the school the center of mobilization. These boys ought not to be used at all except in case of extreme necessity, when the other forces can not be satisfactorily used; they ought not to be used except when they are already mobilized; and the contract which they make with the Government ought not to last for a longer period than their term at school. Of course the only advantage, so far as these boys are concerned, that the Government would get after the period of their school duties was over would be that they would go into civil life and probably become members of the militia or the National Guard, or perhaps sometimes of the Regular Army; but even where they went into civil life and had no connection with any of the military branches they would have a certain amount of military knowledge which would make them better soldiers, if we had to use them.

Mr. BRANDEGEE. What has the Senator to say in regard to the provision that they may be drafted by the President?

Mr. HARDWICK. Mr. President, I am glad the Senator asked me that question, as it gives me an opportunity to answer it in his time. The suggestion of the Senator from Washington is a strong one, and I thought about that very carefully; but it does seem to me that while we are furnishing these boys with arms, equipment, and instruction we might ask them to give to the Government of the United States, which is doing so much for them, a certain service of a very limited character for a very limited period of time, while they are receiving that instruction, if we should need that service. Of course, this system will not make a perfect reserve; it can not be so in the very nature of things, being a school proposition.

Mr. BRANDEGEE. It would seem to me, if it is the Senator's idea that the pupil will owe an obligation to the Government for instructing him, that he ought to make him enlist in the reserve when he signs his original enlistment for a longer period of time, instead of having him subject to draft by the President as distinguished from other portions of the citizenship of the country.

Mr. HARDWICK. If the Senator will pardon me again——

Mr. BRANDEGEE. I will pardon the Senator.

Mr. HARDWICK. I do not think so, because this is a school proposition, and I do not want to burden these boys with any greater obligation than one which could be carried out during the time of their connection with the institutions where they were mobilized and where they were getting this training.

Mr. BRANDEGEE. While I do not think that in the form the amendment is presented it is completely thought out or that it will give satisfaction, inasmuch as I am in favor of some sort of military training amongst the boys of the country and think we will need it in the future, in order to call the subject to the attention of the conferees I am willing to vote to let the matter go to conference.

Mr. DILLINGHAM. Mr. President, I should be glad if the substance of this amendment could have been considered as an independent measure; but I am prepared to vote for it as a part of this bill, as I believe in the principle which is involved. My purpose in speaking at this time, however, is to oppose, so far as I may, the amendment proposed by the Senator from Washington, to strike out the provision which authorizes the President of the United States to call out, in the event of war, those comprising the reserve corps.

My thought is this: If the boys in our educational institutions make the application that the bill prescribes to have military instruction in such institutions and make the agreement, with the consent of their parents, to be enrolled as members of the reserve corps, it will add to the seriousness of their thought, the seriousness of their work, and to the advantage which is to be derived from it, if they are also under obligation to respond to the call of the President, in the event of actual war, to engage in actual service.

I think that the military instruction which has been given in our colleges under previous acts has been weak, inefficient, and not productive of good results, for the simple reason that the students of our universities have treated it lightly. I know that in many instances the so-called military instruction has been farcical, and has been so considered by the students, and has been made a thing of ridicule; but now, with the aroused sentiment of our Nation in favor of preparedness, it seems to me that if the proposed instruction is limited, as I understand it to be, to those schools that make application for military instruction and that such application represents one-half of the boys over 15 years of age who are entitled to take this instruction, and if it is accompanied, as this amendment provides that it shall be accompanied, by an agreement to become enrolled in the proposed reserve corps, and added to that there is the further obligation that if in the event of war the President shall have power to call them into actual service, it is an element which will appeal to their manhood.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. Absolutely.

Mr. DILLINGHAM. It is something that will make men of them, just as the War of 1861 made men of the boys of that age. I think that the entire force of this proposed amendment to the bill would be destroyed if that clause be stricken out.

Mr. WILLIAMS. Mr. President, I hope that the suggestion made by the Senator from Washington will not be adopted. We do not want to waste the money in the Treasury. I can not imagine any greater waste of money than spending it to train a boy, giving him military drill and military teaching, when that boy, with the full consent of his parents, is willing to volunteer for dress-parade work and peace work, but wants to hold a mental reservation against being called out in war time. The very fact that he is willing to entertain that thought shows that he is not worth military training at all, and is not worth the money that the United States Government may spend upon him. We had better spend no money upon anybody except those who take this thing seriously and who expect, not alone to wear brass buttons and uniforms and to be popular with the girls on that account during peace time, as play soldiers and as a college exercise, but who are willing to make the training the foundation for future service at their own peril and who enter into the service with a notion in their heads that it means that some day they may possibly be shot.

Mr. BORAH. Mr. President, I shall detain the Senate only a moment.

I feel disposed to support the amendment of the Senator from Washington, although I shall vote for the amendment of the Senator from Georgia even if the amendment of the Senator from Washington should be rejected. It seems to me that we would get a larger number of boys who would enter upon the training without that proviso in the bill, and that the chances would be that by the time their training was through they would feel disposed to do what the Senator from Mississippi so well says they ought to be willing to do; secondly, when the time did come for practically conscriptive service it should be universal. But notwithstanding the fact that the amendment of the Senator from Washington may be rejected, I would be in favor of the amendment proposed by the Senator from Georgia. It is a step in the right direction. It is not complete and sufficient in and of itself, and could not be expected to be, being put on this bill as an amendment, under the circumstances under which it goes in. But it is a step in the right direction; and more of this bill ought to be devoted, both as to the appropriation and otherwise, to this kind of preparation than is found in the bill.

Last summer, according to an article in the Century Magazine, about 300 business men went out from Chicago to the United States fort to take training for 30 or 60 days, I have forgotten which. At the end of the time of training they called in 150 of the students from Culver University, Indiana, and they had a battle; and in maneuvers and in everything else which constitute a battle the 150 students defeated the 300 business men who had had training for 30 days. Of course that is not a conclusive test, but it does tend to support the statements which are made by the great military students and leaders that the time to train for military work is during the educational period. It is at a time when the mind is receptive to training.

A distinguished writer on this subject says:

Youth is the time for improvement—the season for preparation. A well-trained and disciplined cadet will not only be of great value to his country when it needs him, but he will be a better citizen and a better man.

This amendment carries with it not only virtue by reason of preparing the young men of the country in case we should have a call for them to arms, but it is as essential in fitting them for the ordeals of civil life. I believe in this kind of training for peaceful citizenship. It gives bearing and physical endurance and health and heart and courage for all the battles of life. I would wager more on the success of a boy who could saddle and ride a horse and shoot a gun than the boy who could not. Health is an immense element in success. I think the training that the young men will receive in these schools will be found as beneficial to them individually as any other part of their education.

Lord Roberts said:

I maintain that it is the bounden duty of the State to see that every able-bodied man in this country, no matter to what grade of society he may belong, undergoes some kind of military training in his youth sufficient to enable him to shoot straight and carry out simple orders if ever his services are required for the national defense.

Gen. Ian Hamilton, whose achievements in South Africa were so distinguished, stated that he would feel very confident of obtaining creditable results if he were placed in command of a mounted infantry brigade composed of boys who had previously been well grounded in handling arms.

Mr. President, I am in favor of the amendment.

Mr. CLAPP. Mr. President, in view of what the Senator from Idaho [Mr. BORAH] has just said, I think I will not only supplement his remarks but perhaps go a step further, without making military service the ultimate, but making qualification for citizenship the ultimate. The highest ideal of citizenship involves physical development, moral development, mental development, patriotic development, and a certain amount of discipline. Those are the requisites that best fit a man for citizenship in a republic. I would have those requisites in the training of the young men. It so happens that military training involves the physical, the discipline, and the patriotic; so that the more thoroughly a young man is fitted for the very highest ideals of citizenship the more thoroughly he is fitted for service to his country if the time should ever come when that service should be required.

The only difference between my own views and those of some is that I would place these qualifications of citizenship first, and the fact that those qualifications render the young man best qualified for service to his country in time of war, as an incident or sequence to the very highest development of training for citizenship.

I wish this subject had received more consideration. I wish it were more of a factor or a principle in the bill we are considering; but in the case of the present amendment, as in those we have had before, I, for one, can heartily support any amendment that thus tends first to fit the young man for citizenship, including, as it does, those requisites which make him best qualified to come to the defense of his country, if that occasion should ever arise, and we may be certain of his readiness to respond when the country really needs his services.

Mr. NORRIS. Mr. President, I am not one of those who believe that the present time is one when we ought to engage in a great expansion of our military program. I expect to vote in favor of the House bill in preference to the Senate bill because of those convictions. Nevertheless, it has always seemed to me that one of the things that we ought to do is to provide for Federal assistance in schools and colleges for military training, and I favor this amendment because I believe that military training assists in making good citizens to the same extent that it assists in making good soldiers; and I think the colleges and schools are a very appropriate place for the use of the officers in the Federal Army to give instruction in military and kindred subjects.

I should be glad to favor the amendment, with the modification offered by the Senator from Washington, as a substitute for the entire bill. I believe that the amendment of the Senator from Washington ought to be adopted, and I am taking the floor now principally to offer some suggestions as to why, in my judgment, that course ought to be taken by the Senate.

The Senator from Mississippi [Mr. WILLIAMS] suggested an objection to the section that, at first blush, I think will appear to most critical minds, and that is that the Federal Government can not afford to expend the public money in training soldiers who are not willing to enlist at the beginning of their training, so that they can be compelled to serve in the Army in case of war during their enlistment. It has been repeatedly said, and very truly said, that in case of a great war we must depend in the end upon the volunteer soldier, and a republic is founded on that theory. The volunteer soldier, through patriotic instincts, will enlist and defend the country in time of danger. We ought to have a citizenship, I think, prepared and drilled so that these volunteers at the very beginning of their service will be almost the equal of the regular soldiers. If we get into a difficulty, the nature of the volunteer forces and the number of them will depend somewhat upon the public sentiment existing at the time as to the justness of our cause. We, perhaps, under all circumstances would get a sufficient army; but men do not care to enlist in a volunteer army to defend the country until they know what the issue is. It does not mean, as the Senator from Mississippi said, that a man is not worth training who will not agree at the beginning of that training to enlist in any war that may come along during such training.

That, however, is not the only objection. The facts are that the boys who are going to get the benefit of this training can not engage in the training and receive its benefits unless they have the consent of their parents or their guardians; and parents will not consent to their sons enlisting in the Army unless they know what the issue of such a contest is. We can safely trust to the boys who will get this training to enlist voluntarily in case of trouble. Moreover, in cases where parents will preclude their sons from receiving this training in the schools when they are minors, when they go out of school about the time they become 21 years of age they have thus been unable to acquire the military training that they otherwise would have obtained if it were not for the provision that the Senator from Washington, by his amendment, seeks to strike out.

Therefore, in my judgment, we will get a great many more young men who will take advantage of this provision in the law if we amend it in accordance with the suggestion of the Senator from Washington. Once having received the discipline, the training that will make them better citizens and prepare them better for the ordinary duties of life, whether they go into war or not—having received this education and this instruction while they are minors and while they are in school, they will be available in the Nation's defense at any time afterward until they reach the age beyond which enlistment can not take place. So that if we are going to give this instruction in the schools, we ought to give it to as many as possible of the young men attending those schools, and we ought not to put any provision in the law that would have a tendency to keep any of those young men out from under the benefits of the law which we provide to give them instruction.

Therefore if we adopt the amendment of the Senator from Washington we relieve this proposal of all possible objectionable features. We instruct the young men, and the probabilities are that not one in a thousand—if it had been in the last few years, it would have been not one in a million—would while they are in school be called upon to enlist. So that, as a matter of fact, keeping in the bill the provision which the Senator from Washington seeks to strike out does not materially benefit it, because the probabilities are all against these young men being called into war while they are in school. Therefore, if we will give instruction to more young men in school who later on in life, up to the time they are 45 years of age, may be called upon as volunteers, we will thus be doing a great deal more toward the preparation of a volunteer army and will be doing a great deal more for the preparation of young men in active business life than we would be if we permitted the provision to remain in the bill which this motion seeks to strike out.

No young man will be quite as good a citizen physically and mentally without this training as he would be if he had it. I think the principal benefit to come will be that which will be derived in private life by the student who gets the benefit of this instruction. Everybody knows that it teaches a good many things that he does not get in other ways. It develops him physically, it makes him a healthier and a more rugged man, as well as a better citizen and better able to cope with the business affairs of life, and at the same time it prepares him for military duty if, unfortunately, such a calamity should come.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is on the amendment of the Senator from Washington [Mr. POINDEXTER] to the amendment of the Senator from Georgia [Mr. HARDWICK].

Mr. THOMAS. I suggest the absence of a quorum.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Secretary will call the roll.

The Secretary called the roll, and the following Senators answered to their names:

Ashurst	Broussard	Clark, Wyo.	Curtis
Bankhead	Burleigh	Clarke, Ark.	Dillingham
Beckham	Chamberlain	Colt	du Pont
Brady	Chilton	Culberson	Gallinger
Brandegee	Clapp	Cummins	Gronna

Harding	Lippitt	Pomerene	Sutherland
Hardwick	Lodge	Reed	Taggart
Hitchcock	McCumber	Robinson	Thomas
Hughes	Martine, N. J.	Shafroth	Tillman
Husting	Myers	Sheppard	Underwood
James	Nelson	Sherman	Vardaman
Johnson, Me.	Norris	Simmons	Wadsworth
Johnson, S. Dak.	Oliver	Smith, Ariz.	Warren
Jones	Overman	Smith, Ga.	Williams
Kenyon	Page	Smith, Md.	Works
Kern	Phelan	Smith, S. C.
Lane	Pittman	Smoot
Lee, Md.	Poindexter	Sterling

Mr. KERN. I desire to announce the unavoidable absence of the senior Senator from Florida [Mr. FLETCHER]. This announcement may stand for the day.

Mr. CHILTON. I wish to announce the absence of my colleague [Mr. GOFF] on account of illness. I will let this announcement stand for the day.

Mr. MARTINE of New Jersey. I was requested to announce the unavoidable absence of the Senator from Tennessee [Mr. SHIELDS].

The VICE PRESIDENT. Sixty-nine Senators have answered to the roll call. There is a quorum present.

Mr. LANE. Mr. President, before the amendment is voted upon I wish to say that I am perfectly in favor of training these young men at school, and they should be trained with the consent of their parents to be good and useful citizens as well as good soldiers. But I would stop there. I would not like to see those young fellows 18 years old placed in a position where they could be mobilized to put down a riot, to be used as strike breakers, or to be used for police duty. That I consider unfair. They are the flower of the youth of the country, and from them we will get the parentage of future generations, the hardy, virile young men who will carry on affairs after we go to our rest. It would be better, far better, for the country, rather than to take the young men in the first flush and heat of war and fill the trenches with them, to fill them with men of 45 years and over up to 70, including public officials, if you please, Members of this body and of the other House of Congress and such like gentry, to stand the first brunt of the fighting and hold the line until the young fellows become prepared to win or lose the battles which will settle the fate of the country.

We are going at it backward. We are sacrificing the flower of the country, and all nations have done the same in the past—the young men first—and the generations to follow them are left to be bred by the incompetent, the worn out, the crippled, and "the cankers of a calm world and a long peace."

I am opposed to any amendment to the bill which will place the young men of the country in a position where they will be called out to settle private quarrels between contending factions of the people of the country. If you will in the bill stop at the point where you give them the physical and military training to which they are entitled, making them sure shots with a rifle, with the consent of their parents, and if you will take your old and worn-out men to fill the trenches, they will, in my opinion, be more fittingly filled.

Mr. GALLINGER. Mr. President, I have refrained from consuming time in this debate because I am very anxious to have the bill sent to conference, and I wish to say just a word in favor of the amendment the Senator from Washington [Mr. POINDEXTER] has proposed.

The situation is that unless that amendment shall be agreed to when these young men have gone out of school, having received a superficial military training, they then shall be subject to the call of the President to act in defense of the Government on the battlefield if need me; they will be compelled to become soldiers; but in the slums of the great cities of this country, where the flotsam and jetsam have gathered, those men are not compelled to take up arms in defense of the Government. The young men must go to the front; the young men must be destroyed in the conflict of war; but the worthless, the men who are polluting society, the hordes of the East Side of New York, and in the slums of the other great cities of the country can escape military service, unless they are compelled to do so by being drafted into the service of the country.

Mr. REED. Mr. President——

Mr. GALLINGER. Now, why should not these young men at least have an equal chance with the class I have suggested? Why should they be compelled to take up arms and the others, of much less consequence to their homes, to society, and to the country, be free unless perforce they are drafted by the Government of the United States?

Mr. REED. Mr. President, I wish merely to call attention to one matter.

Mr. GALLINGER. I would be glad to yield for that purpose.

Mr. REED. Under the bill before the Senate these young men are liable to military service during the time they are actively in school. The period is limited to that.

Mr. GALLINGER. I understand that.

Mr. REED. As to the question about riots, and so forth, I call the Senator's attention to the language that they can only be called out when it is necessary to use troops in addition to the Regular Army and to the National Guard, so that they never could be called out merely to prevent a strike.

Mr. GALLINGER. But, Mr. President, the fact remains that they are put upon a disadvantage with men who are of less consequence to our society and to our homes and to the country than are these boys of 18 years of age and over.

I am unwilling that the youth of the country, that the intellect of the country, that the culture of our country, should be placed at any disadvantage with the men who are pouring into our great cities, polluting our society, doing harm to every interest of our country; that they should be exempt from this service while the boys who have just graduated from our schools or are in our schools should be compelled to take up arms in defense of our flag and of our Constitution.

For that reason, Mr. President, I shall vote for the amendment submitted by the Senator from Washington; and if that shall be agreed to, I shall then vote for the amendment offered by the Senator from Georgia.

Mr. POINDEXTER. Mr. President, my time has expired, and I should like to ask the Senator just one question to bring out a feature of this amendment, if he will allow me.

Mr. GALLINGER. I will be glad to yield for that purpose.

Mr. POINDEXTER. It is this: Is it not true that the instruction provided for in the amendment of the Senator from Georgia is nothing more than that given to any enlisted man in the Army? It has been argued here as though the Government would be giving these young men an education. There is nothing of that kind provided. It is simply the sort of military drill that enlisted men are subject to.

Mr. GALLINGER. The Senator is right about that. It is no more of an education than is now being given in our agricultural and mechanical schools, and we are requiring that they shall enlist because of the character of education they are receiving under existing laws.

Mr. President, I do not want to occupy time. I shall gladly vote for the amendment submitted by the Senator from Washington, and then I shall vote for the amendment of the Senator from Georgia if it shall be changed in that regard. I think it is wise to give our boys military training to a certain extent, but I do not think it is wise to then condemn them to become soldiers of the United States whether they want to become soldiers or not.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. Mr. President, I hope the amendment of the Senator from Washington will not prevail. I was very much impressed by what the Senator from Vermont [Mr. DILLINGHAM] said. The real enthusiasm with which these boys will go into this training is from the fact that they have assumed a real responsibility to the Government. They are not play soldiers. During the 12 months that they are at school under this enlistment they are real soldiers. They are ready at the call of their country to go to the front, and if an enemy invaded our soil they would be proud of the privilege of going to the front. The responsibility that rests upon them, as the Senator from Vermont said, in connection with the obligation will make real men out of them.

Mr. President, the Senator from New Hampshire [Mr. GALLINGER] says that he wants the slums of the big cities to go to the front to defend the flag if we are called upon to defend it. Mr. President, it is the best blood of the Nation, it is the bravest and the fairest of the boys, who will do the finest service, and they will be proud of the privilege, and they will go with perfect delight. I do not regard it as a hardship to place upon any young man to bare his breast beneath the flag of his country when his country needs him. I do not consider it a burden placed upon him. I do not consider it a sacrifice. They will be the best prepared, and they will glory in the privilege of the service.

Mr. GALLINGER. Mr. President, will the Senator permit me to ask him a question before he takes his seat? I should like to ask the Senator if he thinks that it is a great privilege for the youth of our country to leave their homes and to sacrifice their lives to protect the lives and property of the people whom I undertook to describe, as they are in our great cities?

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. I do not understand that the question of the Senator is applicable to this case. I answer him that the real object of this force is for national defense in case they are required really by a national invasion. We will need the men who are best prepared in such an event, and I do think it is a privilege, and I think it will be a privilege if such a time should ever come, for every man who has a drop of red blood in his veins of every age to line right behind them and do his duty. I believe they will do it from the Lakes to the Gulf, from the Pacific to the Atlantic. These boys will already be organized; they will be trained, and they will be in a splendid shape, and all true men will get right behind them if the call comes. I do not think that is a burden on them.

Mr. GALLINGER. The fact still remains they are fighting to protect the rights and the property of the worthless element in our great cities.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. I do not want the worthless to go to the front if there is war. I would be afraid of the result of their action.

Mr. GALLINGER. Perhaps the Senator would; I would not.

Mr. PITTMAN. Mr. President, I think this amendment in some particulars is very good, and I hope I shall be able to vote for it. I want to say that the oratory of the Senator from Georgia [Mr. SMITH] does not appeal to me. I do not know how the young men in Georgia feel on a matter of this kind. I hope they are as patriotic as the distinguished Senator from Georgia. I know that the boys of our State would not want to be tied down by an oath or bound by any such conditions to induce them to volunteer on behalf of this country if it ever became necessary to bare their breasts in defense of it; I object that the boys of our country shall be deprived of any character of education, whether it be military or otherwise, unless they subject themselves to the condition of being police officers. We do not approve of that in our State. I do not desire that our boys, in the case of a little insurrection or in the case of a little riot, shall be dragged away from their schools.

Mr. HARDWICK. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. HITCHCOCK in the chair). Will the Senator from Nevada yield to the Senator from Georgia?

Mr. PITTMAN. I yield.

Mr. HARDWICK. I wish to direct the Senator's attention to the fact that under the amendment they could not be used for such duty, and that they would not be called on until both the whole Regular Army and the National Guard had been called into service.

Mr. PITTMAN. Yes; and we have neither National Guard nor Regular Army in our State. We have a police force in our State which has been able to preserve order without the disrupting effect of the National Guard, and I do not want it within the power of any government or any department, whether it be National or whether it be State, to go into our State university and drag out of that college our boys and throw them into the maelstrom of a riot.

Mr. HARDWICK. If the Senator will yield again, I will state that there is nothing in this amendment which could possibly permit that. The President of the United States has no right to call out these reserve forces unless he has thoroughly exhausted all the men in the Regular Army and the National Guard of the United States. That must be done before he can use any of them anywhere or for any purpose.

Mr. PITTMAN. I do not care whether they have exhausted one force or another force; I agree with the distinguished Senator from New Hampshire and the Senator from Oregon that it is wrong in principle to take college boys and throw them into the defense of the Government or State against local disorder. There is no question but that these boys would volunteer their services in time of national need. I do not think that the Senator from Georgia need be afraid that any man who would accept the benefits of this education would hesitate to volunteer his services to his country. It is a reflection on the young men of my State to say that they would not volunteer to defend this country unless they were bound by some such provision as the Senator is now referring to. It is unworthy of the Senator from Georgia, in my opinion.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Nevada yield to the Senator from Georgia?

Mr. PITTMAN. I yield.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. Is it not an advantage to have an organized force, with officers, equipped and trained, acting together?

Mr. PITTMAN. Absolutely, and therefore I am in favor of the amendment. I believe that they should be trained to the highest degree. There we agree; but I do not believe that is a proper policy under any consideration to drag those men into the local disputes of any community. Therefore I will favor the amendment of the Senator from Washington, and if that amendment carries I will vote for the amendment. If it does not carry or some similar amendment, I will vote against the amendment of the Senator from Georgia.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. I will say to the Senator, if the amendment of the Senator from Georgia does not preclude their being dragged into the character of things that he suggests, I would be glad to vote for an amendment which would exclude it.

Mr. PITTMAN. If the Senator takes that view, it will do no harm to vote for the amendment of the Senator from Washington. It will simply be a double precaution. I intend to take that view of it.

While I am opposed to war and to any form of militarism, I am in favor of all forms of preparedness. Preparedness is a preservation. It preserves life, energy, property, and resources. I supported the amendment providing for a Government nitrate plant for such reason. I was unavoidably detained from the Senate Chamber when the vote on that provision was had, but I was heartily in favor of it, and hope it will be agreed to in conference.

Mr. REED. Mr. President, I wish to call the attention of the Senator from Nevada to what is, I think, an error in his conclusion. Let us see just what we are discussing. The amendment offered by the Senator from Washington is that these young men, armed and equipped and educated by the Government in military matters, shall not be subject to be called out at all. That is his amendment. The objection of the Senator from Nevada is that he does not want them called out to suppress strikes. Now, there is all the difference in the world between the two propositions.

Mr. PITTMAN. If the Senator will pardon me, he is not quoting me correctly. I have evidently conveyed the wrong impression. I simply emphasized the unfortunate condition of having these boys thrown into local troubles; but I also, as a matter of fact, believe that they should not be required to bind themselves to military service in consideration of getting an education.

Mr. REED. Now, Mr. President, let me state this matter, so that the provisions of the bill may be before the Senate. The amendment does not provide for calling men out to suppress strikes. They could not be called out for any such purpose unless the President were to plainly go beyond the law. Here is the language:

> Such students shall not be subject to active military service in connection with their training except in connection with such mobilizations as may be had during school vacations.
> Except in connection with such mobilizations as may be had during school vacations, for which latter service they shall be paid at the same rate that officers and men of corresponding ranks and grades are paid in the Regular Army: Provided, That in the event the United States becomes engaged in war, or it should be necessary to use troops in addition to the Regular Army and the National Guard to repel invasion, suppress insurrection, or execute the laws of the United States, then the President of the United States is authorized to call into the active military service the whole or any part of such reserve forces: And provided further, That no person under 18 years of age shall be called into the active service under this section.

Now, construed fairly, these young men are bound to no military service except during the time they are in school. When they leave school their service ends; the Government can not call upon them; second, it can not in any event call on any who have not arrived at the age of 18; third, it can not call upon them except after the Army of the United States has been called and is not sufficient in numbers, and after the militia have been called out and they have been found to be not sufficient in numbers. It is only after both the Army and the militia have been exhausted that these boys can be called on.

The language I have read does not cover strikes. It does not apply to small disturbances. It refers to conditions so grave as to amount to an actual state of war. We have increased the Army of the United States. We have strengthened the militia, and it is only when both these great forces acting together are not capable of handling a situation that the students may be called out. Such a condition could not be caused by a strike. Plainly, they could not be called out except in case either of invasion or an internal disturbance amounting, in fact, to actual civil war. So there is nothing in the bill which should frighten anyone. Now I yield to the Senator from Oregon.

Mr. LANE. I was going to ask the Senator if it was not equivalent to an enlistment for a period of two to three years at the very portion of the life of the young man when he is receiving his education, and practically does it not amount to his being the reserve army and the larger part of the Army of the country?

Mr. REED. It is an enlistment. We are talking here about enlisting men. It is intended to be an enlistment for a very limited period.

Now, let me reply to the Senator who says he is not in favor of making an enlistment in the Army a condition of education. Mr. President, all the education that is now available in the world will still be available to the young men who do not enlist. We take nothing away from them. Every public school will still be open and they can attend at will, whether they do or do not enlist. Every college will be open and they will not be called upon to enlist. They only enlist when they desire to take military training and desire to take it under officers appointed and paid by the United States.

Mr. President, I just want to say one final word, and before I say it I want to apologize for talking so much about this question and taking so much of the time of the Senate. I say to you that there is all the difference in the world between a young man who enlists to play soldier and who feels no responsibility and simply understands that he is going to go through a few perfunctory maneuvers, and that he is not, in fact, charged with any responsibilities—there is a wide gulf between that man and the man who understands that he is, in fact, a soldier; that he is, in fact, under military discipline; that he is, in fact, a part of the defense of his country.

Now, I have one word more to add and that is as to this eternal cry that our country ought not to impose its defense upon a part of its citizens and hence there should be no enlistment provided for here.

Mr. President, there are but three possible ways of defending this country: One is by a professional soldiery, whose business is that of studying warfare and nothing else. I have said, and I repeat, too great a force of that kind is not a healthful thing to have in a republic. Another way is by the universal draft; by making every citizen a soldier. That would get your slums; that would get the boys whom the Senator from New Hampshire [Mr. GALLINGER] speaks of and denominates "the offspring of the slums"; but is the Senator from New Hampshire ready to propose universal draft, universal military service in this country?

Mr. GALLINGER. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Missouri yield to the Senator from New Hampshire?

Mr. REED. Yes.

Mr. GALLINGER. I answer the Senator's question by saying, "Yes; if necessary."

Mr. REED. Well, and is the Senator ready to say it is necessary now?

Mr. GALLINGER. Certainly not. Neither do I think it necessary to make soldiers out of these schoolboys.

Mr. REED. Then what is left, sir? There is nothing left but voluntary enlistment. This is a provision for the voluntary enlistment of those who feel like voluntarily doing a voluntary thing. You get right back to that proposition. We must stand for voluntary enlistment or for involuntary service if we have a single soldier. I prefer volunteers to those who are compelled to serve. But however we may feel on that question, we all know that this bill does not pretend to provide for universal service. Hence we must choose between a military force composed partly of Regulars and partly of Volunteers or altogether of Regulars. I want as large a reserve of trained Volunteers as we can obtain at a reasonable expense.

Mr. McCUMBER. Mr. President, I should like to have some Senator who contemplates voting for the amendment to the amendment tell me what would be left of the amendment after there has been stricken out that particular portion of the amendment? The particular object of the amendment is a reserve army. The amendment provides for the training of students. Well, what are you training them for? If you are not training them for war, I should like to have some one tell me the purpose of training these young boys and spending millions upon millions of money for that purpose? The object is expressed here, that after they are trained, if we then get into war we can call on them; but the Senator from Washington [Mr. POINDEXTER] would strike out the provision which authorizes the Government to call out these boys whom the Government has rendered fit for service in the United States Army.

Mr. President, the Senator from New Hampshire [Mr. GALLINGER] says he would vote for the amendment with that provision cut out. Well, I should dislike to vote that the Government of the United States would train boys just for the love of training them and then sending them out without adding in any way to our reserve army.

Mr. GALLINGER. Mr. President——

Mr. McCUMBER. Just a moment. This is to take the place of section 56; this is to be the provision for our reserve army. What kind of a reserve army is it that is not compelled to respond to the demand when there is actual war? I will now yield to the Senator from New Hampshire.

Mr. GALLINGER. Mr. President, I will answer the Senator from North Dakota by saying that we are doing that very thing now in our colleges of agriculture and the mechanic arts. We are educating young men; we are sending officers of the Army to instruct them; but we do not compel them to go into the Army after they leave college.

Mr. McCUMBER. I am certain of that; and if the Senator thinks that the Government ought not to have any reserve army, that is a different proposition. If the Senator thinks that we should proceed to spend millions and millions of dollars just for the purpose of training these young men, with no relation whatever to the reserve army, then we have simply the volunteer process again.

I want to say before closing just a word with reference to this suggestion as to the slums, of which the Senator from New Hampshire [Mr. GALLINGER] speaks.

Mr. JONES. Mr. President——

Mr. McCUMBER. Just one second, and I will yield to the Senator from Washington.

There is nothing in this provision which prevents our calling upon those people; there is not a word here even that we shall draw upon this trained source first before we proceed to the other. We naturally would do so, because we would first draw upon the trained men before we would draw upon the untrained; but if we ever have a serious war I have no doubt in the world that we shall find means of reaching into the slums and compelling every man who is capable of bearing arms to do his part in the defense of the country.

Mr. GALLINGER. That means a universal draft.

Mr. McCUMBER. Mr. President, I am in favor of a universal draft if it becomes necessary.

Mr. GALLINGER. Certainly; so am I.

Mr. McCUMBER. The Army that would be provided here would not give us enough soldiers for a great war.

Mr. GALLINGER. No; but it would give us a trained corps of soldiers who would be fighting to defend their country and to defend the lives and property of the people who are in the slums.

Mr. McCUMBER. Very well; I think, then, Mr. President, we could very easily find a way of getting after the other fellows if they did not also respond to the call of the country.

Now I yield to the Senator from Washington.

Mr. JONES. Mr. President, the Senator seems to have the impression—probably he has not the impression—that under this amendment with the proviso in it the Government could call out any of these boys who have been trained under the provisions of the amendment; but that is not the case. The Government could only call out those who happened to be in training when the trouble arose.

Mr. McCUMBER. I appreciate that.

Mr. GALLINGER. That is true.

Mr. McCUMBER. That is true; I do not misunderstand that at all; but the purpose, I think, at all times is to have a trained army of young men ready to do service.

The provision of my amendment went further than that. It provided that these men could be called upon during the period which the Government should fix for enlistment; that is, up to the age of 45. I should prefer that that should be the case; but I have not the slightest doubt, as we can take only one step at a time, that once we get this army started we shall follow it up with a provision that we may call upon these men within the enlistment age. I am not, however, trying to amend the amendment to correspond with my views in every particular.

Mr. JONES. The Senator from North Dakota [Mr. McCUMBER] suggests that we are paying out a whole lot of money, and that we shall not get very much service for it if we strike out this proviso. The fact is that under the amendment as it is we shall spend considerable sums of money—not a great deal—in training the boys, and when they get through school, notwithstanding that they will have obtained the training and we shall have spent the money, we can not call on them at all.

Mr. McCUMBER. But you have got, first, those who are in school at the time taking their training, and that makes an army in itself; secondly, those who have passed beyond that age and are still subject to enlistment, if they desire to enlist, and you have still further an army of those capable and able and willing to serve the country.

Mr. JONES. Yes; but we do not lay hold of those to whom we have given full training, you might say, but we take hold of those who have two or three months or six months or something like that. It is an argument to my mind for cutting out the proviso, because by their instruction we will get a trained citizenry that will volunteer whenever any danger comes without any strings to their patriotism. That is really what we want.

Mr. McCUMBER. Yes, Mr. President, you may have a citizenship that is trained; but you have not an army; you have no nucleus of an army. You are still subject to the same volunteer system.

Mr. LANE. Mr. President, may I make an inquiry of the Senator from North Dakota?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from North Dakota yield to the Senator from Oregon?

Mr. McCUMBER. I yield.

Mr. LANE. Does the Senator attach any significance to the fact that, after all, this student body will be but half trained, and that we will be enlisting and putting into the front line of defense of this country an army one-half of which is composed of the untrained youth of the land? If we get no service from them under this bill after they have become fully trained and able to fight, then our half training them is of no practical advantage. Does that not militate against the proposition?

Mr. McCUMBER. Mr. President, every man who enters the Army, whether he is in the Regular Army or the Volunteer Army, has to begin his training. He may be half trained or he may be two-thirds trained or he may be one-quarter trained; but when a war breaks out we can not change those conditions. Those who are fully trained are fitted, nevertheless, for the service of their country.

So, Mr. President, I am convinced that if you strike out this portion of the section you will have no reserve army whatever; that you are right back where you started, with a volunteer service only; but that you would have a few more men in the country who would require less training in order to become efficient.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on the amendment offered by the Senator from Washington [Mr. POINDEXTER] to the amendment offered by the Senator from Georgia [Mr. HARDWICK].

Mr. POINDEXTER. I ask for the yeas and nays on the amendment to the amendment.

The yeas and nays were ordered, and the Secretary proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. BRADY (when his name was called). I have a general pair with the senior Senator from Florida [Mr. FLETCHER], who is absent from the Chamber. I therefore withhold my vote. If permitted to vote, I should vote "yea."

Mr. TILLMAN (when his name was called). I transfer my pair with the Senator from West Virginia [Mr. GOFF] to the Senator from Tennessee [Mr. SHIELDS] and vote "nay."

Mr. WALSH (when his name was called). I have a general pair with the Senator from Rhode Island [Mr. LIPPITT]. Transferring that pair to the Senator from Oklahoma [Mr. GORE], I vote "nay."

Mr. WILLIAMS (when his name was called). Transferring my pair with the senior Senator from Pennsylvania [Mr. PENROSE] to the Senator from Tennessee [Mr. LEA], I vote "nay."

The roll call was concluded.

Mr. SUTHERLAND. I inquire whether the Senator from Arkansas [Mr. CLARKE] has voted?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair is informed he has not voted.

Mr. SUTHERLAND. I have a pair with that Senator, which I transfer to the Senator from Rhode Island [Mr. COLT] and vote "nay."

Mr. CHILTON. I transfer my pair with the Senator from New Mexico [Mr. FALL] to the Senator from Delaware [Mr. SAULSBURY] and vote "nay."

Mr. BECKHAM. I wish to announce the absence of the Senator from Tennessee [Mr. SHIELDS] on account of illness in his family.

Mr. CURTIS. I am requested to announce the following pairs:

The Senator from Michigan [Mr. TOWNSEND] with the Senator from Florida [Mr. BRYAN]; and

The Senator from New Mexico [Mr. CATRON] with the Senator from Oklahoma [Mr. OWEN].

The result was announced—yeas 31, nays, 46, as follows:

YEAS—31.

Ashurst	Gronna	McLean	Sheppard
Borah	Hitchcock	Myers	Smith, Md.
Chamberlain	Hollis	Norris	Sterling

So Mr. POINDEXTER's amendment to Mr. HARDWICK's amendment was rejected.

Mr. HUSTING. Mr. President, I offer the following amendment: After the word "war,", in line 23, I move to insert the words "or threatened war," and to strike out the words "or it should be necessary to use troops in addition to the Regular Army and the National Guard to repel invasion, suppress insurrection, or execute the laws of the United States."

Mr. HARDWICK. Mr. President, I merely want to say that I accept that amendment. I believe I have a right to perfect my amendment, and I accept it.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Georgia accepts the amendment. The question now recurs upon the amendment of the Senator from Georgia as modified to the substitute reported by the committee.

Mr. HARDWICK. I ask for the yeas and nays.

Mr. GALLINGER. Let the amendment be stated from the desk.

Mr. WALSH. I ask that the amendment be read as it will be after the amendment just now adopted is incorporated.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Secretary will state the amendment as modified.

The SECRETARY. It is proposed to add the following as a new section to the bill:

SEC. 57. The reserve army: The Secretary of War is authorized and directed to detail for service as instructor in military tactics one or more commissioned officers of the United States Army to every college or school in the United States where there are as many as 100 male students, 15 years of age and over, in all cases where the authorities of such school or college make application for such detail and where the requisite number of students desire and consent, with the full consent of their parents or guardians, to receive such training and agree to become a part of the reserve forces of the United States. The term for which said students shall enlist in the reserve forces shall be for and during the term of their connection with school or college, including vacations, and shall in no case be for less than 12 months. Such students shall not be subject to active military service except in connection with their training, and except in connection with such mobilizations as may be had during school vacations, for which latter service they shall be paid at the same rate that officers and men of corresponding ranks and grades are paid in the Regular Army: Provided, That in the event the United States becomes engaged in war, or threatened war, then the President of the United States is authorized to call into the active military service the whole or any part of such reserve forces: And provided further, That no person under 18 years of age shall be called into the active service under this section.

The Secretary of War is hereby authorized to prescribe all necessary rules and regulations of enlistment and discharge of members of the reserve force, and for its training and mobilization, and is also authorized to furnish such reserve forces arms and equipment similar to those furnished to troops in the Regular Army, or such as may be best suited to the needs and requirements of such reserve forces.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on the amendment offered by the Senator from Georgia as modified.

Mr. HARDWICK. Let us have the yeas and nays.

Mr. BRANDEGEE. Mr. President, I wish to ask a question of the Senator from Georgia, the author of the amendment, if I may be allowed to do so. The amendment provides that an instructor in military tactics may be detailed. Another portion of the amendment provides that these men may be summoned into the active service of the United States and that they shall become a part of the reserve forces of the United States. I do not think it is plain what this instructor of military tactics is to do. In other words, does the amendment contemplate that after having attended mere oral lectures on military tactics these men shall be put into the service of the United States, or is there any provision for furnishing them equipment with which to drill?

Mr. HARDWICK. If the Senator will read the concluding part of the amendment, he will find that is provided for.

Mr. BRANDEGEE. I have it not before me.

Mr. HARDWICK. Well, the concluding portion of the amendment provides that all of the details as to the kind of instruction and the character and quantity of equipment and arms, and so forth, shall be left to the discretion of the Secretary of War.

Mr. BRANDEGEE. But where does the equipment come from? Who pays for it?

Mr. HARDWICK. Of course from the United States Government.

Mr. BRANDEGEE. Then the amendment provides that the Government shall furnish guns and equipment?

Mr. HARDWICK. It does. Yes, sir.

Mr. CUMMINS. Mr. President, a word with regard to the parliamentary situation. The Senator from Wisconsin [Mr. HUSTING] offered an amendment the reading of which I was unable to hear. The Senator from Georgia promptly accepted the amendment. I now ask whether the amendment offered by the Senator from Wisconsin is embodied in the amendment now offered by the Senator from Georgia?

Mr. HARDWICK. It is.

Mr. CUMMINS. Then what is the essential difference between the amendment now offered by the Senator from Georgia and the original amendment?

Mr. HARDWICK. As originally drawn the amendment provided that the President of the United States might call these reserves into active military service in case of war or in case it was necessary to use them to repel invasion, suppress insurrection, or execute the laws of the United States after the Regular Army had been exhausted and after the National Guard had also been called out.

Mr. CUMMINS. I observe that; but is there any other difference?

Mr. HARDWICK. There is no other difference except——

Mr. CUMMINS. The language was not changed throughout?

Mr. HARDWICK. No. As I caught it, the amendment of the Senator from Wisconsin amounted to this: It strikes out all of those lines in the bill, and provides that even the President can not use these reserves except in case of war or of threatened war.

Mr. HUSTING. That is correct.

Mr. CUMMINS. I have but one other suggestion to make. I think the Senator from Georgia ought to strike out the words "engaged in" and insert "in the event of," or some equivalent of that phrase, because it would be quite difficult "to engage in threatened war."

Mr. HARDWICK. I will accept that modification. The suggestion made by the Senator from Wisconsin may make that change necessary; but I was not so much concerned about that, because this amendment, if it shall be adopted by the Senate, will have to go to conference, and I take it the conferees will rectify any little difficulty such as that.

Mr. HUSTING. I should like to state that I believe the amendment should read "in case of war or threatened war."

Mr. HARDWICK. If there is no objection, I will accept that modification.

Mr. HUSTING. I should like to have it so read.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. In the absence of objection, the amendment will be so modified. The question now is on the amendment offered by the Senator from Georgia as modified.

Mr. STERLING. Mr. President, I should like to inquire of the Senator from Georgia why there is employed the expression "or maintain peace and order under the Constitution and laws of the United States," instead of that used in the Constitution itself, "to execute the laws of the United States"?

Mr. HARDWICK. That quesion is not relevant now, because under the motion of the Senator from Wisconsin that part of the language has been stricken out of the amendment, and it provides that these reservists shall only be used in case of actual or threatened war.

Mr. WORKS. Mr. President, I observe that the amendment provides for furnishing a military instructor where the college or school authorities so request. Whom does the Senator regard as school authorities under the provisions of the amendment?

Mr. HARDWICK. That, of course, would be a matter of construction for the War Department—whatever authorities were really in charge of the school.

Mr. WORKS. There might be a conflict between the superintendent and the board of education. It would be better, it seems to me, to make it specific, if the Senator can do so.

Mr. HARDWICK. I thought we would make the language so general that the department could decide who actually was in charge of the school.

Mr. REED. Vote!

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on the amendment of the Senator from Georgia [Mr. HARDWICK], as modified.

Mr. HARDWICK. I ask for the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered, and the Secretary proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. BRADY (when his name was called). I am paired with the senior Senator from Florida [Mr. FLETCHER]. He is absent from the Chamber, and I therefore withhold my vote.

Mr. CHILTON (when his name was called). Making the same announcement as to my pair that I made on the former vote, I vote "yea."

Mr. SUTHERLAND. I again transfer my pair with the senior Senator from Arkansas [Mr. CLARKE] to the junior Senator from Rhode Island [Mr. COLT] and will vote. I vote "yea."

Mr. TILLMAN (when his name was called). Making the same announcement as on the last roll call, I vote "yea."

Mr. WILLIAMS (when his name was called). Repeating the explanation made on the previous roll call, I vote "yea."

The roll call was concluded.

Mr. CURTIS. I have been requested to announce the following pairs:

The Senator from New Mexico [Mr. CATRON] with the Senator from Oklahoma [Mr. OWEN]; and

The Senator from Michigan [Mr. TOWNSEND] with the Senator from Florida [Mr. BRYAN].

The result was announced—yeas 56, nays 24, as follows:

So Mr. HARDWICK's amendment, as modified, to the amendment of the committee was agreed to, as follows:

SEC. 57. The reserve army: The Secretary of War is authorized and directed to detail for service as instructor in military tactics one or more commissioned officers of the United States Army to every college or school in the United States where there are as many as 100 male students 15 years of age and over, in all cases where the authorities of such school or college make application for such detail and where the requisite number of students desire and consent, with the full consent of their parents or guardians, to receive such training and agree to become a part of the reserve forces of the United States. The term for which said students shall enlist in the reserve forces shall be for and during the term of their connection with school or college, including vacations, and shall in no case be for less than 12 months. Such students shall not be subject to active military service except in connection with their training, and except in connection with such mobilizations as may be had during school vacations, for which latter service they shall be paid at the same rate that officers and men of corresponding ranks and grades are paid in the Regular Army: Provided, That in case of war or threatened war, then the President of the United States is authorized to call into the active military service the whole or any part of such reserve forces: And provided further, That no person under 18 years of age shall be called into the active service under this section.

The Secretary of War is hereby authorized to prescribe all necessary rules and regulations of enlistment and discharge of members of the reserve force, and for its training and mobilization, and is also authorized to furnish such reserve forces arms and equipment similiar to those furnished to troops in the Regular Army, or such as may be best suited to the needs and requirements of such reserve forces.

Mr. REED. I offer the amendment which I send to the desk.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The amendment to the amendment will be stated.

The SECRETARY. On page 188, after section 107, it is proposed to insert:

That hereafter no enlisted man in the service of the United States in the Army, Navy, and Marine Corps, respectively, whether a noncommissioned officer, musician, or private, shall be detailed, ordered, or permitted to leave his post to engage in any pursuit, business, or performance in civil life, for emolument, hire, or otherwise, when the same shall interfere with the customary employment and regular engagement of local civilians in the respective arts, trades, or professions.

Mr. REED. Mr. President, I desire to briefly explain this amendment to the Senate. I think it will appeal to all of the Senators, or most of them.

For a long time it was the custom of the military bands of the United States, while in the pay of the Government, to accept employment for hire. They took this employment generally at a very low cost. It was manifestly an unfair thing to the musicians of the country that they should be required to pay taxes to support the Army and at the same time suffer from a ruinous competition by the very men who were in part living from the taxes so paid. The matter was called to the attention of Congress, and on two occasions an effort was made to rectify the wrong. The act was finally amended by adding this clause:

Provided, That Army bands, or members thereof, shall not receive remuneration for furnishing music outside the limits of military posts when the furnishing of such music places them in competition with local civilian musicians.

Mr. President, when that act was passed I took some little interest in it. It was understood by everybody that the clause quoted would put an end to the unfair competition. It was clearly understood that the musicians of the Army would not in the future be found usurping the places of civilian musicians. It was recognized, however, that there were remote places in the country, like certain posts in Alaska, where there was no civilian competition, and that at such places Army bands might properly be allowed to furnish free music, because no one would be injured under the circumstances. No one dreamed that under the language employed the Marine Band and the bands of the Army could be for weeks and months at a time detailed to furnish music at great expositions, and thus take away the employment of the civilian musicians. It was not conceived that the military bands would be taken for long periods of time from the duties they were employed to perform and set to furnishing free concerts, in direct violation of the spirit of the law. It transpired, however, that the question became very acute at the Panama Exposition. Military bands were employed, to the detriment of civilian musicians. A protest was duly made. The Adjutant General of the Army rendered an opinion construing the act. I read a part of his decision:

I am directed by the Secretary of War to acknowledge receipt of your letter of December 23, 1915, quoting a resolution adopted by the thirty-fifth annual convention of the American Federation of Labor, held at San Francisco, Cal., November 8 to 22, 1915, protesting against the use of the United States Army bands at the exposition at San Diego, Cal., and in response thereto to inform you that protests of a similar character have from time to time been received at the War Department from presidents or secretaries of various federations of labor and of musicians, etc., and after investigation the complainants were informed that their contention was not justified or sustained by the facts.

Leaving out of consideration several phases of the question which have received more or less discussion during the voluminous correspondence resulting from these complaints, your attention is invited to the following exact phraseology of the specific act of Congress which governs the case:

"Provided, That Army bands, or members thereof, shall not receive remuneration for furnishing music outside of the limits of military posts when the furnishing of such music places them in competition with local civilian musicians."

With the above statute in mind, the Judge Advocate General, on May 7, 1915, after a careful review of all the circumstances surrounding the case, expressed the opinion that the commanding general, Western Department, having specifically reported that "neither the Thirteenth Band, Coast Artillery Corps, nor any member thereof received any remuneration for playing at the Panama-California Exposition at San Diego," the statute in reference was not violated by the service rendered. On May 10 the Secretary of War approved the opinion of the Judge Advocate General, and his views in the premises have undergone no change since that date.

Mr. President, that decision, like many others, absolutely struck at the very purpose of the act of Congress itself. One of the unfortunate things we constantly have to confront is that when Congress passes a law having in view a plain and distinct object, some man who probably never saw the inside of a law book will proceed to construe that act so that it will mean something entirely different from what Congress intended. What Congress in this case sought to do was to prevent competition between the men who are hired and paid by the taxpayers of the country and the men who pay the taxes, between the men who receive regular salaries from the Government for furnishing service at Army posts and who should be found at the places they are paid to be at, and the civilian musician, or the ordinary citizen who is paying the taxes to support those identical Army musicians. The act was not intended to prevent competition when the Army bands were paid something for playing, but to permit competition when the Army bands played for nothing. It was intended to avoid the evil of competition between two classes of men, the one class supported solely by the Government and the other not so supported.

But along came the wise construer of laws and declared that although the manifest purpose of the law was to prevent competition between the two classes of men, yet if the Army bands play for nothing it is all right. In a word, competition by a band that worked just under the union scale was ruinous and illegal, but competition with a band that worked for nothing was entirely legal and highly commendable. This construction was, at least, highly technical, if not disingenuous and prejudicial. It plainly negatived the spirit and intent of the law. It resembled the efforts of a man who not wanting to travel the plain, straight road looks sharply for some excuse to take a crooked path.

I am submitting this amendment so couched as to avoid this decision.

It is asked for by organized labor throughout the country. It is only fair and just that the man who is engaged in a civil occupation, and paying taxes to help support other men who are living on salaries paid by the taxpayer, should not compete with the taxpayer whether or not the Government employee receives compensation for so competing.

Mr. SUTHERLAND. Mr. President——

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Missouri yield to the Senator from Utah?

Mr. REED. I do.

Mr. SUTHERLAND. I quite agree with what the Senator from Missouri is saying, and I am in entire sympathy with this amendment; but I ask the Senator whether he ought not to leave out, on lines 4 and 5, the words "to leave his post," so that it would read:

Shall be detailed, ordered, or permitted to engage in any pursuit?

With those words in, the gravamen of the act which the soldier is forbidden to do is to leave the post for this purpose.

Mr. REED. The reason the words were left in by those who prepared this amendment and handed it to me, as I understand, was that at some of the Army posts far removed from places of much population there is no objection to the bands being permitted to furnish a free concert if it wants to. The conditions are such that no local musicians can be injured. The laboring men who are petitioning Congress for this legislation are willing that those words should remain in.

Mr. SUTHERLAND. Mr. President, in my own time I desire to suggest to the Senator from Missouri that it seems to me the amendment would be stronger with those words left out. Of course, if he is satisfied with it, I am not going to move to strike out the words; but it seems to me that if we forbid an enlisted man from being detailed, ordered, or permitted to engage in any of these pursuits, that is a stronger provision than to say that he shall not be detailed, ordered, or permitted to leave his post for that purpose. If he is forbidden to engage in the pursuit, that includes everything that the Senator wants.

Mr. REED. I understand that the Senator is correct; it would be, in one sense, stronger; but I am informed by those who have studied the question closely that there are particular instances where it might result in some hardship to refuse them, at the post, the opportunity to play free.

Mr. SUTHERLAND. Very well.

Mr. CHAMBERLAIN. Mr. President, this amendment was never submitted to the committee as an amendment to the Army reorganization bill, and was only submitted as an amendment to the bill yesterday, I believe. It was, however, I believe, referred to the Military Affairs Committee as a Senate joint resolution, and no report has yet been made by the committee. It has never been considered by the committee as yet, either as a joint resolution or as an amendment to this bill, so I am not at liberty to speak for the committee itself.

I do want to say, however, that whatever view I might take of it as a Senate joint resolution, I feel that I ought to oppose it as an amendment to the Army reorganization bill. It seems to me that the legislation that was heretofore enacted by Congress, and to which the Senator has called attention, is sufficient, within the range of reasonable construction, to protect civilian musicians and to carry out the intention of the movers of this amendment without any further legislation. I feel that the amendment ought not to be added to this bill, Mr. President.

Mr. REED. Mr. President, I want to ask the Senator, if he will permit me, a question in his time. The Senator says that the law as it stands, if reasonably construed, would cover the case. I agree to that; but the law has been unreasonably construed, so that it does not cover the case, both by the Judge Advocate General and by the Secretary of War.

With that situation, why object to changing the phraseology so as to avoid that unreasonable decision, under which bands have been employed through the long, long summer to perform the very duties and do the very things that these civilian musicians would otherwise have been permitted to do?

Mr. CHAMBERLAIN. I think it is fair to assume, Mr. President, from the very fact that the Senator himself did not introduce this as an amendment to this bill, but introduced it as a separate and independent resolution, that he himself did not conceive or believe at that time that it was a part of any reorganization scheme of the Army, and I feel so yet. The fact is that we are loading the bill down with so many different provisions that really are not kindred to proper Army legislation that its own friends will not know it when it gets through here; and I feel the same way about this amendment. I do not think it ought to be added to this bill.

Mr. STONE. Mr. President, simply a word. I think I am correct in saying that the joint resolution was introduced before the Army bill was reported. It was sent to the committee in the form of a joint resolution, and the proposal might have been properly put on as an amendment to the bill, but that is, to my thinking, an utterly immaterial consideration.

Some years ago we enacted a provision of law covering this question. I think I introduced the bill myself. Since then, as my colleague has stated, the officials of the department have so construed that law as practically to nullify its purposes. It has not accomplished, under the construction placed upon it, the ends intended to be accomplished by its enactment.

Mr. WARREN. Mr. President, will the Senator tell me just what the department's construction is? I have understood that it had been complied with.

Mr. STONE. My colleague is more familiar with these details——

Mr. REED. I have just read it.

Mr. STONE. I will say to the Senator that I talked with one or two gentlemen—one of them the head of the organization of musicians, which is a part of the American Federation of Labor—and I am told that men who are connected with bands in the Army go out and perform services in a mechanical way—some of them are capable of that—working as artisans in the cities and towns where they are stationed, as well as to dispense music as a band. Now, there is, it strikes me, a very just objection to that policy. These people are the employees of the Government. They are a part of the Army of the Government. They are drawing salaries from the Government, and they ought not to be allowed to compete in any industrial pursuit out of which men make a livelihood.

That is all I care to say. I hope the amendment will be agreed to.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is on the amendment of the Senator from Missouri [Mr. REED] to the amendment of the committee.

The amendment to the amendment was agreed to.

Mr. THOMAS. I offer the amendment which I send to the desk.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The amendment to the amendment will be stated.

The SECRETARY. After section 119, it is proposed to insert the following:

SEC. —. That it shall be unlawful for any person not an officer or enlisted man of the United States Army, Navy, or Marine Corps, to wear the duly prescribed uniform of the United States Army, Navy, or Marine Corps, or any distinctive part of such uniform, or a uniform any part of which is similar to a distinctive part of the duly prescribed uniform of the United States Army, Navy, or Marine Corps: Provided, That the foregoing provision shall not be construed so as to prevent officers or enlisted men of the National Guard from wearing, in pursuance of law and regulations, the uniform lawfully prescribed to be worn by such officers or enlisted men of the National Guard; nor to prevent persons who in time of war have served honorably as officers of the United States Army, Navy, or Marine Corps, Regular or Volunteer, and whose most recent service was terminated by an honorable discharge, muster out, or resignation, from wearing, upon occasions of ceremony, the uniform of the highest grade they have held by brevet or other commission in such Regular or Volunteer service; nor to prevent any person who has been honorably discharged from the United States Army, Navy, or Marine Corps, Regular or Volunteer, from wearing his uniform from the place of his discharge to his home, within three months after the date of such discharge; nor to prevent the members of military societies composed entirely of honorably discharged officers or enlisted men, or both, of the United States Army, Navy, or Marine Corps, Regular or Volunteer, from wearing, upon occasions of ceremony, the uniform duly prescribed by such societies to be worn by the members thereof; nor to prevent the instructors and members of the duly organized cadet corps of a State university, State college, or public high school offering a regular course in military instruction from wearing the uniform duly prescribed by the authorities of such university, college, or public high school for wear by the instructors and members of such cadet corps; nor to prevent the instructors and members of the duly organized cadet corps of any other institution of learning offering a regular course in military instruction, and at which an officer or enlisted man of the United States Army, Navy, or Marine Corps is lawfully detailed for duty as instructor in military science and tactics, from wearing the uniform duly prescribed by the authorities of such institution of learning for wear by the instructors and members of such cadet corps; nor to prevent civilians attendant upon a course of military or naval instruction authorized and conducted by the military or naval authorities of the United States from wearing, while in attendance upon such course of instruction, the uniform authorized and prescribed by such military or naval authorities for wear during such course of instruction; nor to prevent any person from wearing the uniform of the United States Army, Navy, or Marine Corps in any playhouse or theater or in moving-picture films while actually engaged in representing therein a military or naval character not tending to bring discredit or reproach upon the United States Army, Navy, or Marine Corps: Provided further, That the uniforms worn by officers or enlisted men of the National Guard, or by the members of the military societies or the instructors and members of the cadet corps referred to in the preceding proviso shall include some distinctive mark or insignia to be prescribed by the Secretary of War to distinguish such uniforms from the uniforms of the United States Army, Navy, and Marine Corps: And provided further, That the members of the military societies and the instructors and members of the cadet corps hereinbefore mentioned shall not wear the insignia of rank prescribed to be worn by officers of the United States Army, Navy, or Marine Corps, or any insignia of rank similar thereto.

SEC. 2. That it shall be unlawful for any common carrier, or the manager or any agent or employee of any common carrier, or the proprietor, lessee, manager, or any agent or employee of any inn, hotel, restaurant, theater, or other public place of entertainment or amusement to forbid or refuse transportation, admission, accommodations, or service to, or in any other manner make or cause to be made any discrimination against any officer or enlisted man who is sober and who is willing to pay the price charged civilians for like service and who belongs to the United States Army, Navy, Marine Corps, or National Guard, because he belongs to the United States Army, Navy, Marine Corps, or National Guard, or because he wears the duly prescribed uniform of his grade in the United States Army, Navy, Marine Corps, or National Guard.

SEC. 3. That any person who offends against the provision of this act shall be fined not less than $100 nor more than $300, or imprisonment not less than three months nor more than six months, or both.

Mr. THOMAS. Mr. President, the amendment which I have offered is somewhat involved in its phraseology, due to the fact that it is necessary to provide exceptions or exemptions from the general rule which the amendment embraces.

Speaking generally, Mr. President, this amendment is designed to protect the dignity of the uniform of the United States soldier. Thus far in our consideration of the bill we have provided for many contingencies and interests with which the common soldier has no concern.

Mr. DU PONT. Mr. President, I suggest the absence of a quorum.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Secretary will call the roll.

The Secretary called the roll, and the following Senators answered to their names:

Bankhead	Hitchcock	Nelson	Smith, Ga.
Beckham	Hollis	Newlands	Smith, S. C.
Brady	James	Norris	Smoot
Brandegee	Johnson, Me.	O'Gorman	Swanson
Burleigh	Jones	Oliver	Taggart
Chamberlain	Kenyon	Overman	Thomas
Chilton	Kern	Page	Thompson
Clapp	Lane	Phelan	Underwood
Culberson	Lee, Md.	Pittman	Vardaman
Cummins	Lodge	Robinson	Warren
Curtis	McCumber	Shafroth	Williams
Dillingham	Martin, Va.	Sheppard
du Pont	Martine, N. J.	Sherman
Harding	Myers	Simmons

The VICE PRESIDENT. Fifty-three Senators have answered to the roll call. A quorum is present.

Mr. THOMAS. Mr. President, I will repeat, for the information of Senators who were not present when this amendment was offered, that it is designed to protect the dignity of the American uniform and to punish discrimination against it. The only national statute which we have upon the subject was enacted in 1911. It is very short, and I will therefore read it into the RECORD. It is as follows:

CHAP. 187.—An act to protect the dignity and honor of the uniform of the United States.

Be it enacted, etc., That hereafter no proprietor, manager, or employee of a theater or other public place of entertainment or amusement in the District of Columbia, or in any Territory, the District of Alaska, or insular possession of the United States, shall make, or cause to be made, any discrimination against any person lawfully wearing the uniform of the Army, Navy, Revenue-Cutter Service or Marine Corps of the United States because of that uniform, and any person making, or causing to be made, such discrimination shall be guilty of a misdemeanor, punishable by a fine not exceeding $500.

Approved March 1, 1911.

It will be observed that the statute which I have just read applies only to the District of Columbia and to the Territories and insular possessions of the United States. It is not available for the purpose which it is designed to subserve anywhere else. I think, Mr. President, the absence of any statute upon this subject doubtless suggested to the framers of the Baltimore platform the following resolution, which was crystallized into that document, and I may say before reading it that it is the only expression that I have been able to find in the platforms of the national parties upon this subject:

PROTECTION OF NATIONAL UNIFORM.

We commend to the several States the adoption of a law making it an offense for the proprietors of places of public amusement and entertainment to discriminate against the uniform of the United States, similar to the law passed by the Congress applicable to the District of Columbia and the Territories in 1911.

I am not able to inform the Senate whether any of the States of the Union in conformity with that suggestion have taken any appropriate action. But, Mr. President, it is a fact, a lamentable fact, that the American uniform in many places in the country instead of being a symbol of dignity and respect is a badge of degradation, that the soldier who wears it, and because he wears it, is denied those accommodations and entertainments which are available to all other citizens. I am unable to preceive, Mr. President, how we can attract the self-respecting young men of this country to our Army when the uniform which they are required to wear does not give them immunity from discrimination in social and in some business affairs.

Mr. President, we have done much in this bill for officers, and particularly for the National Guard. We have provided rank for virtually all the civilian employees and connections of the Army with the exception of chauffeurs and ambulance drivers and men of the ranks. I think it is high time to do something for the private soldier who is the mainstay of the Nation in times of stress, and without whose existence armies are impossible even to the imagination.

We have an Army to-day, a gallant Army, in Mexico at the order of the Commander in Chief and doing service to their country. Should they return to-morrow after their service, with their honors fresh upon them, they might be confronted with a situation denying to them without redress the ordinary entertainments, and service which all others may command as a matter of course.

Such a situation, Mr. President, is intolerable in theory and more than intolerable in fact. We can not expect to recruit the ranks of this Nation unless we relieve the service of such conditions.

Mr. President, the very fact that a national law is needed for the protection of the uniform in the Territories is to my mind an eloquent testimonial in behalf of this proposed legislation. It must be presumed that the act to which I called attention was passed because of a necessity for its passage, and if it be desirable that the uniform of an American soldier be protected in the Territories and insular possessions of the United States a fortiori it is essential that the same protection should be given in the States of the Union.

I wish to call attention to the significant fact that until recently the complement of soldiers provided by existing law was difficult to maintain; also to the fact, Mr. President, that although a few days ago both Houses without debate and by a unanimous vote provided for the temporary increase of the present Army by 20,000 men, yet I am told that less than 20 per cent of that number have so far enlisted or volunteered. Why? Mr. President, there are many reasons of which this is one. I have not the time to advert to others, but I verily believe that the public estimation and the ordinary treatment of the American uniform has as much to do with it as anything else.

What mother of this country, patriotic as she may be and desirous that her boys shall serve their country, desires to see her son in the garb of a private soldier when it tends to degrade instead of elevating him? What mother would care, irrespective of the individual, to subject her son to an indignity which seems at present inseparable from the highest service that a man can give to his country?

Mr. President, it is said in these days that the song "I did not raise my boy to be a soldier" is both unpatriotic and unpopular, and to that I agree. But every mother in the country, in view of the conditions which this amendment is desired to relieve, will feel in her heart if she does voice her thoughts in song, that "I did not raise my boy to be a private."

Officers, perhaps, do not need this protection. The officer's uniform is itself an entree into the commercial and social world; but the soldier, who because of the discrimination which is a reflection upon his patriotism, does need it. He should receive at the sustaining hands of the American Congress this appropriate recognition of his rights as a citizen as well as a soldier.

I hope the amendment will be adopted unanimously.

Mr. BRADY. Before the Senator takes his seat, I should like to ask him a question in my time.

I am very heartily in sympathy with the Senator's amendment and shall vote for its adoption, but I feel that he should change the language in line 18, on page 4, because as it now reads it might be taken as a reflection upon the soldier, and I know quite well that the Senator does not wish to do that. He would not say "a minister who was sober" or "a lawyer who was sober." I would suggest to strike out the word "sober," in line 18, and before "civilian," in line 19, insert the words "and under like conditions as." I feel quite sure the Senator will agree to the change and it will improve the amendment very much.

Mr. THOMAS. The Senator's suggestion, I understand, is to strike out the words "is sober" and then to insert "and under like conditions as."

Mr. BRADY. That will have practically the same meaning and could not be intended in any manner as a reflection upon the soldier.

Mr. THOMAS. I am obliged to the Senator for his suggestion and very willingly accept his proposed amendment, which strikes out the first four words on line 18, page 4, and inserts, before the word "civilian," in the next line, the words "and under like conditions as."

Mr. President, while I am on my feet I would suggest another amendment. I would ask for another slight amendment which was suggested to me by the Senator from Wyoming. On page 5, strike out the words "not less than a hundred nor more than" and insert the words "in a sum of not exceeding," and after the word "both," line 14, the words "fine and imprisonment," so that it will read "that any person who offends against the provisions of this act shall be fined in a sum not exceeding $300 or imprisonment not less than three months nor more than six months or both fine and imprisonment."

Mr. SHAFROTH. I should like to suggest to the Senator from Colorado that there ought to be stricken out of that provision the minimum amount of imprisonment. Any person who has had experience as a district attorney or as prosecuting attorney has found the great difficulty of convicting people where there is bound to be imprisonment of any considerable length of time.

Mr. THOMAS. The Senator's suggestion, then, is to make it read "not exceeding six months"?

Mr. SHAFROTH. "Not exceeding six months."

Mr. THOMAS. I accept the amendment.

Mr. WARREN. That was my suggestion—to use the maximum in both cases, not the minimum in either one.

Mr. SHAFROTH. You will find it will produce a great many more convictions and less escapes for violations of law than otherwise.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is on the amendment of the Senator from Colorado to the amendment.

The amendment to the amendment was agreed to.

Mr. WARREN. I offer the following amendment.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The amendment to the amendment will be stated.

The SECRETARY. On page 166, in line 6, after the word "prescribed," insert the following:

And each adjutant general for a Territory shall be a citizen of the Territory for which he is appointed.

The amendment to the amendment was agreed to.

Mr. CUMMINS. I offer the following amendment.

The VICE PRESIDENT. It will be read.

The SECRETARY. On page 139, in line 8, strike out "twenty-five" and insert "twenty."

Mr. CUMMINS. The bill provides that the captains and lieutenants of the Philippine Scouts who are citizens of the United States shall be entitled to retirement under the laws governing the retirement of the enlisted men of the Regular Army, with certain exceptions. The proviso of the section is:

Provided, That double time for service beyond the continental limits of the United States shall not be counted for the purposes of this section so as to reduce the actual period of service below 25 years.

My amendment substitutes 20 years for 25. It is well known that the officers of the Regular Army who are required to serve in the Philippines and beyond the continental limits of the United States are allowed double time for that service. I have never been in the Philippines, but I know something about the conditions under which we labor there, and it seems to me when a citizen of the United States has served there for 20 years actually as an officer of the scouts he ought to be permitted to retire with the pay of an enlisted man.

I hope there will be no opposition to this amendment.

Mr. CHAMBERLAIN. Mr. President, I will say to the Senator that personally I have not any particular objection to the amendment. The committee in dealing with the subject felt that if they accepted 20 years instead of 25 years, a man who entered the Army at 18 would get out when he was about 38. So you see the Government would not get very much equivalent for the money it will be bound to pay him on retirement.

Mr. CUMMINS. An officer of the Regular Army serving in the Philippines would ordinarily get out in 20 years.

Mr. CHAMBERLAIN. I am not going to seriously contend against it, but I want to say to the Senator I think we are not getting an equivalent for retirement for life if a man is permitted to retire when he is 38 or 40 years old. That is the only objection I have to it.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is on agreeing to the amendment to the amendment.

The amendment to the amendment was agreed to.

Mr. CUMMINS. I have one other amendment to offer.

The VICE PRESIDENT. It will be read.

The SECRETARY. Amend section 13, page 119, line 17, by striking out the word "six" and inserting the word "eight" before the word "colonel," so as to read "six colonels"; also, strike out the word "four," in line 18, and insert the word

"five"; also, strike out the word "thirty-three," in line 18, and insert "forty"; and also amend by striking out the word "thirty-three," in line 19, and inserting the word "forty."

Mr. CUMMINS. Mr. President, I desire that all Senators who are here shall observe that this does not relate to the National Guard, and I want it to be known also that no officer either of the Regular Army or the National Guard has consulted with me with respect to the amendment. The amendment is based upon the testimony before the Military Committee given by Gen. Crozier, the Chief of the Ordnance Department.

I think I ought to say here, because I believe I have been somewhat misunderstood, that no one values the work of the Military Committee more than I do. No one will be more willing to render to the committee a higher appreciation of the character of the work that it has performed in composing the bill. I desire it, however, to be known that, in so far as I have been advised, the provisions with regard to the Ordnance Department of the bill of the Senate committee present the only instance in which the Senate committee has not done as well for the Army as the House has done.

The amendment I have offered brings the number of officers of the Ordnance Department to the standard that has been fixed by the House. At the present time there are 85 officers in that department. The Senate committee bill increases the number to 110. The House fixed the number at 122. The amendment suggested, if applied to the Senate committee bill and adopted, will raise the number of officers of the Ordnance Department to 122.

We are increasing the Regular Army 100 per cent in round numbers at the present time. We have increased the number of officers of the Regular Army more than 100 per cent. The Senate committee bill, however, increases the number of officers in the Ordnance Department only about 30 per cent.

I understand perfectly how difficult it has been to adjust these matters, but I could not allow what I believed to be a discrimination against the most important department in the Army to pass unnoticed. Gen. Crozier says, in his testimony before the Senate committee, that in order to conduct his department in the way it should be conducted he ought to have 172 officers—either 172 or 177, I have forgotten which.

If we increase the number provided for in the Senate bill so that the chief of the department will be given 122 officers, it would seem to be only fair and reasonable.

We have been much concerned about the enlistment of men and the increase of the personnel of the Army; but, after all, Mr. President, an army is of no avail unless it has something with which to fight. We can not at the present time equip enough men and officers to conduct a great war. We are capable of making the implements of war and the equipment that goes with every organization and of holding these instruments of war and the equipment for any emergency which may arise, and it is a part of the commonest good sense for the United States to proceed with just as much rapidity as possible in the way of accumulating the arms and the equipment that will be needed for our soldiers if they are ever called into action.

An officer of the Ordnance Department is in many respects a manufacturer; and he needs to be a man of the very highest intelligence; he needs to be a man of the greatest skill. I am in favor, as all of you know, of the Government, in so far as it is possible, making its own arms and its own munitions of war. I observed in the testimony of Gen. Crozier a reference to one Government property situated in the West that is used for the purpose of making guns and gun carriages and other things that are used in the equipment of soldiers. The Government has there 800 acres of land, or something like that, lying alongside the Mississippi River; as beautiful a spot as the sun ever shone upon. It has there practically unlimited water power, so that the work done can be accomplished with the least possible expense; it has there a number of buildings that are at the present time unoccupied, standing there as monuments, as I have been accustomed to look at it, to the indifference of Congress in equipping one of its great plants to render the service it was intended to render. It is one of the things that I mention with great pride, that the work done at the Rock Island Arsenal—and Rock Island is not in the State of Iowa; I am not selfish about it, although it is proximate to Iowa—but it is a thing that I always mention with exceeding gratification, that the work done at the Rock Island Arsenal costs the Government less for everything turned out of the factory than the Government has been able to buy similar articles for in any market in the country.

In order that these manufacturing plants of the Government shall be properly managed, in order that they shall be expanded to full capacity—the capacity that I think they ought to attain—there must be more officers of skill, training, and experience appointed for the department; and it does seem to me that when we are providing for an increase in the officers of the Army of more than 100 per cent—we are just adding more than 5,000 officers to the Army, and I am not questioning the propriety of that; I agree with the committee respecting that—we ought to add to the Department of Ordnance at least the number provided for in the House bill.

I repeat, if the amendment I have offered is adopted, it will simply conform the present bill to the House bill in that respect.

Mr. CHAMBERLAIN. Mr. President, I feel that I ought to oppose this amendment. It proposes to materially increase the number of officers in the Ordnance Department and the number in each grade. It proposes to increase the total number of officers in that department to 126. The Senate bill has already increased the number from 85 to 109—an increase of 24 as against 41 asked for by the Senator's amendment.

There may be some question about the necessity of increasing the total number of officers, but the committee, after studying the matter carefully, thought it had already made a sufficient increase in the whole number of officers. Even if the Senate thinks differently and believes that the total number should be still further increased, yet there is no reason for making the large increase suggested in the amendment proposed by the Senator from Iowa in the higher grades. The amendment would add to the expense, but it would not materially add to the efficiency.

The committee did not increase the number of colonels, because there seemed to be no place to use such officers. The only reason for the increase would be to give increased promotions. The adoption of this amendment would simply increase the cost of the Army as provided for in the bill without increasing the efficiency of the service. I call the attention of the Senator to line 17 of the bill where the committee provided for 6 colonels; the Senator's amendment proposes 8. Under the law as it is to-day there are 9 lieutenant colonels. We increased that number to 12. Under the law as it is at present there are 19 majors. We increased the number to 24. Now, the Senator from Iowa asks to increase it 5 more. The law as it is to-day provides for 25 captains; we increased that number to 33; and the Senator's amendment proposes to raise it to 40.

In the matter of first lieutenants, the law as it is at present provides for 25; we increased the number to 33 first lieutenants; and the Senator from Iowa proposes to raise the number to 40.

Mr. President, this looks like a promotion scheme. I do not mean to charge the Senator from Iowa with being a party to such a scheme as that; but that would be the effect of it, just the same. It increases the expenditure by very largely increasing the number of officers, and those officers in the higher grade.

Mr. CUMMINS. Mr. President, is it not true that if the amendment I have offered should be adopted, the number of officers in the Ordnance Department would be precisely as provided in the House bill?

Mr. CHAMBERLAIN. Well, probably that is true; but I think the House gives too much.

Mr. CUMMINS. Is it not true that Gen. Crozier believes, and that he so stated when he was before the committee, that the proper conduct of his department required 172 officers?

Mr. CHAMBERLAIN. Oh, Mr. President, I have great confidence in Gen. Crozier; he is a very distinguished and a very able officer; but they all want such increases; they all think they have not got enough. We have held them down somewhat.

Mr. CUMMINS. Is it not true that you have increased the officers of the Ordnance Department less than you have increased those of any other department of the Army?

Mr. CHAMBERLAIN. I hardly think so. We have increased the number from 85 to 109.

Mr. CUMMINS. Yes; but you have increased the officers of the Army, taken as a whole, from 5,000 to more than 10,000.

Mr. CHAMBERLAIN. Not the staff departments, I will say to the Senator.

Mr. President, if the Senator will stick to this bill with reference to this provision—and the House provision is very much above it—in conference we may have an opportunity to arrive at a happy mean; but I think we have given enough.

Mr. LEE of Maryland. Mr. President, I should like to ask the chairman of the committee if the Ordnance Corps of the Army is not a highly skilled and a highly expert corps; and whether or not it would not be good policy to give more of them advances of rank and pay, in order to hold them in the Government service, so that the Government may get the full benefit of the great development in ordnance that must take place for the proper defense of this country, and to get the benefit of these highly trained men continuing in Army service rather than have them go off to private manufacturing concerns or other walks of private life?

Mr. CHAMBERLAIN. Mr. President, there is no question about this being a highly technical department, and that the men connected with it are very distinguished men. I concede that; and I concede its importance; but we feel that we have given them all the officers that they ought to have.

Now, I want the Senate to remember that in the discussion of all these staff departments we have had to try to hammer them down. Most of them are asking for large increases, and we have given them increases in proportion to other Army increases.

Mr. SHAFROTH. Will the Senator from Oregon state what is the increase which the bill he has in charge makes on this particular line?

Mr. CHAMBERLAIN. We have increased the number of officers, as I said awhile ago, from 85 to 109, and we have increased the number 24 as against 41, the number which the amendment of the Senator from Iowa proposes.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is on the amendment proposed by the Senator from Iowa.

The amendment was rejected.

Mr. NELSON. Mr. President, I offer the amendment which I send to the desk to be added at the end of section 29.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The amendment proposed by the Senator from Minnesota will be stated.

The SECRETARY. It is proposed to add at the end of section 29 the following:

Any noncommissioned officer discharged with an excellent character shall be permitted to reenlist in the organization from which discharged with the rank and grade held by him at the time of his discharge if he reenlists within 20 days after the date of such discharge.

Mr. NELSON. Mr. President, the purpose of that amendment is to correct a practice which has existed for years. We have in the Army noncommissioned officers, consisting of corporals and sergeants of various classes and sergeants major. Under the law and practice which have heretofore prevailed, when one of these noncommissioned officers is discharged from the service at the expiration of his term and desires to reenlist, he has to reenlist as a private. Then, it is dependent upon the colonel and the other officers of his regiment whether or not they will give him back his old place. The purpose of this amendment is to allow a noncommissioned officer, with an excellent record, if he be discharged from the service and reenlists within 20 days, to reenlist with the rank and position which he had at the time of his discharge. I think it is a matter of justice and fairness to the enlisted men.

Mr. CHAMBERLAIN. I am willing to accept the amendment proposed by the Senator from Minnesota.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is on the amendment proposed by the Senator from Minnesota.

Mr. DU PONT. I understood that the chairman of the Military Committee had accepted the amendment.

Mr. CHAMBERLAIN. I am perfectly willing to accept the amendment, so far as I am concerned.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is on the amendment proposed by the Senator from Minnesota.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. HITCHCOCK. Mr. President, I offer the amendment which I send to the desk.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The amendment proposed by the Senator from Nebraska will be stated.

The SECRETARY. On page 142, after the two amendments which have already been inserted at that point, it is proposed to insert the following:

Provided, however, That after the passage of this act, first, second, and third reenlistments shall not be permitted until the number of reenlisted men in the Army shall be reduced to 10 per cent of the enlisted strength of the Army, and thereafter the number of reenlisted men in the Army shall be limited to 10 per cent of the enlisted strength of the Army authorized by law; but this limitation shall apply only to times of peace and not to war or national emergency.

Mr. HITCHCOCK. Mr. President, the object of this amendment is this: We are endeavoring to provide that after men have served a short enlistment in the Army they shall go into a reserve. If they are permitted to reenlist, we shall have no reserve. Some reenlistment is desirable, but at the present time more than half of our Army consists of reenlisted men. The object of this amendment is to make a gradual reduction in the number of men permitted to reenlist until the number of reenlisted men amounts to only 10 per cent of the enlisted strength. Ten per cent will furnish enough men of experience to constitute the noncommissioned officers. If we do not limit the number to 10 per cent, the men will be induced by the extra pay to keep on reenlisting, and we will have, as we have had heretofore, an Army of hirelings, a paid Army, and we will not be recruiting a reserve back of the Army of men who have had a short service.

I should like to have the chairman of the committee accept this amendment, if possible. I have so drawn it as not to interfere with the men who have already enlisted and reenlisted three times and who are approaching the period when they may be retired and secure the benefit of retirement. I have made it apply only to those men who may desire to reenlist for the first or second or third time. I ask the chairman of the committee whether it will be possible for him to accept this amendment with these limitations?

Mr. DU PONT. Mr. President——

Mr. HITCHCOCK. I am not yielding the floor yet, Mr. President.

Mr. CHAMBERLAIN. I will ask the Senator from Delaware if he desires to address himself to this matter?

Mr. DU PONT. I desire to take the floor after the Senator from Nebraska concludes.

Mr. HITCHCOCK. If the Senator from Oregon desires to wait until I have finished, perhaps I had better go on.

It is a matter of great importance that we should have a reserve. We have been struggling in this bill in a number of different ways to provide a reserve. We have attempted to provide it under section 56, creating a volunteer army; we have attempted to do so under the amendment offered by the Senator from Georgia [Mr. HARDWICK], providing for the training of young men in the schools, and we have also provided for reserves, as far as we could, by increasing the size of the volunteer army, but we are counting by this bill on providing an immediate reserve by having men pass from the Regular Army into the reserve army, and we should not, in my opinion, permit them to keep on enlisting and reenlisting indefinitely instead of going back into the reserve, where they will be available. Our Army should be to some extent a school of discipline, a school for providing a reserve. I hope the chairman of the committee will be able to accept the amendment.

Mr. CHAMBERLAIN. Mr. President, there has been a good deal of controversy about this matter of reenlistment. It is the universal experience of men in the Army that the best men they have, the real training force of the Army, are the reenlisted men. The committee went into the matter quite extensively, and I think the majority of the committee were of the opinion that no more moderate terms ought to be granted with reference to reenlistments than are granted in the bill itself. Knowing how the committee feels about it, or at least how a majority of the committee feels regarding it, I do not consider that I can accept the amendment.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is on the amendment proposed by the Senator from Nebraska.

Mr. DU PONT. Mr. President, the question of reenlistment is one with which I am very familiar. In the past I commanded a battery for 12 years under all conditions—in permanent fortifications, in encampments, on the march, in campaign, and in battle. I think I know a good deal about the reenlisted men, or, as they are commonly known in the Army, the "old soldiers."

In the first place, the very fact of their being reenlisted is proof of good character, because if they were worthless or inefficient they would not be accepted for the service. In the next place, they are invaluable to leaven the mass of new recruits, to teach them the thousand and one details of the military profession, and in battle their calm courage and equanimity is a most efficient antidote to any undue nervousness on the part of those who are receiving what the newspapers call their "baptism of fire."

Mr. President, the question may be asked why do these soldiers reenlist? Certainly they do not reenlist for any sordid or mercenary motive, inasmuch as they receive from the Government a less compensation than they would receive in the ordinary avocations of private life. Their motives in reenlisting are largely tempermental. There are a certain number of them who like the change and excitement which is part and parcel of a soldier's life, and there are a few who have the military "bent" to such a degree that they are never happy unless when within sound of the bugle call or participating in the ordinary routine of the camp or garrison.

The argument of the Senator from Nebraska might have some force if we had a system of universal compulsory service whereby the ranks of the Army could always be kept full, but it is well known that it is difficult at times to secure enough men for the Regular Army, and the effect of the amendment would be simply to drive the best and most efficient men out of the Regular Army service and getting nobody in their place. The result would be that they would pass into the reserve for three years, but would never return afterwards to the Army, as they would reenlist in the Marine Corps or in the Navy. We will simply by this amendment expel from the Army some fifteen or twenty thousand of its most desirable and useful soldiers.

Mr. President, I have been very sorry to hear the term "hirelings" applied to the patriotic American citizens who serve two or three or more enlistments in the Regular Army as is their right. I think that is an unfortunate expression, to say the least. Let us see what the dictionary defines a hireling to be. Webster defines a "hireling" as follows:

Hireling: "One who is hired, or who serves for wages; especially, one whose motive and interest in serving another are wholly gainful; a mercenary."

A "mercenary" is defined as follows:

Mercenary: One who is hired; a hireling; especially, a soldier hired into foreign service.

Funk & Wagnall's new Standard Dictionary defines the terms "hireling" and "mercenary" as follows:

Hireling: A person serving for hire; a mercenary.
Mercenary: A person working or serving only or chiefly for pay; specifically, a hired soldier in foreign service.

While it seems to me, Mr. President, that the term "hireling" is a derogatory expression, whether so intended or not, happily it can not alter the real status of the American citizens who have seen fit to reenlist in the Regular Army, as is their right, nor affect their true position before God, man, and our country, which they so faithfully and fearlessly serve.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The time of the Senator from Delaware has expired.

Mr. WARREN. Mr. President, I entirely agree with the motive and the ambition of the Senator from Nebraska [Mr. HITCHCOCK] so far as building up a large reserve army is concerned, but I think we ought in the meantime to maintain a proper balance. At the present time it does not look as if we could under that kind of an amendment secure the enlistments which are desired. I should be very glad to join the Senator at a later time in a bill that will provide exactly what he asks for, if in the meantime, under this legislation which we hope to pass, it shall appear that too large a number desire to reenlist; but it must be remembered that some thirty-odd days ago, at a time of considerable excitement, we passed without much debate or comment a law to increase the Army immediately by 20,000 men. Telegrams went out from headquarters to all the recruiting stations, new recruiting stations were opened, and the matter has gone vigorously forward ever since. In the meantime we have had disturbances in a near-by republic which have called the attention of all of our citizens to a state of affairs requiring an enlarged Army; patriotism has prevailed in the minds of all, and yet we find this result: In 21 days 11,849 men applied for enlistment and 2,879 only were accepted. After 30 days' trial 16,817 applications for enlistment had been made, but only 3,927 recruits were accepted. At that rate we are likely to be a long time in securing the number that we want. A little over 20 per cent of those who applied, men who were sound physically, men who are morally of such standard that they may be at the end of their enlistments entitled to an honorable discharge, were accepted for the service.

In my judgment, we need all that we can get in the way of enlistment for some little time yet, or, at least, until such time as we have filled up the Army to the strength proposed by this bill. Hence I say to the Senator from Nebraska that while his intention is one for which we must all have sympathy, namely, the building up of a reserve, I wish that he would wait until we see whether it is necessary to put a brake on the wheels as we start, instead of waiting until we are sure of obtaining sufficient speed or motion in the progress we desire.

Mr. NORRIS. Mr. President, as I understand this amendment, it is a very important one, and has for its principal, if not its only object, the increasing of the reserve.

One of the few good things in this bill, as I look at it, is that it provides for a short enlistment and rather a large reserve. I am opposed to a large standing army. If we have a short, active enlistment period, and then permit the enlisted man to retire and become a member of the reserve, we will not have a large standing army, but we will have such a reserve of trained soldiers that in case of war we could, on very short notice, secure a large and efficient army.

Mr. DU PONT. Mr. President——

Mr. NORRIS. I will not yield to the Senator; I only have five minutes.

The effect of this amendment is to prevent reenlistments in certain cases. If we desire a large reserve, but permit a soldier to reenlist from time to time, we prevent the very thing that we are trying to accomplish. If we vote against this amendment, we vote to increase the standing army and decrease the reserve consisting of trained soldiers.

I do not believe the figures given by the Senator from Wyoming [Mr. WARREN] constitute any objection to this amendment. They show the recruiting of men at quite a rapid rate, and it does not follow because we can not recruit 20,000 in 30 days that we can not get all the men we would need in time of peace in a long period. There is not any particular reason why we should have a large standing army, and the figures which the Senator has given only demonstrate that there is not any idea among the citizenship of the country that there is any emergency existing. To a great extent I think the theory of a portion of this bill at least was, without increasing to an alarming extent the actual standing army at the same time by retiring the private soldier and putting him in the reserve to increase the fighting force of the country, to increase the trained men that we could call upon in time of emergency. That is the kind of an army, it seems to me, that we ought to have.

In time of peace we have no particular use for a standing army, and it seems to me as if the standing army could be used rather as a training school. If I had my way, I would make the enlistment still shorter than it is and provide for retirement at an earlier age, and send the men back into civil life to engage in the various pursuits of civil life. But after they had served in the Army for the length of time that it is necessary for them to serve, they would become trained soldiers. They would have all the military knowledge that would be necessary, which, of course, they would retain while they were in civil life, and in case of an emergency or danger, when we did need a large Army, it would be these men who would fill up the ranks. So that, if we prevent the adoption of this amendment, we are doing something here, as I look at it, that will bring about just the opposite effect of what it is conceded that we all want.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is on the amendment of the Senator from Nebraska to the amendment of the committee. [Putting the question.] The Chair is in doubt. All in favor of the amendment will rise. [A pause.] Those opposed will rise. [A pause.] The amendment to the amendment is rejected.

Mr. NELSON. Mr. President, I offer the amendment which I send to the desk, to come in at the end of section 33.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The amendment to the amendment will be stated.

The SECRETARY. At the bottom of page 145 it is proposed to strike out the period at the end of the section and to insert the following words:

Upon the condition that they report their whereabouts by registered letter to the Secretary of War at the beginning of every month while in the reserve.

Mr. NELSON. Mr. President, the object of the amendment is this: We propose to pay these men in the Regular Army who go into the reserve the sum of $24 a year. I agree to that. That is a fair and just provision; but while they are in the reserve and we are paying them, the War Department ought to be posted as to their whereabouts. My amendment simply provides that as a condition of receiving $24 a year they shall report to the War Department every month their whereabouts.

I think it is a very important amendment. It may be a little crude in its form, but the idea is there, and I trust the conferees will retain it in the bill. It prescribes as a condition of getting the $24 a year that they must report every month to the War Department their whereabouts.

Mr. CHAMBERLAIN. Mr. President, so far as I am concerned, I have no objection to the amendment.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is on agreeing to the amendment of the Senator from Minnesota to the amendment of the committee.

The amendment to the amendment was agreed to.

Mr. DU PONT. Mr. President, I offer the amendment which I send to the desk, to come in at the end of section 23, page 134, line 21.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The amendment to the amendment will be stated.

The SECRETARY. It is proposed to add, at the end of section 23, the following:

Provided further, That on and after July 1, 1916, there shall be a second Porto Rico regiment of infantry of the United States Army, and to said regiment all the provisions of this act relative to the existing Porto Rico regiment of infantry shall apply, so far as such provisions are applicable to the new regiment.

Mr. DU PONT. Mr. President, I am induced to offer this amendment for the reason that in the minds of a great people, and among them many of the experts, such as The Adjutant General, it will be difficult, if not impossible, to recruit the Regular Army up to the increased number authorized by this bill. There is no such difficulty in the Island of Porto Rico, where there are a million and a quarter of inhabitants and where several additional regiments could be raised with the greatest ease.

As the Porto Rican regiment is a very useful organization as it stands to-day, it appears to me that a second Porto Rican regiment could be utilized for duty in the Canal Zone, to take turns with the other, and would be unusually valuable to our Military Establishment.

I therefore advocate the amendment which has just been read.

Mr. OVERMAN. Where does it come in?

Mr. DU PONT. At the end of section 23, page 134, line 21.

Mr. CHAMBERLAIN. Mr. President, I am reluctant to differ from my very distinguished friend and fellow member of the Military Affairs Committee; but the committee had this whole subject of the Porto Rican force under serious consideration, and the committee concluded to increase the present part of a regiment by one battalion, making it a full regiment. The committee, however, did not feel that it ought to increase the force there by another regiment, I am sure. I do not think it is the policy to add another regiment to that force.

Mr. LEE of Maryland. Mr. President, I should like to say a word in favor of this amendment.

It seems to me, without having the full knowledge that the committee has on this particular subject, to be a most excellent suggestion. The Senator who offers it has had a broad and personal military experience; and looking over the bill that Porto Rican regiment looks quite lonesome in this piece of legislation, and it looks more lonesome on an island in the Atlantic—one regiment for Porto Rico! Why, the proposition is more than unique, and it seems highly reasonable that this amendment should be adopted. It is natural to feel some surprise that this force has been kept down to just one regiment in that important outlying position on the Atlantic coast of our continent.

Mr. CHAMBERLAIN. Mr. President, I know I am not permitted to speak again on the amendment; but I should like to have inserted in the RECORD the cost of increasing the Porto Rican regiment and what it is costing us as it is standing now.

The VICE PRESIDENT. In the absence of objection that may be done.

The matter referred to is as follows:

Cost of increasing Porto Rican regiment of Infantry from a 2-battalion (8 companies) to a 3-battalion (12 companies) regiment.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is on the amendment offered by the Senator from Delaware [Mr. DU PONT] to the amendment of the committee.

The amendment to the amendment was rejected.

Mr. JONES. Mr. President, I desire to offer as an amendment a new section.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The amendment to the amendment will be stated.

The SECRETARY. It is proposed to add, at the end of the committee amendment, a new section, as follows:

SEC. —. That hereafter an enlisted man when discharged from the service, except by way of punishment for an offense, shall receive 4 cents per mile from the place of his discharge to the place of his application for enlistment, or the place of his enlistment, enrollment, or original muster into the service, at his option: Provided, That for sea travel on discharge transportation and subsistence only shall be furnished to enlisted men.

Mr. JONES. Mr. President, it was refreshing to have the Senator from Colorado [Mr. THOMAS] offer his amendment a while ago in the interest of the private soldier. As he said, the officers have been pretty well taken care of and pretty well considered. I was heartily in favor of the amendment which he proposed, to prevent discriminations because of the uniform of the private soldier. I regret very much that the existing condition seems to require such legislation as that. I do not know why that is. Nevertheless, it seems to be the condition.

This amendment is in the interest of the private soldier. In 1901 we passed a law with reference to this matter, which reads as follows:

That hereafter when an officer shall be discharged from the service, except by way of punishment for an offense, he shall receive for travel allowances from the place of his discharge to the place of his residence at the time of his appointment or to the place of his original muster into the service 4 cents per mile; and an enlisted man when discharged from the service, except by way of punishment for an offense, shall receive 4 cents per mile from the place of his discharge to the place of his enlistment, enrollment, or original muster into the service.

In 1912 we passed another law in which we left the officer's travel pay just as it was—4 cents a mile—but we cut the private soldier's travel pay down to either subsistence in kind, or 2 cents a mile.

Mr. CLAPP. Mr. President——

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Washington yield to the Senator from Minnesota?

Mr. JONES. I do.

Mr. CLAPP. It simply occurs to me that that ought to be amended so as to provide mileage to any other place that he might designate, not to exceed the distance to his original place of muster into the service. He might not want to go back to the place where he enlisted. It seems to me he ought to be entitled to that much mileage if he wants to go somewhere else.

Mr. JONES. That might be true, but I have drawn the amendment to conform with previous laws; and when it goes to conference, if it should be accepted, it could be framed up as the conditions warrant. It might be framed better, but I thought it was better to follow what we had done heretofore in the case of the language with reference to the officers, rather than to change it.

Mr. CLAPP. Very well.

Mr. JONES. If it is adopted, then the conferees can fix it up.

Mr. President, when a sailor is discharged he gets 4 cents a mile to the place of his enlistment; so it seems that we have been discriminating in some way against the private soldier upon his discharge.

I have a great many facts here which I should like to put in, but I have not the time, having only five minutes. I want to say this, however:

I have an affidavit here from a soldier stating that when he came to be discharged he went and asked for his transportation. He was at one point in our State, at Fort Ward, and he wanted to go to Joplin, Mo. A natural and almost a direct route was by way of the Northern Pacific to Billings and down over the C., B. & Q. He went to the proper officers, and they told him they could not send him over that route, and that he had to go down over the O. R. & N. He wanted to go by Billings because he had some business there that he wanted to transact. They said, "No; we can not send you over that route." If he had gone the other way, in order to get to Billings he would have to go away past and then pay his way back, and all that sort of thing. So, instead of doing that, he accepted the 2 cents a mile. Of course 2 cents a mile would not pay his transportation or support him, or anything of the sort; but in order to go by Billings, when he could have gone in the regular way, he had to give up his subsistence and take the 2 cents a mile.

I do not know why they could not send him over that road. I have understood that under the provisions of the law that we have now the department apportions the business along the different railroads, and when a soldier comes and asks for subsistence and transportation they will say: "You go over this road," or "You go over that," not for his benefit, but in order to distribute the business among the roads. Whether that is true or not, this was the situation in this particular case. I have two or three other cases of the same character, where they said they could not send a soldier over a road that they could have sent him over just as well as not, and in order to go by the way he wanted to go he had to accept the 2 cents a mile.

Mr. President, we ought not to have legislation under which the officers of the Army even have the right to do that, or where it is put within their power to apportion the traveling of these discharged soldiers in the interest of any railroad company or transportation line. This provision ought to be and is supposed to be in the interest of the soldier, but as a matter of fact it works to his disadvantage rather than to his advantage.

I hope the amendment will be adopted.

Mr. CHAMBERLAIN. Mr. President, I think the law as it is now fully protects the enlisted man. Instead of undertaking to explain it, I can read it easier than I can describe it. Section 1045 of the Military Code provides that—

> Hereafter when an enlisted man is discharged from the service, except by way of punishment for an offense, he shall be entitled to transportation in kind and subsistence from the place of his discharge to the place of his enlistment, or to such other place within the continental limits of the United States as he may select, to which the distance is no greater than from the place of discharge to place of enlistment; but if the distance be greater he may be furnished with transportation in kind and subsistence for a distance equal to that from place of discharge to place of enlistment, or, in lieu of such transportation and subsistence, he shall, if he so elects, receive 2 cents a mile, except for sea travel, from the place of his discharge to the place of his enlistment.

It seems to me that is a liberal enough provision for the enlisted man. Of course, if he wants to take a roundabout trip and not go in a direct line, or if he wants to go some greater distance, the 2 cents a mile would not be sufficient to pay his way.

Mr. JONES. Mr. President, will the Senator permit me?

Mr. CHAMBERLAIN. Certainly.

Mr. JONES. I just want to suggest to the Senator that in the case I have cited it was not a roundabout route; it was a direct route over the Northern Pacific down into Missouri; and yet they said: "No; you have got to go over the O. R. & N. road." In order to avoid that and go through Billings, where the C., B. & Q. turns off from the main line, as the Senator knows, he said: "Well, I will take the 2 cents a mile."

Mr. CHAMBERLAIN. There might be some instances where an officer is arbitrary in his treatment of a man; but the rule, if followed, makes ample provision for it.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is on the amendment of the Senator from Washington [Mr. JONES] to the amendment of the committee. [Putting the question.] The Chair is in doubt.

Mr. HITCHCOCK. Mr. President, I suggest the absence of a quorum.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Secretary will call the roll.

The Secretary called the roll, and the following Senators answered to their names:

Ashurst	Dillingham	La Follette	Overman
Bankhead	Gallinger	Lane	Owen
Borah	Harding	Lee, Md.	Page
Brady	Hardwick	Lewis	Phelan
Brandegee	Hitchcock	Lippitt	Pittman
Burleigh	Hollis	Lodge	Pomerene
Chamberlain	Hughes	McCumber	Reed
Chilton	Husting	Martin, Va.	Robinson
Clapp	James	Martine, N. J.	Shafroth
Clark, Wyo.	Johnson, Me.	Myers	Sheppard
Colt	Johnson, S. Dak.	Nelson	Sherman
Culberson	Jones	Newlands	Simmons
Cummins	Kenyon	Norris	Smith, Ariz.
Curtis	Kern	Oliver	Smith, Ga.
Smith, Md.	Stone	Thomas	Walsh
Smith, Mich.	Sutherland	Tillman	Warren
Smoot	Swanson	Underwood	Williams
Sterling	Taggart	Vardaman	Works

The VICE PRESIDENT. Seventy-two Senators have answered to the roll call. There is a quorum present. The question is on the amendment of the Senator from Washington [Mr. JONES] to the amendment of the committee.

Mr. JONES. I ask that it may be stated again, Mr. President, as so many Senators have entered the Chamber since it was read before.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Secretary will again state the amendment to the amendment.

The Secretary again stated the amendment to the amendment.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is on agreeing to the amendment of the Senator from Washington to the amendment of the committee.

The amendment to the amendment was agreed to.

Mr. HITCHCOCK. Mr. President, on page 110, line 6, I move to strike out "ten" and insert "six" before the word "colonels," to strike out "twelve" and insert "six" before the words "lieutenant colonels"; in line 7 to strike out "thirty-two" before the word "majors" and insert "eighteen," and to strike out "thirty-four" before the word "captains" and insert "eighteen."

Mr. President, this amendment relates to the General Staff. At present we have a General Staff consisting of 38 officers. The House has left that number as it is now. The bill before the Senate provides for a General Staff of 97 officers. The amendments I have offered will fix the General Staff at 52 officers.

Mr. President, it seems to me that the proposition of increasing the General Staff from 38 to 97 officers involves an excessive and topheavy increase. That would make a General Staff larger than the Senate of the United States, composed of officers largely resident here in Washington who are occupied with working out problems of war. If this were a great military Nation, with war imminent, with enormously difficult military problems, it might be desirable to have a larger General Staff; but for the United States, situated as this country is, to increase its General Staff at the present time from 38 to 97 is something that I think all will consider excessive if they come to consider it.

I am aware that the officers in the Army, who are, of course, the natural advisers of the Military Affairs Committee, and to some extent of the Senate, desire to multiply and increase the number of officers resident here in Washington as much as possible; but I do not believe that the people of the United States, much as they desire an efficient and effective Army, care to multiply these officers of high pay here in Washington and make a General Staff of such size.

I therefore submit the amendment.

Mr. CHAMBERLAIN. Mr. President, in my time I desire to state to the Senate what I understand to be the view of the President of the Senate with reference to finishing this bill, so that Senators may be advised about it. That is, that under the unanimous-consent agreement that was entered into we are compelled to complete the consideration of this bill to-night by midnight.

SEVERAL SENATORS. Oh, no!

Mr. CHAMBERLAIN. That is what I understand. Is not that the Chair's view?

The VICE PRESIDENT. The matter might as well be settled now.

Mr. CHAMBERLAIN. Yes; I should like to have it settled.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The unanimous-consent agreement provides that—

> At not later than 4 o'clock p. m., on Tuesday, April 18, 1916, the Senate will proceed to vote upon any amendment that may be pending, any amendment that may be offered, and upon the bill (H. R. 12766) to increase the efficiency of the Military Establishment of the United States, through the regular parliamentary stages to its final disposition.

The unanimous-consent agreement does not state whether it is the legislative day of Tuesday, April 18, or the calendar day of Tuesday, April 18. This happens to be, by the action of the Senate of the United States, the legislative day of Monday, April 17. This, therefore, can be nothing else than the calendar day of Tuesday, April 18, as mentioned in the unanimous-consent agreement.

Had there been an adjournment last evening until noon of to-day, there might have been a reasonable construction to the mind of the Chair that this agreement was to be carried out on the legislative day of April 18. But as there can be no legislative day of April 18, the Chair now construes it to be the calendar day, and that the unanimous-consent agreement requires that this bill be finally disposed of by 12 o'clock to-night.

Mr. GALLINGER. Mr. President, a parliamentary inquiry. Suppose that in the consideration of these numerous amendments, and the conversation that is being carried on, we reach 12 o'clock to-night and have not completed the consideration of the bill. What will the parliamentary status then be?

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Chair is not responsible for what may happen at 12 o'clock. The Chair is quite satisfied that there will not be conversation from now until 12 o'clock to-night on these amendments.

Mr. GALLINGER. I join my felicitations with the Chair in that respect.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Chair makes that ruling now, in order that if it is not the view of the Senate of the United States an appeal may be taken from the ruling of the Chair and the question may be settled by the Senate itself. The Chair thought it was fair to make it now, on the suggestion of the Senator from Oregon.

Mr. REED. Mr. President, a parliamentary inquiry. As I understand the reason given by the Chair, the whole difficulty arises from the fact that we did not adjourn on last evening until to-day; but if the Senate should now adjourn until 10 minutes after 2 and then reconvene as of the legislative day of the 18th, what would the situation be?

The VICE PRESIDENT. That action should have been taken, in the opinion of the Chair, on yesterday. The legislative day of April 18, if it ever began at all, began before the hour of 12 o'clock meridian, in accordance with the fixed rule of the Senate.

Mr. CHAMBERLAIN. Mr. President, addressing myself for a moment to the amendment suggested by the Senator from Nebraska, he proposes to reduce the General Staff from the number that was fixed by the Senate committee. I think the Senator is a little unjust to the General Staff in stating that there are men here without any duties to perform. The fact is the General Staff has been fixed by the committee very much smaller than the general staff of other countries. It has been inadequate in numbers and has never been able to undertake the solution of many of the problems devolving upon the general staff in foreign armies. Germany has a general staff of 309 general-staff officers, with 228 other officers attached to general-staff work. France has a general staff of 612 general-staff officers, with 263 other officers attached for duty. Austria-Hungary has a general staff of 508 general-staff officers, with 421 other officers attached for duty. Great Britain has a general staff of 171 general staff officers. In view of these numbers the increase in our General Staff to 88 must be considered as very moderate indeed.

The amendment seeks to reduce it still lower. There are numerous duties that the General Staff has to perform, and they never were performed so well as they are now. In fact, these duties have been neglected in times past, and it was the purpose of the committee to regulate it so that general questions of defense could be considered by them and plans worked out in advance of any trouble that might come upon us. I hope the action of the committee will be sustained by the Senate.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is on agreeing to the amendment of the Senator from Nebraska to the amendment of the committee.

The amendment to the amendment was rejected.

Mr. NELSON. I offer the following amendment to section 29.

The VICE PRESIDENT. It will be stated.

The SECRETARY. Section 29, page 140, line 7, strike out the word "seven" and insert in lieu thereof the word "five." It reads:

> On and after the 1st day of July, 1916, all enlistments in the Regular Army shall be for a term of seven years.

It is proposed to strike out "seven" and insert "five."

Mr. NELSON. All the amendments should go together.

The SECRETARY. In the same line and page strike out the word "four" and insert the word "two"; on the same page, line 11, strike out the period and all thereafter down to and including the word "years," in line 17; and on page 141, in line 1, strike out the word "seven" and insert the word "five."

Mr. NELSON. Mr. President, all these amendments should go together. Section 29 relates to the term of enlistment. The bill provides for enlistment for seven years, an active service in the Army of four years with three years in the reserve, but with a proviso that at the expiration of one year's honorable service an enlisted man serving within the continental limits of the United States, and so forth, may go to the reserves. This is the first time in the history of enlistment in the Regular Army that we have ever enlisted them by this method; that is, providing for an enlistment to serve a fixed time with the colors and then placing them in the reserves.

Mr. DU PONT. I think that the Senator is mistaken. This is done under the provisions of existing law.

Mr. NELSON. It has not been utilized or made use of so far as I know. We have no reserves of that kind so far as I know in the Army.

Mr. WARREN. The Senator will notice also that they can go out at the end of one year if the commanding officer recommends it, and at the end of two years the enlisted man can go out in any event.

Mr. NELSON. I have noticed that, but I have only five minutes, and I do not want to be robbed of it.

It seems to me that with an enlisment of five years and two years with the colors you get an ample period of training for the men in the ranks. Then if their officers find them to be efficient they can let them out at the end of one year.

I favor this amendment, Mr. President; I think it will promote and hasten enlistment. Men will much prefer to enlist for a period of five years, with a compulsory term of two years with the colors and three years in the reserves, than for the period fixed in the bill, seven years in all, four years with the colors and then afterwards go into the reserves on their application. This will give a man at least one full year's training, or two years; and after serving two years he goes into the reserve and becomes a part of the reserve force of the Regular Army of the United States. If his commanding officers feel that at the end of one year he is competent and fit as a soldier, they can let him go into the reserves at the end of one year.

On the 31st of January I appeared before the Committee on Military Affairs to advocate this very plan of enlistment, and made a few brief remarks. At that time I thought that one year was ample time with the colors, but my amendment now provides for two years. I think if we are interested in having the Regular Army recruited as soon as possible, the Senate had better adopt this amendment.

I will suggest further to the Senators in charge of the bill that the House provides for a similar term of enlistment—seven years—with three years with the colors. If you adopt my amendment you get it into conference; and I hope you will reduce the period of enlistment to five years and leave it so that the maximum term with the colors will be only two years.

Mr. President, I ask leave to incorporate with my remarks the statement I made before the Committee on Military Affairs the 31st of January in respect to this matter.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Without objection, leave is granted.

The matter referred to is as follows:

STATEMENT OF HON. KNUTE NELSON, A SENATOR FROM THE STATE OF MINNESOTA.

The CHAIRMAN. Senator NELSON desires to address the committee in regard to the subject we are now considering, and we shall take pleasure in hearing him at this time.

Senator NELSON. Mr. Chairman and gentlemen, it may seem presumptuous for me, a nonexpert, to appear before your committee on a matter of this kind, and my excuse is that I am vitally interested in an increase in the strength of our Army. I think we need a larger Army and larger reserves.

There is some question as to the advisability of building up our State militia. Constitutional objections exist to that, and you have heard them ably discussed here. There is objection, too, among our people to what we call universal training or universal service, not exactly making them soldiers, but having them trained. I think there is a simpler way, and to illustrate my meaning I will refer to a piece of history a little old, but I think it conveys a useful lesson to us.

In 1806 the Prussian Army, as you know, was defeated in the great Battles of Jena and Auerstadt, both fought on the same day, and Napoleon entered Berlin and took possession of the country and a treaty was made. Prussia was practically deprived of a good deal of her possessions, her army was destroyed, but still Napoleon was not satisfied. That first treaty of Berlin was in 1807. The next year he insisted upon an enlargement of that treaty, which is known as the treaty of Paris. That treaty, among other things, provided, in addition to the payment of a money contribution of, I think, 300,000,000 thalers, that Prussia should not be allowed to maintain an army larger than 42,000. That was the condition of the treaty, what was left of the Prussian monarchy—and a large share of it was left—should be allowed to keep a standing army of only 42,000 men.

The German patriots at that time were very anxious to shake off the yoke of Napoleon, but they felt themselves much hampered. The leading men were Stein, Scharnhorst, Hardenberg, and Gneisenau, who was afterwards Blutcher's chief of staff at the Battle of Waterloo. These men hit upon this unique plan of increasing the Prussian Army under that treaty. They would take men into the ranks, give them a hard drilling for a short time, and then turn them out, then take in a new lot, and keep on in this way, and in the course of a short time, under that limitation in the treaty of Paris of 42,000 men, they had a trained army of 150,000, and they did it just in that way. They would keep the visible ranks fully up to that standard, give them a little sharp training, turn them out, put in another lot, and keep on, until it was an able military establishment for those times, of 150,000 men.

Applying what was done in that case to our present condition, this thought has struck me, and that is why I want to make the suggestion to you. Why not adopt this plan, enlist our men—and I refer particularly to the Infantry—for five years, but only require one year of military service. After one year, put them in the reserves, make them a permanent army of reserves. I think in one year you could fully train infantrymen so as to make them good soldiers. In the course of five years under this plan, starting with a standing army of 200,000, you would have 800,000 men in the reserve. In this way, by repeating that operation, by keeping our Regular Army up, say, to a standard of 200,000, enlisting them for five years, requiring only one year with the colors, and putting them on a reserve where they could be called on in case of war and emergency at any time, you would accomplish what you are after. In that way you could give us a fair standing army, and I think we ought to have an Army of at least 200,000 men, and you would have a reserve in the course of four or five years of 800,000, and, as you keep on with the operation, in the next five years the men would not be obligated to join the colors after they had been out five years, but still you would have that many trained men among the community, among the people.

Another matter in connection with this, and to encourage enlistments, I think, especially in the Infantry, you ought to make it a little easier for enlisted men to become commissioned officers. It is undoubtedly true that in the specialties of the Army, such as the Engineering Department, the Ordnance Department, and the Artillery, they require special technical knowledge, such a knowledge and such an education as they would only get at our Military Academy. But they do not require that degree of technical knowledge in the Infantry. It may be that these enlistments in the Artillery and in the Engineering Corps—and by Artillery I refer to the Coast Artillery also—they should be for five years, but two years with the colors. Give them a year longer service. But I think if you enlisted our young men—and I think they would enlist on that basis—for five years, with the explicit understanding that they are to serve only one year with the colors, after that they are a part of the reserve army of the United States, and continue as such, liable to be called on in an emergency, whenever we need them, I think we could procure an ample supply of men, and in that way you would solve the question, first, of a standing army, and, in the next place, a plan of reserves. In other words, you group them into one system. You create in that way, first, a moderate standing army, and, in addition to that, you would have a large trained reserve.

Senator DU PONT. Senator, would you pay the reserve?

Senator NELSON. No; I would not pay them anything while they were in the reserve, not until they were called out into actual service. I would enlist them for five years, with the express understanding that they were to serve one year with the colors at full pay, and then, after that, to be released from further service except in case of emergency, to answer a call in case of war or other urgency.

The CHAIRMAN. Senator, Adjt. Gen. McCain stated here that in his opinion it would be impossible to enlist an army in excess of 140,000 men; that it is very difficult to get them to enlist at all.

Senator NELSON. What is the present term of enlistment?

Senator DU PONT. Four years.

Senator NELSON. It used to be three. I think that when young men are told that they would only have to serve one year in the ranks, do actual soldiering, and after that they would be relieved from service except in case of emergency, there would be no trouble about enlistments. That is my idea.

Furthermore, as I said, in order to encourage enlistments, you ought to make a little broader opening for enlisted men to become commissioned officers, especially in the Infantry.

The CHAIRMAN. Senator, you served through the Civil War, did you not?

Senator NELSON. Yes, sir. All of us who are familiar with history know that one of the great encouragements of the French soldier was that he could become an officer and by and by even a marshal of France. Here, with the exception of a very limited number who come in by a sort of a rigid examination, a limited number every year, you can put up a sign like the Dante sign over the infernal regions, that whoever enlists in the ranks has little show to get any farther.

Another thing I want to call to your attention which has always struck me. Take an enlisted man who has gradually, by his good conduct and ability, risen to the high or highest grade of a noncommissioned officer, a first sergeant or a commissary sergeant, or any other of the highest grades of a noncommissioned officer.

Under the Army Regulations, if that man reenlists he can not reenlist in the rank that he had at his discharge. He must enlist as a private, and he is subject to the contingency of the commander of the regiment or the body he enlists in will put him back in his old place. That is something that ought to be remedied. If a man has attained a high position as a sergeant or sergeant major in the Army and his enlistment expires, his record being good, that man should be permitted to reenlist with the rank at which he was serving in the Army when discharged. I never could see any good reason for requiring him to enlist as a private when he had attained that high rank. Of course, what I have stated simply applies to men who are fit and competent and whose records are good.

The CHAIRMAN. Senator, what do you think of the proposition to open the doors of West Point and the Naval Academy to every young man in the United States who will enlist and serve a term of one year and educate him at the expense of the Government?

Senator NELSON. I think that is a very good plan.

The CHAIRMAN. Would it not put in the Army and Navy men who by a year of effort had shown their proficiency?

Senator NELSON. Yes, sir. We ought to do everything we can to encourage young men to go into the Army and Navy, and I might say here, while that subject is not before your committee, I am heartily in favor of a large increase in our Navy. I believe our Navy should rank next to that of England, and I am also anxious to see our Army increased, and while I am in favor of that, I am anxious to see a little more consideration given to the enlisted men. It was my fortune—or misfortune, whatever you call it—to serve through the Civil War as an enlisted man. I have nothing to complain of, and still I know some of the hardships that an enlisted man is subject to.

Of recent years they have secured a lot of valuable young men in the West for our Navy, farmers' boys, and, from what I can learn of naval officers, they make first-class sailors, as a sailor is to-day; not the old-style sailor who climbed the rigging, furled and unfurled sails. But there is one thing that staggers the farm boys. In their own neighborhood, when they are boys among boys, everybody treats them with civility and courtesy, and they are of good families. They come here and enlist. They do not complain of hard work in the Navy; they do not complain of the rations, but it is that spirit of gruffness and aloofness that exists among the officers that makes these boys feel humiliated and homesick, and in many cases they desert on that account. That is not so much true in the Army as in the Navy. I think our Army has become more liberal.

I remember an incident some years ago, when I went down the Potomac on a Government boat, and I stood upon the hurricane deck with the commander of the ship, a naval officer, who was talking to me in a pleasant manner. He talked to me in the most gentlemanly, civil manner, as a naval officer would, but he had occasion to give an order to a man down on the deck below us, and his voice changed, and it seemed to me just as though he was talking to a dog. I tell you, Senators, my heart blood boiled up. I was almost ready to hit that officer because of the way he acted on that occasion. It is that kind of conduct that makes it so discouraging for our boys who come from the farms and from good neighborhoods. But I am glad to say it is diminishing in the Navy.

Senator DU PONT. Under the present arrangements can not enlisted men, if they show sufficient merit, be promoted to commissioned officers?

Senator NELSON. It is a very limited number. There is a way, but it is a pretty hard road to travel.

Senator DU PONT. I sympathize cordially with your suggestion that due consideration should be given to the wants and welfare of the enlisted man, and I think he should be treated with all proper kindness, so far as is consistent with discipline.

Senator NELSON. I can see that in the Navy, gentlemen, why a great amount of technical knowledge is required and why there should be more rigidness in the requirements in the examinations. I can also see the same in respect to the Ordnance and the Artillery and the Engineer Corps, but certainly in the Infantry arm, which is the great arm of the service—the fighting arm, when you come right to it—I do not think there is any reason for making the door so narrow for an enlisted man to get in. That part of it ought to be liberalized.

But, gentlemen, you have enough to do, and I have taken up more time than I intended. I only came here and made this statement about the increase of our Army because it is a matter I am vitally interested in, and I would rather say it to you here in the committee than to go over on the floor and talk about it.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is on agreeing to the amendment of the Senator from Minnesota to the amendment of the committee.

The amendment to the amendment was agreed to.

Mr. LEE of Maryland. I offer the following amendment.

The VICE PRESIDENT. It will be read.

The SECRETARY. In section 62, page 163, line 21, after the words "may prescribe," insert:

The estimates for the first year after the passage of this act shall be for a number not less than the minimum number provided for by existing law.

Mr. LEE of Maryland. Mr. President, this amendment is with reference to the estimates for the National Guard, and it provides that such estimates shall not be less than the present estimates authorized by existing law. I can not conceive of the committee having it in mind deliberately to reduce the departmental estimates for the National Guard. We discussed the question yesterday as to the number of the National Guard provided for in this section, and both the Senator from Wyoming [Mr. WARREN] and the chairman of the committee [Mr. CHAMBERLAIN] seemed to think that the number of the National Guard was assured by this section as not less than now existing, because the section has a proviso in it prohibiting the mustering out of any portion of the guard that conforms to the requirements of the War Department or the regulations by the President.

Under such a construction of the section the present number of the National Guard is the fixed number for which the department would estimate. The present number is 134,000, but the estimates which have been made this year are for 153,000 men, that being the minimum required by existing law. So if this section passes unamended, the estimates coming from the department for the maintenance of the National Guard will be simply for the existing National Guard and for no greater number. There will be no allowance whatever for any growth in the National Guard. The National Guard grew in the six months ending December 31, 1915, 5,000 in number. Presumably that growth ran through the year, so that the National Guard increased presumably in the last year 10,000 men. Under the inducement and encouragement offered by this bill the increase in the National Guard should be greater still. It seems entirely reasonable, and I hope the committee will accept the suggestion that the estimate should not be reduced from what it is now by law, namely, for 153,000 men, and which number would allow for a possible growth to the National Guard in the first year of 19,000 men.

The request is so reasonable I hope the committee will accept it. The members of the committee certainly agree that the only fixed number appearing by this section is either the 200 men specified for each Senator and Representative or the present number of the National Guard. Therefore the estimates, if based on the present number of the guard, or 134,000 men, will allow for no margin for the growth of the National Guard, and this in a bill that is providing for increased preparedness and defense.

The committee itself, if it intends to keep the National Guard in reduced numbers, will have the consideration of this very question of estimates and appropriation when it comes from the department. The departmental estimate will be only for 134,000, and if the committee intends to keep the number down to 134,000 it will accept that estimate, and the Senate will be helpless, because it can not go above the committee action on the department estimate.

Under those circumstances I would either like the chairman to accept this amendment or to give us some assurance as to an enlarged appropriation for the National Guard, greater than the estimate, which will necessarily be fixed by this section 62 for the present number of the National Guard, 134,000 men, or less.

It is so clear, Mr. President, that I hardly think it necessary to elaborate any further, that there should be at least the present estimates for 153,000 men allowed, and at least the present margin of possible increase of 19,000 men allowed for the National Guard in the first year.

Mr. CHAMBERLAIN. Mr. President, I have not yet been able to understand the contention which the Senator makes. It seems to me that the bill does protect the National Guard along the lines the Senator suggests. I have read it through a number of times since our first discussion of the subject and I still feel that the guard is amply provided for, but I have no objection to this particular amendment. It carries out what I think the bill carries out anyway.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is on agreeing to the amendment of the Senator from Maryland to the amendment of the committee.

The amendment to the amendment was agreed to.

Mr. BRANDEGEE. I send to the desk and offer the following amendment.

The VICE PRESIDENT. It will be stated.

The SECRETARY. On page 160 at the end of line 13 insert the following:

Provided, That the total enlisted force of the line of the Regular Army, excluding the Philippine Scouts, the enlisted men of the Quartermaster Corps, of the Medical Corps, and the unassigned recruits, shall not at any one time, except in the event of actual or threatened war or similar emergency in which the public safety demands it, exceed 250,000 men: Provided further, That in addition to the units specified in this section, additional units of Infantry, Cavalry, or Field Artillery to conform in composition with the requirements of sections 19, 20, and 21 of this act may be organized in the discretion of the President.

Mr. BRANDEGEE. Mr. President, we all know that for the last six months if not for a year there has been grave apprehension and anxiety in this country as to the national defense. We have now arrived at a period where we can show the country whether we really want to do anything effective toward meeting the popular opinion and anything that will really put us in a position where we can at short notice defend ourselves in case the Nation is put in peril.

The President was so strongly affected by what had happened in the world in the last year and a half that he made a special trip through the country to tell the people that sparks were flying everywhere; that the nations of the world had apparently lost their sense of reason and were engaged in a ruthless and bloody war; that he was daily treading in dangers; that the people demanded that he should send messages and strongly protect American rights everywhere over the world, but, apparently, thought he could do that by mere words and vociferation; and that he could not continue to protect American rights, American property, and American lives unless the Nation would put into his hands some effective tools to do it with.

Mr. President, I regard it to be the first duty of this Congress to effectively increase the Army and Navy strength of the country. The Senator from Nebraska has stated that this country did not want a large standing army. The word "large" is a relative term. We are a country of over 100,000,000 people, covering an empire in territory. We are bordered by the ocean on each side, along which to a certain extent we have erected coast defense. That coast defense is not half armed.

If there is any danger to this country from hostile forces, that danger will come fairly immediately and the emergency will arise suddenly. The Senator from Utah [Mr. SUTHERLAND] yesterday offered an amendment increasing largely the number of men who may be posted at the guns along our coast, upon which we have spent so much money. It was a very close vote, and came very near carrying. The Senator from Iowa [Mr. CUMMINS] to-day offered an amendment increasing the personnel and efficiency of the Ordnance Department, which I think is very clearly needed.

Mr. President, if the Senate will adopt this amendment, or something like it, as an expression of its opinion, it will be notice to the country and to the House of Representatives that the Senate of the United States at least appreciates the situation in which we stand, and it will be easier to get the House to agree to a larger increase than they have provided in their bill.

I do not think that an army of 275,000 or 300,000 can justly be called a large standing army for a country of 100,000,000 people, the richest country in the world, and the weakest of any in comparison with its size.

People ask where is the danger coming from. Mr. President, I do not know whence it will come or from whom nor do I consider that to be a relevant question at all. Whenever it comes I want to have it in my conscience that I have done what little I could to meet it and effectively repel it, wherever it may come.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is on the amendment proposed by the Senator from Connecticut [Mr. BRANDEGEE] to the committee amendment.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. Mr. President, I should like to hear the amendment once more stated. I want to catch its full scope.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The amendment will again be stated.

The SECRETARY. On page 106, at the end of line 13, it is proposed to insert the following:

Provided, That the total enlisted force of the line of the Regular Army, excluding the Philippine Scouts, the enlisted men of the Quartermaster Corps, of the Medical Corps, and the unassigned recruits, shall not at any one time, except in the event of actual or threatened war or similar emergency in which the public safety demands it, exceed 250,000 men: Provided further, That in addition to the units specified in this section, additional units of Infantry, Cavalry, or Field Artillery to conform in composition with the requirements of sections 19, 20, and 21 of this act may be organized in the discretion of the President.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. Mr. President, as I understand this amendment, it authorizes the President at once, in his discretion, to increase the Army by proper units to 250,000 men. I cordially favor the amendment. If we are to have 250,000 regular soldiers at all, we ought to have them just as soon as we can get them.

Why are we considering to-day a special military bill? Not for five years hence, but because of the conditions of the balance of the world at this time; because Europe is torn to pieces by a terrible struggle; because we do not know how long our own country can be kept free from the conflagration which the European struggle has created. Five years from now it will be a thing of the past, I trust most earnestly, but next year perhaps—I hope not, probably not—but possibly we may be in it. I do not say on which side, against whom, or with whom; that is not a question at all to be considered. I trust we shall not be at war with any nation; I trust we may keep out of it, and I will go as far as anyone possibly can honorably go by my vote to keep my country out of it; but the bare possibility of our being involved in it calls upon us for some reasonable preparation.

Two hundred and fifty thousand men! Why, we would need them on one side of our country if any effort was made to attack us. On the south of us we have a country in a state of utter confusion, almost of anarchy. I hope we shall not be forced to send any large number of men there; but we do not know. On the north of use we have a country not perfectly friendly. Great Britain to-day is sore because we did not openly espouse her cause and fight with her as one of her colonies, and some of our people here regret that we did not do so. Across upon the Pacific is the Japanese situation. With every desire for peace, we should prepare to prevent anyone from wishing to give us trouble.

Mr. President, we need not keep our Army at 250,000; a little later on it can be reduced. There is no serious danger of militarism with the amendment we have placed in this bill. Our volunteers or our new enlisted men can be kept near home. There can be forts and camps near their homes, where the men of a State or of neighboring States may be trained as soldiers and at the same time receive instruction for which we have provided, preparing themselves for lives of peace, for work at home, when they are relieved from the service. The service can be made two years of splendid instruction for the enlisted men. Such a provision brings no menace to the future of the country. We can make the enlistments from young men, and we can make the two years' service they receive one that will strengthen the power and the resources and the creative capacity of our people in civil life. There is nothing to lose by it; there is nothing to fear from it; and at the same time we can place ourselves in a reasonably sane state of preparation for an emergency.

I shall vote with great pleasure for this amendment, because whatever we are to do, I think we should do now.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Senator's time has expired.

Mr. LODGE. Mr. President, I agree very strongly with the Senator from Georgia [Mr. SMITH]. Whatever we do we ought to do now, in so far as it is possible to get the force ready. The Regular Army must be the cornerstone of our national defense. We have been making various provisions for their support in time of war, and whether it is done by volunteers, through the National Guard, through Plattsburg camps, or through all three, it will take time to gather that reserve force for the hour of stress. That reserve force must come to the support of the mobile force of the Regular Army. To-day the mobile portion of our Regular Army does not exceed 25,000 men for practical purposes, a number which is insufficient in itself to deal with the unfortunate condition in Mexico at this moment. We ought to increase the mobile force of the Regular Army, and we ought to increase it as rapidly as possible. Behind it we shall put the reserves, gathered in such way as Congress may finally determine; but the Regular Army is what we need to build up at once.

Of course, for a country with 100,000,000 people, a Regular Army of 250,000 men, with the extent of territory that we have to cover, with our outlying possessions, is very small, in my judgment, even for times of profound peace.

It is not necessary to say whence the danger of war will come, but we all realize that there may be danger of war at any moment. We have to meet the possibility of the landing of an enemy in force at an undefended point on either of our two great coasts. All we can defend by means of the coast defenses are certain points. We may have trouble with our southern frontier. We may need at least 500,000 men to meet what is called the first rush. With 250,000 Regulars we might have 150,000 to 200,000 men in our mobile force, and behind that force we can put the National Guard and such other reserves as we may decide to raise by other methods.

The cornerstone is the Regular Army, as I said at the outset. It is utterly inadequate as provided for in the House bill; it is to my mind too low in the Senate bill, and I earnestly hope that the amendment proposed by the Senator from Connecticut may be adopted.

Mr. VARDAMAN. Mr. President, if the standing army is the corner stone of our national defense, as suggested by the senior Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. LODGE], I am inclined to think that if we shall go as far in the matter of enlarging the standing army as some Senators desire to go, it may be in the course of time the tombstone of republicanism in America. I am not going to take up the time of the Senate to discuss the question at length this afternoon, because I am sure it will avail nothing. I simply desire to express my hearty disapproval of the amendment offered by the Senator from Connecticut [Mr. BRANDEGEE].

Mr. HUGHES. Mr. President, I sincerely hope the amendment proposed by the Senator from Connecticut will be adopted. If I could adjust the language, I should like to suggest a modification of his amendment so as to provide that at no time should the mobile force of the Nation consist of less than 250,000 men, exclusive of the forces to which he has referred. If his amendment is adopted, I propose to offer an amendment providing that the President of the United States may increase the pay of enlisted men so that we may be enabled to attract to the service men whom we are unable now to attract.

We are at the close of the debate on this very important bill. The United States is awaiting with bated breath the action of the Senate of the United States upon this very important proposition; and yet, as I see it, while there may be 250,000 or half a million votes in this bill, there is not a single soldier in it. For the purpose of producing soldiers for the defense of the United States we have been gathered here for three or four weeks, and we have not accomplished it; we have not risen to the opportunity. We have proceeded with the consideration of this bill in the old and traditional way; we have thrown sop to the National Guard—an expensive sop; a sop which, in my opinion, is absolutely useless, so far as the defense of the country by the National Guard is concerned. We have thrown sop to the summer-camp soldiers, but we have done nothing in throwing that sop so far as the defense of the American people is concerned.

I believe that the American people want as their first line of defense the Regular Military Establishment of this country. I believe we have graduated from the South American Republics' stage, when anybody can raise the bogey of a Regular Army to frighten the people of the United States of America into such a state of mind that they will refuse to adopt proper means of defense.

I trust the amendment of the Senator from Connecticut will be adopted. I found great difficulty in framing an amendment which would bring this question to an issue before this body, and I gladly accept his amendment. As I have said, I desire to frame such legislation as to put into the hands of the President of the United States the means to make it effective, for it is idle to say to him that he may increase the mobile forces of the United States of America to the number of 250,000 men, when we know that we can not now enlist our troops to the present authorized strength of less than half that number.

Mr. HITCHCOCK. Mr. President, I move to amend the amendment proposed by the Senator from Connecticut by substituting "150,000" for "250,000." In doing so, I call attention to the fact that as proposed by the President of the United States as a preparedness measure the limit of the standing army of the United States was placed at 140,000 men, and as passed by the House of Representatives by an almost unanimous vote the limit of the standing army was provided at 140,000 men.

I further call attention, Mr. President, to the fact that this is not a war proposition; this a peace army. The people of the United States have never given to the Congress of the United States any indication that they desire to increase their peace army from what it is now, about 100,000 men, to a peace army of 250,000 men. I have no doubt that the people of the United States will justify a large reserve; I doubt whether a reserve too large can be authorized and provided for by Congress; but when the Congress of the United States, without any mandate from the people of the United States, at one swoop seeks to increase the peace army of the United States from 100,000 men to 250,000 men it is going beyond the public opinion of the United States.

I concur with what the Senator from New Jersey [Mr. HUGHES] has said, that it is impossible to recruit the peace army of the United States to 250,000 men under the law as it stands to-day. Men will not enlist. We have an example before us now; we have been attempting to get 20,000 men under the terms of the present enlistment law, and it has taken, as I recall, nearly four weeks to get 4,000 men.

I believe that the pay of the private should be increased, and I shall offer an amendment at the proper time to increase the pay of the private from $15 a month to $18 a month and to prohibit extra pay for reenlistment. The trouble is now that we are squandering on the Regular Army of the United States nearly $3,000,000 a year in extra pay for men who reenlist and become practically nothing but hired policemen. We should pay our privates enough to induce them to enlist, but we should not permit them to serve more than two years. We should require them then to step back into the reserve and bring in other young men to be trained and disciplined, and in their turn pass into the reserve.

Mr. MYERS. Mr. President, I am very heartily in favor of the amendment offered by the Senator from Nebraska [Mr. HITCHCOCK] to the amendment offered by the Senator from Connecticut [Mr. BRANDEGEE], and I am equally opposed to the amendment offered by the Senator from Connecticut. I do not believe that the masses of the people of this country want a standing Regular Army of a quarter of a million soldiers, nor of 200,000 soldiers, nor of 150,000 soldiers. I think the latter figure is large. I would prefer the figure contained in the House bill, 140,000 men. We have now about 100,000 men, and I think an increase of 40,000 would be ample. However, I shall vote for the amendment of the Senator from Nebraska, which calls for 150,000 men.

Ever since the great European war broke out I have seen flaunted before the Members of this body pictures of what was about to happen to us at the hands of Great Britain and Canada and Germany and Japan and Mexico, and lo, not one of those things has yet happened. The truth of the matter is that to a reader of current events it is plain there is not one scintilla of evidence of the least design or desire upon the part of any of those countries to engage in war with us, and I assert that in time of peace 250,000 men would be too large an army and in time of war it would be too small an army. It fits neither peace nor war times.

Referring to the pictures which have been painted as to what is likely to happen to us at the hands of foreign nations, a few weeks ago, at the time that our punitive expedition started into Mexico, it was predicted on the floor of the Senate that in less than 30 days from that time Francisco Villa would be a hero, marching at the head of an army of 50,000 soldiers to invade the United States, and I supposed, inferentially, from the prediction that our women and children would be taking to the cellars and the men hastily organizing improvised armies to meet and repel him. Francisco Villa has not been acclaimed a hero; he is not marching at the head of an army of 50,000 men. It is doubtful if he is alive to-day. The last that was heard of him, when known to be alive, he was taking to the mountains, with just eight men following and adhering to him.

Mr. KERN. That was not the last we heard of him.

Mr. MYERS. The last we heard of him alive he was taking to the mountains with just eight men, and he was not coming in the direction of the United States, either. So we have no further cause to be alarmed about what Villa may do to us.

I was very severely criticized for expressing on the floor of the Senate a few weeks ago the opinion that the Army which we had was sufficient to cope with a few bandits in Mexico. It was urged then that we needed to hasten in providing a larger Army in order to cope with the situation in Mexico and to punish the bandits in that country. Since then the President of the United States, I understand, has publicly stated that the armed forces at his command are amply sufficient to conduct the punitive expedition into Mexico and to cope with the situation in that country and that he did not need any more soldiers for that purpose, and did not want any more, and had no intention of calling for recruits nor of calling out the National Guard. So my humble opinion, expressed at that time, that our force was sufficient to cope with the situation in Mexico has since then been backed up by no less an authority than the President of the United States, who is the Commander in Chief of the military and naval forces of our country.

I think that if we increase our standing army to 150,000 men, as is proposed by the amendment offered by the Senator from Nebraska [Mr. HITCHCOCK] we will be doing all that is expected of us by the people of this country, and all that is necessary.

Mr. HUGHES. Mr. President, can the Senator tell us how we could expect to increase our standing army to 150,000 when we can not now increase it up to the authorized strength?

Mr. MYERS. I do not object to offering some more inducements for enlistment to a reasonable degree and in reasonable numbers.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The time of the Senator from Montana has expired.

Mr. SUTHERLAND. Mr. President, in my own time, I should like to ask the Senator from Montana a question.

Mr. MYERS. I will respond with pleasure, if I can.

Mr. SUTHERLAND. I understood the Senator from Montana to say that in view of the developments in Mexico we needed no additional force there. Is the Senator aware of the fact that the newspapers say that Gen. Pershing has reported to-day that he can go no farther without a larger force?

Mr. MYERS. I am aware of the fact that the President of the United States has said that he did not need any more forces in Mexico nor on the Mexican border, and he is higher in command than Gen. Pershing, I believe. He is supposed to be, anyway. He is the Commander in Chief of the Army.

Mr. SUTHERLAND. Does the Senator think that the President of the United States, sitting comfortably here in Washington, knows more about what is needed in Mexico in the way of military forces than the general on the ground in command of the forces there?

Mr. MYERS. I think it is apparent to anybody that the mission of our punitive expedition in Mexico is about accomplished. Francisco Villa is either dead or has taken to the mountains with eight followers, and is hiding out to avoid capture by the forces of the United States. If the fifteen or twenty thousand men down there can not capture him, then 250,000 could not capture him in the fastnesses of mountain recesses.

Mr. SUTHERLAND. I want to ask the Senator from Montana how large an army he thinks we need in time of peace?

Mr. MYERS. I would be well satisfied with 150,000, the figure contained in the amendment offered by the Senator from Nebraska. I would be satisfied with 140,000, the figure contained in the House bill.

Mr. SUTHERLAND. What do we need 140,000 for in time of peace?

Mr. MYERS. As a nucleus for an army, in order to have soldiers for internal purposes, and to guard the border, and various other things, such as they have heretofore been kept for.

Mr. SUTHERLAND. A nucleus for what?

Mr. MYERS. An army. We need them for police duty, as the nucleus for an army, and, as I said, for guarding the border and to suppress insurrection—for use in our insular possessions—the very purposes for which the Army has been used for many years past. We can find use for a moderate army at all times, but we have no need for a great standing army in time of peace. An army of 140,000 men can be used in the same way as we have used 100,000.

Mr. LEWIS. Mr. President, I should like the attention of the Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. LODGE]. Before we can vote intelligently on the amendment tendered by the Senator from Connecticut or that tendered to his amendment by the Senator from Nebraska, we ought really to know just what is the condition of our Army and its numerical strength in the United States.

As I gather the reports made to the Senate, somebody is being misled. The Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. LODGE] on March 30 received from the Secretary of War, in response to a resolution presented by the able Senator, a reply setting forth what was supposed to be the present available force for Army purposes.

That reply, no doubt, was given to the Secretary by his subordinate officials, and that reply justified the assertion of the Senator from Massachusetts in his observations that 25,000 men seemed to be the only mobile force we have, exclusive of men who are assigned in our distant outposts. What I wish to call to the attention of the chairman of the Military Affairs Committee and the Senator from Massachusetts is a matter that greatly confuses me now at the threshold of an important vote. It is this: It is impossible for the report of the Secretary of War to be accurate, or it is impossible for the statements that have been coming to the Government in the last 10 years to be accurate. I invite the attention of the Senator from Massachusetts to the following:

In a report to the Senate on October 2, 1905, it was represented to us that we had 58,000 men. In the last 10 years there have been enlisted 226,120. Clearly, then, we have a total of 284,120. Then, taking the report sent by the Secretary of War of the discharged numbers being 67,765, we have as the deduction 216,355. What I should like to ask is, How do we account for those figures, and yet assert before the country that we have but the small number of available men such as the Senator from Massachusetts stated, and which seems borne out by the report lately sent in, on March 30?

Mr. President, if we have these available men, as shown by our records, we do not need this large army presented by the Senator from Connecticut. If, on the other hand, the report as sent to the Senator from Massachusetts is accurate, then there is some justification for asking for their addition.

I should like to ask the Senator from Massachusetts if he has to himself a satisfactory account of what has become of these men who have enlisted in the last 10 years, as shown by our public records?

Mr. LODGE. What has become of the men who have enlisted in the last 10 years is that they have taken the places of those who have been mustered out, and have kept the Army up to such strength as it has. Under the law, we have 100,000 men of all arms—I was speaking roughly—and the figures that I took of 25,000 were those given by the Secretary of War a year ago, and we have not changed our force since then. Of course, we have added 20,000 for this special trouble in Mexico, who have not been recruited, and do not appear in the forces. The extent of the American Army under the law at the present time is 100,000 men and one-third goes out every year and has to be replaced; but the Army is 100,000 men, and that gives a mobile force of 25,000, according to the statements of both Secretaries of War.

Mr. LEWIS. Mr. President, I must reply to the able Senator that the men discharged, to whom he alludes, figure altogether, upon the reports of the department, 67,765. That subtracted from 284,120 would leave still 216,355 on the records as available.

Mr. LODGE. That is, the Senator means for the period of 10 years.

Mr. LEWIS. In the last 10 years; yes.

Mr. LODGE. A third of the Army goes out every year. There are the deaths, the casualties, and the other causes of vacancies. I think the Senator will find, if he divides the number added, that they have been about sufficient to keep our force at what the law provides, which is 100,000.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The time of the Senator from Illinois has expired.

Mr. CHAMBERLAIN. Mr. President, I am not going to take any time to address the Senate on the condition of the Army; but I direct the Senator's attention to the report of The Adjutant General of the Army for 1915. There is not any question about the number of men; and there is set out at length not only the number of men but the number discharged by reason of finishing their terms of enlistment, disabilities, and otherwise. The Senator will find it all set out in that report.

Mr. SHEPPARD. Mr. President, I desire to ask the Senator from Connecticut, the author of the amendment, a question. Is the force of 250,000 men provided in his amendment a minimum peace strength, or a mere increase of the maximum provided in this bill?

Mr. BRANDEGEE. I will say to the Senator that the amendment as printed was modified by me before the Secretary read it, and he had better have the Secretary state it again. If the Senator wants to repeat his question to me, however, I will answer it.

Mr. SHEPPARD. I presumed that the Senator could answer it.

Mr. BRANDEGEE. What was it?

Mr. SHEPPARD. I asked, Is the force of 250,000 men provided for in the Senator's amendment a minimum peace strength, or is it a mere increase of the maximum provided in the Army bill?

Mr. BRANDEGEE. It provides that the total number can not exceed 250,000 except in time of war or special emergency.

Mr. SHEPPARD. Then, as I understand the matter, the Senator's amendment does not contemplate an immediate enlistment of 250,000 men?

Mr. BRANDEGEE. It would leave it to the President, so that if he thought he needed more and wanted to increase it to that limit, and organize some special extra units of Cavalry and Infantry, he could do it; but it is not compulsory. It leaves it where the committee left it, only it allows it to be increased to 250,000 if the President sees fit.

Mr. SHEPPARD. It leaves the minimum peace strength where the committee has left it?

Mr. BRANDEGEE. Yes.

Mr. SHEPPARD. I thank the Senator.

Mr. BRANDEGEE. Except that it excludes from the computation the Philippine Scouts and the Quartermaster Corps and the Medical Corps, because they are not fighting men.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is on the amendment of the Senator from Nebraska [Mr. HITCHCOCK] to the amendment of the Senator from Connecticut [Mr. BRANDEGEE].

Mr. LODGE. Let us have the yeas and nays.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. Just one moment, Mr. President. I wish to give the Senate the figures of the cost of 150,000 additional soldiers. Including the second lieutenants, first lieutenants, and captains, as well as the noncommissioned officers for such an organization, the total would be, annually, $35,200,000. Fifty thousand, of course, would be one-third of that. So, as I gather the figures, we can for the next few years increase the Regular Army to 250,000 men from 100,000, with an expenditure of but little over $35,000,000 a year.

This expense does seem small compared with the practical results. I have little faith in any first line or substantial line except from the Regular Army. As I have said before, I have very little faith in the summer encampments. I do not believe the provision for them will go into the bill. With the Senate practically evenly divided upon this subject, and with the House almost unanimously against it, we can consider that element of expense, ranging from $24,000,000 to $42,000,000 annually, out of our budget. These 150,000 men would not cost us over $35,000,000 a year, or only just a shade over that. It is not militarism. It is a practical, simple, business proposition to have them, and to have them at once. If we do not need them for war, we will train these boys during the next two years for peace; and if we do need them for something else, the training they have had will enable us to have a reasonably decent first line upon our shore.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is on the amendment of the Senator from Nebraska [Mr. HITCHCOCK] to the amendment of the Senator from Connecticut [Mr. BRANDEGEE].

Mr. HITCHCOCK and Mr. LODGE called for the yeas and nays, and they were ordered.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Secretary will call the roll.

The Secretary proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. BRADY (when his name was called). I have a general pair with the senior Senator from Florida [Mr. FLETCHER]. He is not in the Chamber, and I therefore withhold my vote.

Mr. CHILTON (when his name was called). Announcing my pair and its transfer as before, I vote "nay."

Mr. ROBINSON (when the name of Mr. CLARKE of Arkansas was called). My colleague [Mr. CLARKE of Arkansas] is absent from the Chamber because of illness.

Mr. COLT (when his name was called). Although I have a pair with the junior Senator from Delaware [Mr. SAULSBURY], I am at liberty to vote on this matter. I vote "nay."

Mr. SUTHERLAND (when his name was called). I have a pair with the senior Senator from Arkansas [Mr. CLARKE], who is absent. I transfer that pair to the junior Senator from New Mexico [Mr. CATRON] and will vote. I vote "nay."

Mr. WILLIAMS (when his name was called). Repeating the announcement made on the last roll call, I vote "nay."

The roll call was concluded.

Mr. CURTIS. I have been requested to announce the following pairs:

The Senator from West Virginia [Mr. GOFF] with the Senator from South Carolina [Mr. TILLMAN]; and

The Senator from Michigan [Mr. TOWNSEND] with the Senator from Florida [Mr. BRYAN].

The result was announced—yeas 13, nays 66, as follows:

YEAS—13.

Gronna	Myers	Robinson	Works
Hitchcock	Norris	Stone
La Follette	Overman	Swanson
Lewis	Reed	Vardaman

NAYS—66.

Ashurst	Gallinger	McLean	Smith, Md.

NOT VOTING—17.

Brady	Fletcher	Newlands	Tillman
Bryan	Goff	Owen	Townsend
Catron	Gore	Penrose
Clarke, Ark.	Lea, Tenn.	Saulsbury
Fall	Martin, Va.	Shields

So Mr. HITCHCOCK's amendment to the amendment of Mr. BRANDEGEE was rejected.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question recurs on the amendment offered by the Senator from Connecticut [Mr. BRANDEGEE] to the amendment.

Mr. VARDAMAN. I ask for the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered, and the Secretary proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. COLT (when his name was called). Making the same announcement I did before in regard to my pair, I vote "yea."

Mr. SWANSON (when the name of Mr. MARTIN of Virginia was called). I desire to state that my colleague [Mr. MARTIN of Virginia] has been called from the Senate unavoidably by business. If he were present he would vote "nay."

Mr. SUTHERLAND (when his name was called). I again announce my pair and its transfer as on the previous vote and vote "yea."

Mr. TILLMAN (when his name was called). Announcing the same transfer of my pair that I did before, I vote "nay."

Mr. WILLIAMS (when his name was called). I have a standing pair with the senior Senator from Pennsylvania [Mr. PENROSE]. Understanding from his colleague that if he were present he would vote as I am about to vote, I vote "yea."

The roll call was concluded.

Mr. BRADY. I have a general pair with the senior Senator from Florida [Mr. FLETCHER]. He is absent from the Senate and I therefore withhold my vote.

Mr. CHILTON. I wish to make the same announcement as to my pair that I did before. I vote "yea."

Mr. SMITH of Michigan. I wish the RECORD to show that my colleague [Mr. TOWNSEND] is absent on account of illness in his family. My colleague is paired with the Senator from Florida [Mr. BRYAN].

Mr. ROBINSON. I wish to announce that my colleague [Mr. CLARKE of Arkansas] is absent from the Chamber on account of illness. He is paired with the Senator from Utah [Mr. SUTHERLAND].

The result was announced—yeas 43, nays 37, as follows:

YEAS—43.

Ashurst	Harding	McLean	Simmons
Brandegee	Hardwick	Martine, N. J.	Smith, Ariz.
Broussard	Hughes	Nelson	Smith, Ga.

Catron	Goff	Newlands	Smoot
Clarke, Ark.	Gore	Penrose	Townsend

So Mr. BRANDEGEE's amendment to the amendment was agreed to.

Mr. CHAMBERLAIN. Some days ago I offered an amendment fixing the minimum strength at 180,000. It was never acted on. I desire to withdraw that amendment.

Mr. OWEN. Mr. President, I offer the following amendment.

The VICE PRESIDENT. It will be stated.

The SECRETARY. After the colon, line 5, page 114, insert the following proviso:

Provided, however, That the total number of medical commissioned officers may be increased upon the orders of the President proportionately distributed so that the number shall be approximately equal to 7 for every 1,000 of the total enlisted strength of the Army authorized from time to time by law.

Mr. OWEN. Mr. President, on April 14 the Secretary of War, Mr. Baker, wrote a letter to Mr. HAY in which he stated that he had altered his attitude with regard to this matter. I should like to have that letter printed in the RECORD. The substance of it is that he approved the action of the House providing for seven.

The letter referred to is as follows:

APRIL 14, 1916.

MY DEAR MR. HAY: I have your letter of April 10th with regard to the comment made by me on the provisions of H. R. 12766, Sixty-fourth Congress, touching the number of commissioned officers provided therein for the Medical Department of the Army. Gen. Gorgas and I have considered this subject again, and, in view of the figures used by you in estimating the number of enlisted men, we are both satisfied that the provisions of the bill are not open to the criticism made in my previous letter.

Thanking you for your generous attention in this matter, I am,
Very sincerely, yours,

NEWTON D. BAKER,
Secretary of War.

Hon. JAMES HAY,
Chairman Committee on Military Affairs,
House of Representatives.

The War College in November, 1915, issued a statement with regard to sanitary troops in foreign armies, in which the following appears:

A study of the war tables of foreign armies shows that an average proportion of 4 officers and 52 enlisted men of the sanitary forces per thousand of total strength are prescribed for duty directly with troops in the zone of advance. The proportion for duty in the other two zones is not prescribed definitely, but a general outline is given of the personnel required for each of the several units. Experience has shown, however, that a slightly smaller proportion is required for duty on lines of communications than for duty in the zone of advance and a much greater proportion for duty in the zone of the interior.

So the quotation from page 57 of that same document which has been read in the debates, which would indicate that foreign countries have a smaller proportion than is provided in this bill, is an error. In point of fact, they have a much larger number when you consider the lines of communication and the lines at the base. The objection, however, to the present form of the bill is that it is a fixed number, whereas when the troops are increased in number the provision for medical officers ought to be proportionately increased. Therefore I have suggested this amendment, which provides for a proportionate increase as the number of enlisted men may be increased by seven.

Mr. President, in the tables of organization prepared by the General Staff, on page 19, for a division of 20,000 men, there are 99 medical officers for the zone of advance. On page 40 and page 41 the line of communication provides for 23 for the medical base group and 34 for the medical advance group dealing with the line of communication. This number added to the 99 provided for the line of advance makes a total of approximately 7 medical officers to the thousand of enlisted men.

I think the number ought to be 7; I think that the Medical Service should be kept proportion to the number of enlisted men, and that this ought to be the standing order under the law. This is permissive and gives the President the right to enlarge the number to 7 as the number of enlisted men may be increased.

For that reason I offer this amendment.

Mr. CHAMBERLAIN. That is the same amendment the Senator offered yesterday?

Mr. OWEN. It is similar; it is not exactly the same.

Mr. CHAMBERLAIN. For the same reasons which I gave yesterday I feel that the Medical Corps is large enough as it is fixed by the House. It is 5.3 per thousand.

Mr. OWEN. I call the Senator's attention to the fact that the Secretary of War, who was quoted yesterday by the Senator, has disclaimed his former attitude and approves the number fixed by the House.

Mr. CHAMBERLAIN. If that is true, the letter of the Secretary of War sent me on the subject—the one I had put in the RECORD yesterday—is practically recalled, and he sends a letter down that the Senator has just mentioned. But notwithstanding and with all due respect to the opinion of the Secretary of War, I feel that the Medical Corps is plenty large, and I hope the Senate will retain it as the Senate committee fixed it—that is, at 5.3 per thousand men.

Mr. OWEN. Would the Senator accept this amendment if 7 were stricken out and 5.3 inserted?

Mr. CHAMBERLAIN. What would be the material change?

Mr. OWEN. The material change would be that the President could then, if the number of enlisted men were enlarged by statute, enlarge correspondingly the medical force.

Mr. CHAMBERLAIN. If the Senator will fix the same proportion that was in the House bill, I have no objection.

Mr. OWEN. That is what I am proposing—that it shall be 5.3, as the Senator said.

Mr. CHAMBERLAIN. That will be all right. I have no objection to it.

Mr. OWEN. I am glad to accept that amendment.

Mr. HITCHCOCK. Mr. President, I should like to ask the Senator from Oklahoma, just as I have asked a number of physicians who have called upon me urging me to support an increase in the number of medical officers of the Army, what is the proportion in civil life? Every physician I have talked to says that it is about 1 physician to 800 or 900 people in every town. If that is sufficient in civil life, why is it necessary in the Army to have five or even seven per thousand?

Mr. OWEN. The answer to that is that the Army when it goes into the field is exposed to very insanitary conditions. The Army may go into an engagement and 25 per cent of the men may be disabled by a sudden attack, and provision must be made to take care of them. More than that, I call the attention of the Senator to a statement which is made by the National Sanitary Commission, in which they state that 600,000 people die in this country annually because of neglect.

Mr. GALLINGER. Mr. President, in my own time I want to ask the Senator from Oklahoma if I understand the chairman of the committee to agree with the Senator from Oklahoma upon a certain proportion?

Mr. OWEN. Provided it is reduced to 5.3, as the committee estimated.

Mr. GALLINGER. I want simply to say that I have had a great many letters from very distinguished surgeons who have served in the Army, Dr. W. W. Keane, of Philadelphia, one of the greatest surgeons of the country among the number, complaining that the proportion is too small as it was provided for in the Senate committee bill. I am very glad indeed the Senator from Oklahoma has succeeded in adjusting the matter so that I think it will be more satisfactory to the profession and better for our soldiers in the field.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Oklahoma modify his amendment?

Mr. OWEN. Yes; by striking out "seven" and inserting "five and three-tenths."

The VICE PRESIDENT. Without objection, the amendment to the amendment will be agreed to as modified.

Mr. HUSTING. I offer the following amendment.

The VICE PRESIDENT. It will be read.

The SECRETARY. On page 121, line 22, insert the following proviso:

Provided, That in the appointment of chaplains of the Regular Army preference and priority shall be given to applicant veterans, if otherwise duly qualified, and who shall not have passed the age of 41 years at the time of application, who have rendered honorable war service in the Army of the United States, or who have been honorably discharged from any such army.

Mr. CHAMBERLAIN. Mr. President, I am willing to accept that amendment.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Without objection, the amendment is agreed to.

Mr. LANE. Mr. President, I have an amendment, which I introduced yesterday, which I should like to submit at this time. I ask that it be read by the Secretary.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The amendment proposed by the Senator from Oregon will be stated.

The SECRETARY. The proposed amendment is as follows:

On page 105, line 12, after the word "States," insert "the national defense army."

On page 161, after line 9, strike out sections 57, 58, 59, 60, 61, 62, 63, 64, and 65, and insert the following:

"SEC. 57. National defense army: That there is hereby created and established a body of men to be known and designated as the national defense army, to be composed of 2,000,000 men to be chosen and enlisted as hereinafter provided, which force may be increased from time to time as Congress may provide.

"SEC. 58. That such national defense army shall consist of men capable and efficient and fitted to perform manual labor in the construction of roads and reclamation, or other public works.

"SEC. 59. That they shall be enlisted in increments of 200,000 for the service of a term of six months, under rules and regulations to be prepared by the Secretary of the Interior, and may not be reenlisted, except in case of war, for a period of five years after their final discharge, or the end of the six months' period of enlistment.

"SEC. 60. That when the national defense army is called upon, as hereinafter provided, to undergo military training, it shall be under the supervision and control of the War Department, under rules and regulations to be provided by the Secretary of War.

"SEC. 61. That, as a constructive force, the Secretary of the Interior shall, except for such time as they are required to render military service as hereinafter provided for, employ the members of said national-defense army wherever he may direct in the forestry, reclamation, construction of roads, and other public works, and shall construct storage and service reservoirs for the protection of lands from overflow, for the drainage of submerged lands, the irrigation of arid or semiarid lands needing irrigation in order to be successfully cultivated, for the construction of military roads and other public roads and, generally, for the protection, reclamation, and cultivation of lands and works necessary for the improvement of the rivers and harbors of the country, and such other public works as the said Secretary shall elect for which Congress may make appropriations.

"SEC. 62. That members of said national defense army, while thus employed in the public service as constructive workers, shall be paid the same rate of compensation or wage which prevails in the section of the country in which they are employed for similar work: Provided, That they shall be given steady employment for the full period of enlistment: Provided further, That in the construction of roads, other than purely military roads constructed for defensive purposes, preference shall be given to those States which agree with the Secretary of the Interior to pay a mutually agreed upon percentage of the cost of such work.

"SEC. 63. That for two days each week, or 52 days in each six months' period, the said national defense army shall undergo such military training as may be provided for by the Secretary of War, under rules and regulations prescribed by him, and he shall provide all necessary officers and equipment for such training.

"SEC. 64. That whenever the members of said national defense army shall be so employed and under military training, in the event of war they shall constitute a part of the United States Army and shall be exclusively under the direction and control of the War Department, in all respects the same as any part of the regular standing army of the United States. The officers of said reserve shall be appointed and shall rank the same as officers in the regular standing army.

"SEC. 65. That the Secretary of the Interior and the Secretary of War are hereby directed to submit annually to Congress reports in detail showing expenditures made and results accomplished by said national defense army."

Mr. LANE. Mr. President, my amendment seems to have attracted so much general attention from the Senate that I feel complimented. If the amendment is carried, this country will at least have something of value left long after the expenditure has been made, and will also have provided an Army. It will have a larger Army and a better-trained Army, and in the long run it will have cost the country less money. It will provide for improvements of different kinds throughout the United States. It will be a benefit to the South, the North, the East, and the West.

It is my opinion, Mr. President—and I think that opinion is held by others—that, notwithstanding we have expended millions upon millions and hundreds of millions of dollars in the past in the way of preparing this country for defense, expenditures which have been made both for the Army and the Navy—despite that fact, we are absolutely unprepared for war or for the defense of our country. To-day the report comes from Mexico that Gen. Pershing is unable to go farther in his search for Villa, for the reason that his communications are being cut by snipers. The Congress has authorized the President to call for volunteers to help him out in that unpleasant hunt, and we have secured, I believe, about 5,000 volunteers, while the call was made for 20,000.

People are not going to enthuse over the committee's bill; they are going to refuse to volunteer. If they do enlist and we spend the money provided in the measure, we will not have men sufficiently trained to make efficient soldiers. This will be a waste of money, in my opinion. I make no criticism of the members of the Military Committee, but I regret that they did not consider this plan, which has been suggested by myself—the better plan, in my opinion—which will enlist speedily an army sufficient in numbers and with training sufficient, and rapidly attained, that the country will be in a position to defend itself within six months with 400,000 or 500,000 men, if we want to enlist that many; but not less than 250,000 men, who will have more training in six months than they will acquire in a year from the bill which it is now proposed to pass. They will have made public improvements which will be of permanent value, which will be worth dollar for dollar for the money expended upon them, and which improvements will be left for all time for the use and the benefit of the people of this country.

The people of this country are to pay the expense incurred in training and creating the army provided for in this bill, but they will get nothing back—nothing whatever, except burnt gunpowder, empty cartridge shells, and half-trained soldiers. Under the method suggested by my amendment they will have reclaimed lands, good highways, and other beneficial things, for the want of which the country is suffering at this time, and well-trained men.

Inasmuch as the hearing is soon to close, I submit the amendment without further remarks, but I would like to have a yea-and-nay vote upon it on its merits.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Senator from Oregon demands the yeas and nays. Is the demand seconded? [A pause.] Not a sufficient number have risen, and the yeas and nays are not ordered. The question is on the amendment proposed by the Senator from Oregon.

The amendment was rejected.

Mr. HUGHES. Mr. President, I offer the amendment which I send to the desk.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The amendment proposed by the Senator from New Jersey will be stated.

The SECRETARY. At the end of the paragraph providing for the pay of enlisted men, on page 143, it is proposed to strike out the last sentence and in lieu thereof to insert:

Hereafter the pay of an enlisted man, whether in his first enlistment or in any reenlistment, shall be $25 per month, and no extra pay shall be given to men who have reenlisted: Provided, however, That those who have reenlisted prior to the passage of this act shall receive the same pay as now provided by law to the end of their present term of enlistment.

Mr. HUGHES. Mr. President, the object of this amendment is to make workable the amendment offered by the Senator from Connecticut [Mr. BRANDEGEE]. Of course it is idle to authorize the President to recruit the regular establishment up to a strength of 250,000 enlisted men if it is impossible at this time, on account of the unattractive nature of the service, to fill the present authorized quota of about 100,000 men.

There are many ways in which the service can be made more attractive than it now is. One of the ways is to increase the pay of the enlisted men. I want to impress upon Senators the fact that the amount that a private soldier receives from the paymaster at the end of the month is not a trifling matter in his mind. Agricultural laborers are paid more than $25 a month and their board, and there is no reason why in a country like ours we should not pay men who are expected, at the command of their superior officers, to go into the field and risk their lives at least as well as we pay agricultural laborers.

It has often been said that the enlisted force of the United States Army are the best-paid soldiers in the world. Perhaps that was formerly true, and in many respects it is true now, but it is not wholly true in comparison with the soldiers of some of the countries who are serving to-day. As I recall the figures, the Canadian soldiers now receive something like $20 a month for their own services and something like a dollar a day for "separation allowance," as it is called. Separation allowances are paid also to the soldiers of various other armies now in the field; so that the compensation the American soldiers now receive is in many cases less than one-third of what is being paid to the European forces.

In time of peace the only army that can be compared with our Army is the army of Great Britain, because the compulsory-service system does not exist in either country; and yet, when we compare the rate of wages paid the British soldier with the rate of wages paid the British artisan, and the rate of wages paid the American soldier as contrasted with the rate of wages paid to the American artisan, we find that there is a difference in favor of the British soldier of from 50 to 75 per cent. Despite the fact that in actual money we pay the United States soldier in time of peace more than the soldier of any other nation is paid in time of peace, in comparison with the prevailing rate of wages in the United States he is paid far less than the only other soldier with whom he can be compared, and that is the soldier of the British Army.

A great deal has been done in the closing hours of this debate to improve the pending bill. We have made it possible for the President of the United States to summon to the colors, under proper provisions with relation to reserves, a force of 250,000 men, a force which, in my opinion, is none too large for a Nation of 100,000,000 people; a force which constitutes the first line of defense of this country on land; a force behind which we can sit and listen to the debates while we make up our minds as to the proper method of supplementing that force by way of reserves and by way of the utilization of the National Guard.

Furthermore, we have included in this bill a provision for vocational training, which, in my judgment, will do more than any other one thing to make the regular service attractive; we have provided for a term of two years with the colors and three years in the reserve, which will send back a vast body of men from the ranks of the Regular Army to the civilian walks of life in this country.

The Senator from Colorado [Mr. THOMAS] has offered an amendment, which, I hope, will operate to prevent discrimination against the uniform of the enlisted man in the naval and military forces of the United States and to bring to an end a condition which has long been a disgrace and which is calculated to bring the blush of shame to every American citizen who contemplates the present position occupied by the enlisted men of our naval and military forces.

Mr. OVERMAN. Mr. President, may I ask the Senator a question in my time?

Mr. HUGHES. Certainly.

Mr. OVERMAN. Has the Senator made any estimate as to the additional cost the increase of pay will involve?

The VICE PRESIDENT. The time of the Senator from New Jersey has expired.

Mr. OVERMAN. I am asking the question in my time.

Mr. HUGHES. I will say to the Senator that I have made an estimate, but my estimate is more or less of a guess. I suggest that the Senator ask, in his own time, the same question of the Senator from Oregon, the chairman of the Committee on Military Affairs.

Mr. OVERMAN. How many million dollars more does the Senator think it will cost?

Mr. HUGHES. It will increase the pay of the private soldier $3 a month. The Senator can make his own calculation.

Mr. OVERMAN. It would add about $25,000,000 more annually, would it not, or something over $2,000,000 a month?

Mr. HUGHES. It will add about what it is proposed to pay to the National Guard.

Mr. OVERMAN. The added expenditure will be about $25,000,000 more, will it not?

Mr. HUGHES. I will say in the Senator's time, if he will permit me, that it will get us an army, which is what we are supposed to be trying to provide at this time.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is on the amendment of the Senator from New Jersey [Mr. HUGHES] to the amendment reported by the committee.

Mr. CHAMBERLAIN. Mr. President, I do not think that amendment ought to be hastily acted upon. It involves an additional expenditure of about $75,000,000 for the enlisted men, and to show that the amendment has not even received the consideration of the Senator himself, I will say that it reduces the pay of some men. There are enlisted men now who are getting more than $25 a month; some are getting as high as $75 a month.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. It will involve an increase of about $30,000,000.

Mr. CHAMBERLAIN. I will not stop to figure on it, Mr. President, but I do hope the Senate will not consider the amendment seriously. The talk about the enlisted man faring so badly at the hands of the Government is not well founded. He is clothed, he is fed, he is housed, he has everything on earth that a man needs in order to get along nicely in this world, and then he receives $15 a month. There are very few laboring men in this country who make any more than that over the cost of their living. There are few people in this country who live as well as the enlisted men. The ration list was published here a few days ago, and I venture to say that they fare as well as most of the Members of the United States Senate. I do not think, therefore, that they are entitled to so much consideration as the Senator contends.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is on the amendment proposed by the Senator from New Jersey [Mr. HUGHES].

The amendment was rejected.

Mr. TILLMAN. I offer the amendment which I send to the desk and ask to have it read.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The amendment will be stated.

The SECRETARY. It is proposed to amend section 119, page 196, by adding, after the word "district," in the amendment already agreed to, on line 14, after the word "force," the following proviso:

Provided, That each State, Territory, of District maintaining a naval militia as herein prescribed may be credited to the extent of the number thereof in the quota that would otherwise be required by section 62 of this act.

Mr. CHAMBERLAIN. I have no objection to that amendment.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Without objection, the amendment to the amendment is agreed to.

Mr. LEWIS. I desire to tender an amendment, and ask to have it read and submitted to a vote upon the argument which has previously been made. I do not wish to take the time of the Senate to make an address upon the amendment. That may commend it favorably to the consideration of the Senate.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The amendment to the amendment will be stated.

The SECRETARY. After section 13 it is proposed to insert the following:

SEC. —. That the Secretary of War is hereby authorized and directed to purchase or erect, maintain, and operate no less than four munition factories at four different points, two of which shall be between the Allegheny and Rocky Mountains, all to be selected by the Secretary of War, for the purpose of manufacturing war munitions and war supplies for the use of the Army and the Navy of the United States.

SEC. —. That for the purpose of carrying out the provisions of the preceding section of this act the sum of $20,000,000, or so much thereof as may be necessary, is hereby appropriated out of any money in the Treasury of the United States not otherwise appropriated.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is on agreeing to the amendment to the amendment.

The amendment to the amendment was rejected.

Mr. JONES. Mr. President, I desire to offer an amendment to come in on page 143.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The amendment to the amendment will be stated.

The SECRETARY. On page 143, lines 21 and 22, it is proposed to strike out the words "transportation in kind and subsistence as now provided," and insert "allowances provided."

Mr. JONES. Mr. President, I simply call the attention of the chairman of the committee to the effect of the amendment. As the bill reads now when an enlisted man is sent to the reserves the bill provides that—

He shall be paid in full to the date such furlough becomes effective, including transportation in kind and subsistence as now provided by law for discharged soldiers.

My amendment simply provides that he shall get whatever allowances are provided by law. I do not see why he should not be permitted to have the mileage that we allow to a discharged soldier, if he sees fit to accept it. I take it the chairman of the committee will probably have no objection to the amendment. It simply gives a soldier sent to the reserves just what an enlisted man gets on discharge.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is on agreeing to the amendment offered by the Senator from Washington to the amendment reported by the committee.

The amendment to the amendment was agreed to.

Mr. LEWIS. Mr. President, I desire to tender an amendment similar to the one presented by me a few moments ago, but eliminating the appropriation. I ask to have the amendment submitted to a vote.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The amendment to the amendment will be stated.

The SECRETARY. After section 13, it is proposed to insert the following as a new section:

SEC. —. That the Secretary of War is hereby authorized and directed to purchase or erect, maintain, and operate no less than four munition factories at four different points, two of which shall be between the Allegheny and Rocky Mountains, all to be selected by the Secretary of War, for the purpose of manufacturing war munitions and war supplies for the use of the Army and Navy of the United States.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is on agreeing to the amendment of the Senator from Illinois to the amendment reported by the committee.

The amendment to the amendment was rejected.

Mr. WADSWORTH. Mr. President, I offer the amendment which I send to the desk.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The amendment to the amendment will be stated.

The SECRETARY. On page 145, line 8, after the semicolon, it is proposed to insert:

And he may summon the Regular Army reserve, or any part thereof, for field training for a period not exceeding 15 days in each year, the reservists to receive travel expenses and pay at the rate of their respective grade in the Regular Army during such periods of training.

Mr. CHAMBERLAIN. Mr. President, may I ask the Senator if that is only in the discretion of the President?

Mr. WADSWORTH. It is permissive, Mr. President.

Mr. CHAMBERLAIN. I do not object to that, then.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is on agreeing to the amendment of the Senator from New York to the amendment of the committee.

The amendment to the amendment was agreed to.

Mr. CHILTON. Mr. President, on page 142, line 19, after the word "Artillery," I move to insert "sergeant, Medical Corps." The simple effect of the amendment is that the sergeants in the Army Medical Corps will get $36 a month instead of $30 a month, which they now receive.

I do not want to take the time of the Senate any further than to say this: At the hearings before the Senate committee one of the witnesses was Gen. Gorgas. On page 702 he set forth the reasons why this amendment should be made to the bill, why the sergeants of the Medical Corps should receive the same salary as the other sergeants.

I know very little about the Army, Mr. President. I do not profess to know anything about it. I scarcely know the duties of these men. I am simply trying to make this part of the bill come up to the recommendations of Gen. Gorgas as I read them on page 702 of the hearings. However, all of us do know that the difficult work of the Army, as a rule, is in the Medical Corps, and Gen. Gorgas in his testimony set forth the reasons why it is difficult to get competent men to remain in that corps. It is because they are discriminated against in the matter of salary.

I do not think we should do that. I think those who attend to the dead and the sick and the dying should certainly receive compensation equal to what the others in the Army receive in the same grade.

That is all I want to say. I hope the chairman of the committee will accept the amendment.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is on agreeing to the amendment of the Senator from West Virginia to the amendment of the committee.

The amendment to the amendment was agreed to.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. Mr. President, I desire to offer an amendment to section 111.

Mr. CHILTON. What page?

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. Page 191, line 16. In order that the amendment which I offer may be better understood, as it follows a section, I will read the section and the amendment following it:

SEC. 111. No money appropriated under the provisions of this act for the National Guard shall be paid to any person not on the active list of the National Guard, except as provided in section 80 of this act, nor to any person who fails to qualify as to fitness for military service, under such regulations as the Secretary of War may prescribe.

The amendment which I offer is to follow the word "prescribe" before the period, and is as follows:

Nor to any State, Territory, or District, or officer, or enlisted man in the National Guard thereof, unless and until such State, Territory, or District provides by law that staff officers, including officers of the Pay, Subsistence, and Medical Departments, hereafter appointed, shall have had previous military experience, and shall hold their positions until they shall have reached the age of 64 years, unless retired prior to that time by reason of resignation, disability, or for cause to be determined by a court-martial legally convened for that purpose, and that vacancies among said officers shall be filled by appointment from the officers of the militia of such State.

Mr. President, we are about to appropriate in this bill a very large amount of money for the National Guard. That guard now receives from six to seven million dollars annually. It is proposed here that it shall receive at the maximum some $46,000,000 or $47,000,000 from the Treasury of the Federal Government, to be paid by taxes upon the people upon what they eat, use, and wear.

Mr. President, no one can justify voting that large expenditure to be bestowed upon any arm of the military service excepting it be upon an assurance that the people of this country are to receive efficient service. The value of the National Guard depends largely upon the stability of its organization. If it is made subject to all the political changes which occur in the vicissitudes of State politics, if the staff officers and the officers that give character to the organization are changed with every change in the political organization of the State, you can not make it an organization of real military value.

A day or two ago I referred to the high rank of the National Guard of Wisconsin. I said at that time that I did not know exactly what its rank was or is, but that I did know that it had attained a very high place among the guards of the various States. Since then I have informed myself. It stands, and has for years stood, at the head of the National Guards of this country, Mr. President. In field efficiency it has, and has had for many years, not only no superior, but I am told by the War Department that it stands quite by itself.

I have here one of the reports for 1912, in which I read on page 42—this is a report relative to the Organized Militia of the United States:

Wisconsin has for years been recognized as the leader in the Organized Militia in all that goes to make for efficiency in field service; and the care given to Federal property in that State, as indicated by the table, is only one of the means by which she has gained, and still maintains, her leadership.

Mr. President, the head of the National Guard in Wisconsin, Mr. Charles R. Boardman, was connected with the Wisconsin Militia for a great many years, coming up from the ranks. He joined shortly after graduation from the university, where he received two years of military training. From the records available I find that he was commissioned as a major in the National Guard in 1882, and continued in service until he retired. He was appointed adjutant general with the rank of brigadier general on January 4, 1897, and retired at the age of 64 in 1914, a period of 17 years. It is due to the fact that this man, and those subordinate to him in the organization of the guard, maintained their places at the head of the guard through all those years; that it has been established in its position of leadership among the militia of the States of the Union.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The time of the Senator from Wisconsin has expired.

Mr. BRANDEGEE. Mr. President, as I heard the Senator read his amendment rather hastily—I did not follow it entirely—I am inclined to think it is a good amendment. I should like to have the Secretary state it again.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Secretary will state the amendment to the amendment.

The SECRETARY. On page 191, section 111, line 16, before the period, it is proposed to insert a comma and the following words:

Nor to any State, Territory, or District, or officer, or enlisted men in the National Guard thereof, unless and until such State, Territory, or District provides by law that staff officers, including officers of the Pay, Subsistence, and Medical Departments, hereafter appointed, shall have had previous military experience, and shall hold their positions until they shall have reached the age of 64 years, unless retired prior to that time by reason of resignation, disability, or for cause to be determined by a court-martial legally convened for that purpose, and that vacancies among said officers shall be filled by appointment from the officers of the militia of such State.

Mr. CHAMBERLAIN. Mr. President, I move to strike out the 64-year age limit.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. Mr. President, I desire to be heard for five minutes upon that, because that is the heart of the whole proposition.

This amendment simply provides that we incorporate in the bill the provisions of law with respect to the tenure of the Regular Army officers, and make those applicable to officers of the National Guard. Upon this largely depends the efficiency which can be attained by the guard. It will place the guard where it will not be the football of politics. It will assure that there shall not be a change of National Guard officers whenever there is a change of administration. These officers should be removed only for cause, as stated in the amendment.

In the State of Wisconsin we enacted a statute, and as nearly as we could do so made it conform to the regulations of the Regular Army with respect to tenure of office, and the officers of the National Guard in that State continue in service until they arrive at the age of 64 years, unless retired for cause. I know of no other reason why we have been able to build up and maintain so high a grade of service in the guard in that State excepting that we retain capable and efficient officers. There have been changes of administration. Except for that statute there would have been changes in the official head and in all of the important positions. Such changes would have been detrimental. The officers have not changed. The same adjutant general protected by that statute continued at the head of the National Guard for 17 years. As a result, Mr. President, as the report of the department says, that State guard is at the head of all the organizations of that character in this country.

We are voting in this bill an immense sum of money to the National Guard. We have no justification for making such an appropriation unless we are to make the guard a strong arm of our military organization, and you can not make it strong if you permit the head of the organization to be changed every two or four years, as the changes of politics may happen to dictate.

Mr. CHAMBERLAIN. Mr. President, I withdraw my amendment to the amendment of the Senator from Wisconsin.

Mr. SUTHERLAND. Mr. President, I think the amendment proposed by the Senator from Wisconsin [Mr. LA FOLLETTE] is a good amendment and ought to be adopted, but I desire to ask him a question about it.

The provision is that these allowances shall not be paid until and unless the law which is described in the provision shall be passed by the legislature of the Territory or State or District. Now, I call the Senator's attention to the fact that a time will elapse which will be of greater——

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. I beg the Senator's pardon; it applies only to officers hereafter appointed, not to officers who are already in. Every State in this Union will have a legislative assembly within the next year, and can meet the requirements of this provision by legislation.

Mr. SUTHERLAND. That was the point I had in my mind.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. Yes; it applies only to those who are to be appointed hereafter.

Mr. SUTHERLAND. Very well; that is satisfactory to me.

Mr. BORAH. Mr. President, this amendment is so manifestly wise that it seems to me it should be adopted without any division of the Senate. I want to take this occasion, however, not to discuss the amendment but to ask permission to insert in the RECORD, as bearing upon the subject—without asking to have it read, thereby consuming time—the report of the minority in 1912 upon what is known as the militia pay bill. I ask to have it inserted without reading.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Without objection, it will be so ordered.

The matter referred to is as follows:

[House Report No. 1117, pt. 2, 62d Cong., 3d sess.]

MILITIA PAY BILL.

Mr. SLAYDEN, from the Committee on Military Affairs, submitted the following views of the minority.

Mr. SLAYDEN, from the Committee on Military Affairs, submitted the following report as the views of the minority on H. R. 8141:

The legislation proposed by the Committee on Military Affairs as a substitute for the bill (H. R. 8141), "to further increase the efficiency of the Organized Militia of the United States and for other purposes," is a measure that is pregnant with greater possibilities of evil in a financial way, and that gives less assurance of compensating advantages of any kind, than any measure that has ever been enacted by Congress with regard to the State militia. Briefly stated, the principal purpose of the bill is to obligate the United States to pay officers and enlisted men of the Organized Militia, who are not in the service of the General Government, nor under its control, certain percentages of the pay of officers and enlisted men of the Regular Army.

The proponents of the measure estimate that the amounts to be paid under it annually to each militiaman will range from $100 to $360 for officers, and from $45 to $225 for enlisted men; also that, with existing militia organizations recruited only to the minimum prescribed strength, the total annual expenditure for militia pay may be $9,234,729, which, added to the more than $5,000,000 that the advocates of the measure say is the present annual cost of the militia to the United States, will entail upon the General Government a total annual expenditure of between $14,000,000 and $15,000,000 for militia purposes. And this will be the cost at the very beginning of the operation of the proposed law, and it affords no indication as to the enormous increase that will inevitably occur later by reason of the increase in militia strength, which it is the plain purpose of the pending measure to bring about, and which can and will be brought about without any additional legislation whatever by Congress if this bill shall pass.

Childish must be the credulity of him who can bring himself to believe that the militia will rest content "with any such reward or compensation" as that proposed by the pending bill, or that, if the bill becomes a law, Congress can successfully resist the tremendous pressure that will certainly be brought to bear upon it for more and more legislation of the same kind. The appetitie for pabulum from the Public Treasury grows by what it feeds on, and so does the political strength of the possessor of such an appetite if that possessor happens to be an organized or organizable body of men with widespread political and social affiliations. Those who doubt the applicability of this aphorism to the subject in question will do well to study the history of our pension laws, under which we are now expending about $190,000,000 annually with an unascertained additional expenditure necessitated by recent legislation, and all this chiefly on account of a war that was ended nearly half a century ago.

It is well known that for some time before the passage of the famous "arreas of pension act" of January 25, 1879, the annual expenditure had ceased to increase, having become nearly stationary at figures less than $30,000,000. It is also generally admitted that the passage of this act was due in large measure, if not wholly, to an agitation set on foot and fomented among the old soldiers and in Congress by numerous claim agents who had become alive to the fact that the prosecution of pension claims was an exceedingly profitable industry. Emboldened and encouraged by the success of this effort, claim agents and claimants entered upon a course of strenuous and systematic agitation for further liberalization of the pension laws. About this time the two political parties simultaneously discovered that the so-called "old soldier vote" was of much political importance, and each began to vie with the other in efforts to conciliate it and in bidding for its support. The result of all this was that Congress has enacted, and still continues to enact, pension law after pension law of the most unheard-of liberality, not to say extravagance, and the end is not yet in sight, although an annual pension bill of more than $200,000,000 in the near future is plainly in sight, as the result of existing laws.

What thoughtful and candid man will say that many of our most costly pension laws would have been enacted or that our pension expenditure would ever have reached its present enormous size if it had not been for the fact that for the last 40 years all parties and factions, State and municipal, as well as national, either through fear or prudence have found it necessary or advisable to conciliate and bid for the political support of the veterans of the Civil War, their relatives and friends?

But the veterans of the Civil War, powerful as they once were politically and a source of political terror, as they still are in some localities, have never formed a compact, well-organized, and easily managed body. If with their loose and more or less inefficient organization they could accomplish what they have done in a political way, what may be expected of a widespread military organization, such as the Organized Militia, composed, as it is, of active, intelligent, and aggressive young men, every one of whom is a voter fully alive to his own interest and that of the organization to which he belongs and all of whom have such business or social relations as to make their combined influence very formidable politically? They are fully conscious of their power even now, and their representatives who, in support of the pending bill, have appeared before committees of Congress and have approached individual Senators and Members have presented and pressed their arguments in a confident and aggressive manner.

If this bill becomes a law it will confirm them in their estimate of the political strength of their present organization and will encourage them to use it in support of the many demands that they will surely make for further legislation by Congress in their behalf, and their power to back up their demands will increase pari passu with the great increase in their numerical strength that it is the evident purpose of this bill to bring about, and it will undoubtedly take place under it should it become a law.

The gift of prophecy is not needed to foretell the nature of the demands that will be made upon Congress for additional militia legislation if this bill is passed. First and foremost there will be insistent and persistent demands for more pay for officers and men, and every demand of this kind that is made will be followed sooner or later by others of the same kind, each being based upon the assertion, doubtless correct, that the constantly advancing standard of requirements of members of the Organized Militia compels officers and men to give more and more of their time to their military duties and less and less of it to their ordinary vocations. Then will come the demand, already voiced in some quarters, that the General Government shall assume the very great expense of furnishing and maintaining horses for Cavalry and Field Artillery and shall relieve the States of other and greater burdens, notably those of providing and maintaining armories, target ranges, drill, encampment, and maneuver grounds, and other necessary facilities, all of which but few, if any, of the States are able or willing even now to furnish to the extent of meeting the urgent needs of the present relatively small militia force, and all of which they will surely be far less able and far more unwilling to furnish to the extent required by the greatly increased force to which the door is opened by the pending bill.

Our population of more than 90,000,000 people will easily permit the expansion of our militia to more than a million men. With the same ratio of expense per man that this bill and existing laws permit the annual cost to the taxpayers would be $116,000,000. An officer of the National Guard has been heard to say that in a few years the yearly cost for maintaining the militia will be $100,000,000, and after making that statement he added, "but what of it?"

As the militia increases in numerical strength, so also will increase its power to influence the policy and legislation of the various States as well as of the Nation. It may be confidently expected that after it has been found that the General Government can be induced to bear an additional share of the burden of supporting the militia the States will not only shape their policy and legislation with a view to inducing or compelling the United States to shoulder more and more of that burden, but will actively support their militiamen in concerted efforts to obtain for themselves, at the expense of the General Government, more and more benefits in the shape of pay, allowances, quarters, retired pay, and pensions, all gradually approaching and perhaps finally equaling those allowed to officers and enlisted men of the Regular Army.

The principal reason, and undoubtedly the only real reason, why efforts to increase the effective strength of the Organized Militia beyond about 100,000 men have hitherto been unsuccessful is to be found in the fact that the States have been and still are unable or unwilling to bear the expense, especially for pay of officers and men, that must be incurred in order to make a material increase in the force possible and practicable. But the pending bill proposes that the United States shall pave the way for a great increase in the militia strength by expending millions of dollars annually for the pay of individual militiamen. Undoubtedly the enactment of the bill will have that effect. Knowing this, and knowing also that the bill places no limit upon the strength of the Organized Militia, but actually invites and encourages an unlimited expansion of it that would involve an enormous expense to the United States, it is idle for the advocates of the measure to say, as they do in effect say in the majority report on the bill, that Congress can control the strength of the militia by refusing to make appropriations for its pay and equipment beyond a certain limit. If the militia has sufficient influence to secure the passage of this bill it will, when far stronger numerically and far more powerful politically, backed up, as it will be, by local interests and State support, have all the influence that may be necessary to compel Congress to make not only the appropriations that by the passage of this bill it will be morally bound to make, but almost any other appropriations that the militia as a body may set its heart upon.

Beyond a doubt members of the Organized Militia, taken as a whole, are just as reasonable, intelligent, and patriotic as are the members of the Regular Army or of any other large body of our citizens, but all of these are human; and it is a universal human weakness for the average individual, especially when dealing with the Government, to regard his own interest or the interest of his class as paramount to that of all others. But the influence of the officers and men of the Regular Army upon legislation by Congress is altogether insignificant and must always remain so, no matter to what size the Army may be increased, because, with but few exceptions, those officers and men are not voters, have no local affiliations, take little or no interest in political affairs, and have virtually no political influence. The reverse of all this is true with regard to the officers and men of the Organized Militia. Their combined influence in a political way is very great even now, as shown by the success of their efforts at this inauspicious time to force consideration of the bill pending in their behalf; and this influence, if yielded to now, is bound to grow with the growth of the militia until it becomes too great to be resisted successfully and too formidable to be opposed with political safety to the opponents.

If once the burden of maintaining the Organized Militia is transferred wholly to the General Government, as sooner or later it certainly will be if the course of legislation marked out by the pending bill is entered upon, the natural and sure result will be the eventual conversion of the citizen soldier of the militia into a professional soldier devoting his whole time and attention to military duties and supported by the General Government on an equal footing with his brother in the Regular Army. In other words, a second Regular Army will have been created, but it will be an army actively engaged in political life and wielding therein an influence so great as to be irresistible when consolidated and exerted in the interest of that army or any of its members. Congress should take warning from the concerted pressure that the militia has been able to bring to bear upon it in support of the pending bill. The organization of the militia is such that, even with its present strength, a telegram from a central source to each State adjutant general is all that is necessary speedily to bring down upon Senators and Representatives a flood of telegrams and letters from every congressional district in the United States urging or demanding that some particular measure be favored or that some other measure be opposed. If it is difficult to resist such pressure now, how infinitely more difficult will it be in the future to resist similar pressure from a greatly enlarged militia, flushed by the victory of the passage of this bill and encouraged by it to make further demands and to support them by the methods that have already been found effective.

In view of the fact that it is by no means certain that our militia can be made into a force that can be depended upon safely in the exigencies of a modern war unless it is first developed and expanded at a staggering expense far beyond anything that is now hinted at by the advocates of the pending measure, it may well be asked whether it is not better to stop where we now are rather than to embark upon a course that will surely involve us in the expenditure of sums of incalculable magnitude and that will produce results that in the crucial test of war may be found to be worse than useless, because they may have bred in us a false sense of security and a confidence not well founded.

In the report of the majority of the committee it is asserted that under the operation of existing law the Organized Militia that we now have has been raised to a high state of efficiency, the causes of its previous inefficiency having been removed by the so-called Dick law and other recent legislation. Then, why not permit the beneficent operation of existing law to continue without attempting to increase the strength of the force at the expense of the United States by new and untried legislation that will lead us no man knows whither? The States now maintain, as the framers of the Constitution clearly intended that they should, all the Organized Militia that they feel able and willing to maintain. Let the General Government continue to aid the States by liberal appropriations along the lines that it is now following, increasing those appropriations to meet any increase in militia strength that the States may see fit to make, but do not let us undertake to force such an increase of strength by the hothouse method of Federal subsidy.

If the arguments hereinbefore set forth are not sufficient to show the unwisdom of the proposed legislation, it will hardly be worth while to discuss at length various other objections that have been urged or that may be urged against it. Some of those objections are that the Constitution confers no authority upon Congress to "support" or "maintain" State militia; that the proposed legislation will unduly extend Federal power over State troops; that it will enable the President in any emergency that he may deem grave to deprive any State of all of its troops, leaving that State powerless, perhaps, to suppress violence or insurrection within its own borders or otherwise to execute its own laws; that it will very likely weaken the control of the States over their own troops and will foster among those troops the idea that their first allegiance is to the Federal Government that supports them and not to the States under whose authority they are raised and maintained; and, finally, that the expense incident to the proposed development and expansion of the militia will sooner or later be met, in part at least, by a material curtailment of the appropriations for and doubtless by a reduction in the strength of the Regular Army which will have no political weight or influence whatever as compared with the expanded Organized Militia.

The minority making this report is convinced that the legislation proposed by the pending bill is not only unwise but that it is dangerous in the extreme. Rather than enter upon a legislative course that will inevitably entail upon the General Government an enormous expense, which may be found in dire emergency to have been wasted, a course that will surely lead to the creation of a great military force that will become so powerful politically that Congress will be no more able to resist its demands than it has been to resist the demands of the far less compactly organized and manageable army of pension applicants and their friends, this minority would favor a reasonable increase of the Regular Army, leaving the States to maintain their own troops in their own way and at their own expense, without any aid whatever from the United States. Objectionable as such an increase of the Regular Army would be, it would have the merit of assuring us the possession of an armed force that in time of war would by its persistent training be worth all of its cost, which undoubtedly would be cheaper in the end than the cost of the great semimilitary, semicivil organization, wielding tremendous political power, that will grow up as surely as the sun will rise and set if the course of legislation outlined by the pending bill is once entered upon.

It now costs more than a thousand million dollars a year to support the Federal Government. Measures are pending before Congress, or being investigated by committees, which if approved will add hundreds of millions to the annual toll exacted from the taxpayer. Very few, if any, will cost more than the "militia-pay bill." None will cost more than the "militia-pay bill" if it shall develop as there is every reason to expect it will develop in a few years.

This Congress is pledged to economy; it is pledged to a reduction of taxes. If this measure is enacted into law, there will not only be no permanent reduction in customs or other taxes, but the legislative body will be forced to find new sources of revenue.

In this connection it ought to be remembered that the proposed law fixes no limit to the expansion of the Organized Militia. It should also be remembered that there are about 20,000,000 males in the United States of the military age (18 to 45 years) and that these eligibles increase each year at the rate of about 750,000.

Thus it will be seen there is abundant room for the indefinite growth of this proposed new body of paid Government servants.

JAMES L. SLAYDEN.

Mr. BORAH. I also ask to have inserted in the RECORD, on the same subject matter, an editorial in the Scientific American under date of April 15, 1916.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Without objection, it will be so ordered.

The matter referred to is as follows:

MILITARISM AND THE MILITIA.

In our issue of April 1 we discussed the Army bills before Congress and the probable effect, good and bad, of their several provisions. Particular effort was made to invite attention to the clauses affecting the militia and to the danger of creating a political organization in each State, under the immediate command of the governor, which organization, unified by military discipline and constantly increasing in numbers by reason of Federal pay, would soon be in position to exert compelling influence upon Members of Congress.

That our fears in this respect are shared by those who have opposed this legislation is proved by the minority report of the House Military Committee on this same proposition in 1912. In that report it was stated that "this course will surely lead to the creation of a great military force so powerful politically that Congress will be no more able to resist its demands than it has been to resist the demands of the far less compactly organized army of pension applicants." (Rept. 1117, pt. 2, 62d Cong., 3d sess.) Some of those who submitted that report are still members of the committee. On April 3 Senator CHAMBERLAIN, on the floor of the Senate, publicly complained of the influence the militia lobby was exerting to obtain greater concessions than his committee had deemed wise, "and we are already stepping upon the heels of the Constitution," he added.

The passage of the bill in the House, with the defeat of every amendment looking toward a better Regular Army and toward the creation of a truly Federal citizen force, showed that constructive military legislation could not be expected from that body. It was hoped, however, that the Senate would save the situation. But in the debates it soon became evident that Senator CHAMBERLAIN'S statement as to the militia lobby was justified. One of the first amendments proposed was to authorize the appointment of five officers of the National Guard (militia) as members of the General Staff of the Army.

The General Staff was born in the Senate and around the appointment of its members was thrown the safeguard of "such special rules of selection as the President may prescribe." These rules require that officers shall be detailed as members of that corps only on recommendation of a board of five general officers of the Army, all sworn to make such recommendation solely on the basis of proven professional efficiency and probable aptitude for the important duties delegated to the General Staff. These general officers have not only a personal knowledge of the character and ability of their subordinates, but have access to the records of all officers' service, day by day, for periods of from 15 to 25 years, including the confidential opinion of each immediate commanding officer.

It may be seen that, though a mistake in selection may be made, nevertheless the chance thereof has been reduced to a minimum. And now the very legislative body which, in its wisdom, insured the General Staff of the Army being so carefully selected, has passed an amendment authorizing five militiamen to be appointed thereto. Not one of the safeguards can be made to apply. There is no exhaustive record of these militia officers' lives, nor can we ever hope to have such a record; and it is not possible for militia officers to have the experience and training heretofore considered an essential for a general staff officer of any army.

The effect of five votes in a small body can be appreciated by any who have been members of a board of directors of any large business. Certainly any Member of Congress who has served on a committee can not fail to appreciate it.

It was stated in our issue of April 1 that the proposed legislation threatened to turn over the Nation's defense to State-controlled troops. It was thought then that the General Staff would be the last corps of the Army to be invaded. That it has been the first indicates the gravity of the danger.

Simultaneously with this action in the Senate there has come to our attention a circular letter of the National Guard Association of New York, which proves beyond peradventure of doubt the existence of an all-powerful lobby of militiamen in Washington. In that letter militiamen are informed that, while the Hay bill is not all that could be desired, it was "felt by the National Guardsmen in Washington that it would be better not to raise any issue as to that bill, but to concentrate against the Senate bill, which cuts out pay for militia officers above the grade of captain." Throughout this letter there is no evidence of any interest in national defense. Special consideration for the militia is its guiding impulse, concerted effort to bring pressure upon Congress to that end being urged.

The present progress of the militia propaganda, if it be indicative of the future, points plainly to increasing demands with increasing power. No thinking man can doubt that the political force so dreaded by the Democratic minority in 1912 has already become formidable. Secretary Garrison opposed it and was forced to resign from the Cabinet. Another year may see the militia representation on the General Staff doubled or trebled and the pay of the State troops still further increased; and when the full 600 members in each congressional district have been enrolled and organized, we may see the election or reelection of any Congressman entirely dependent upon his attitude toward militia preferment and pay.

The constitutional safeguards around the Regular Army can have no application to this new army. The Regular can rarely vote—he can never hold office. The members of this new force can and will do both. Unless some strong action is taken to check this movement in its incipiency, the strongest assurance for the continuance of a truly representative government in these United States will be lost, and militarism, which may be defined as the existence of a military force which exerts a political influence, insuring for its members special consideration under the laws, will be ours before we know it; and so the menace of a great standing army, so dreaded by our fathers, will be an accomplished fact.

Mr. BORAH. Also the table found upon pages 305 and 306 of the report of the Chief of the Division of Militia Affairs for 1913.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Without objection, it will be so ordered.

Mr. WEEKS. I should like the attention of the Senator from Wisconsin and to ask to what officers does his amendment apply?

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. Staff officers, including officers of the Pay, Subsistence, and Medical Departments.

Mr. WADSWORTH. Would the Senator add inspection?

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. I am entirely willing. I took this from the Wisconsin statute——

Mr. WEEKS. Does the Senator mean to limit it to staff officers on the staff of the governor?

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. No.

Mr. WEEKS. The staff of commanding officers of brigades, or whatever it may be.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. The commanding officers. To perfect the amendment after the last clause in the amendment, which reads:

And that vacancies among said officers shall be filled by appointment from the officers of the militia of such States.

I wish to add "Territory or District." Will the Senator from New York make his suggestion with respect to the addition which he mentioned a moment ago?

The SECRETARY. After the word "pay," in line 4, insert "inspection," so as to read:

Nor to any State, Territory, or District, or officer or enlisted man in the National Guard thereof, unless and until such State, Territory, or District provides by law that staff officers, including officers of the Pay, Inspection, Subsistence, and Medical Departments—

And so forth.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. I accept that amendment.

Mr. CHILTON. I wish to call the attention of the Senator from Wisconsin to a thought in line with the suggestion of the Senator from Utah. This means if it is passed in any State which does not now have a law providing for eligibility the State will get nothing.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. No; I beg the Senator's pardon.

Mr. CHILTON. I know the Senator did not intend that.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. Only those to be hereafter appointed.

Mr. CHILTON. Now, let us see:

Nor to any State, Territory, or District, or officer or enlisted man in the National Guard thereof, unless and until such State, Territory, or District provides by law that staff officers, including officers of the pay, subsistence—

And so forth, hereafter appointed.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. "Hereafter appointed."

Mr. CHILTON. But you must say "the law hereafter passed," or something of that kind. It means that the law must be in existence now providing for those hereafter appointed. The Senator does not express the idea, and I want to make it clear.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. The beginning of every new State administration and of every legislative assembly in the United States will be within the period of a very few months after this bill becomes a law, and there will be no State in the Union that can not conform very promptly to the requirements of this provision.

Mr. CHILTON. I do not agree with the Senator as to the construction of this language. This says "unless and until" the States provide by law. If no State has provided by law as herein required——

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. Let it go to conference. If there is anything in the Senator's contention, it can be adjusted there.

Mr. CHILTON. I move the following proviso:

Provided, That this proviso shall not apply to any State or Territory until 60 days next after the adjournment of the next session of the legislature held after the approval of this act.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. I will accept that amendment and let it go to conference.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is on agreeing to the amendment of the Senator from Wisconsin to the amendment.

Mr. JONES. Mr. President, I am in favor of the amendment of the Senator from Wisconsin. I wish to ask the chairman of the committee a question. I wish to ask him just what the difference is between the Brandegee amendment, which we adopted a short time ago, and the provision of the bill reported from the Committee on Military Affairs; that is, in the provision as to the difference in the number of the Army?

NOTE.—The States not included either had no rifle teams or were not paid out of the appropriation made by section 1661, Revised Statutes.

Mr. CHAMBERLAIN. If the Senator will read section 26 of the bill, he will find, in the first place, the organization is built upon a basis of 250,000 as the maximum strength.

Mr. JONES. That is the bill reported by the committee?

Mr. CHAMBERLAIN. Yes.

Mr. JONES. The maximum strength under the amendment is——

Mr. CHAMBERLAIN. Two hundred and fifty thousand.

Mr. JONES. So it is just the same?

Mr. CHAMBERLAIN. Yes.

Mr. JONES. Practically the only difference is that under the bill reported by the committee the maximum is reached in five years, while under the amendment it may be reached in one year if we can get that many to enlist.

Mr. CHAMBERLAIN. I understand that is the fact.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE's amendment to the amendment was agreed to, as follows:

Page 191, line 16, before the period insert: "nor to any State, Territory, or District, or officer, or enlisted man in the National Guard thereof, unless and until such State, Territory, or District provides by law that staff officers, including officers of the pay, inspection, subsistence, and medical departments hereafter appointed shall have had previous military experience, and shall hold their positions until they shall have reached the age of 64 years, unless retired prior to that time by reason of resignation, disability, or for cause to be determined by a court-martial legally convened for that purpose, and that vacancies among said officers shall be filled by appointment from the officers of the militia of such State, Territory, or District: Provided, That this proviso shall not apply to any State or Territory until 60 days next after the adjournment of the next session of the legislature held after the approval of this act."

Mr. BRANDEGEE. Let me state in addition to what the Senator stated I think under the amendment that I offered the Quartermaster and Medical Corps are excluded from the computation.

Mr. CHAMBERLAIN. I said a competent force.

Mr. BRANDEGEE. I would suggest to the Senator that as it appears in the copy of the bill I have the period following the word "Guard" at the end of the twelfth line ought to be stricken out.

Mr. CHAMBERLAIN. On what page?

Mr. BRANDEGEE. Page 191 where the Senator from Wisconsin offered his amendment.

Mr. CHAMBERLAIN. I desire to offer an amendment on behalf of the committee. I intended to do it this morning but neglected it. I will ask the Secretary to read the amendment to the amendment.

The SECRETARY. On page 133, after the word "seventy-five," line 12, insert:

Provided further, That so much of the act approved January 25, 1907, as provides that the Chief of Coast Artillery shall be a member of the General Staff Corps is hereby repealed.

The amendment to the amendment was agreed to.

Mr. ROBINSON. Mr. President, I wish to suggest one amendment. On page 121, I move to strike out the proviso commencing in line 8 down to and including line 11 in the following words:

Provided, That nothing in this act shall be construed to limit in any way the provisions of the act of July 18, 1914, affecting the aviation section of the Signal Corps.

Mr. President, the inefficiency existing in the aviation section of the Signal Corps is now generally recognized. My investigation into the subject convinces me that the organization of an aviation corps in the United States Army independent of any control or subordination to the Signal Corps is imperative before the fundamental defects in the aviation service can be totally eliminated and that service developed and raised to that standard of efficiency which will reflect credit upon the United States Army and upon this Government. It is not my intention to discuss now, in detail, the present condition of the aviation section of the Signal Corps nor the causes which have brought about the humiliation of all who are interested in promoting and maintaining high standards in the United States Army. I have not had an opportunity of devoting sufficient time to the preparation of an amendment for the organization of an independent aviation corps. Indeed, that would require careful attention and the advice of officers skilled in military affairs and particularly familiar with the defects in the present service.

A newspaper, the Washington Evening Star, announces that the present Secretary of War has reached the conclusion that it is wise to consider changing the relation of the aviation section to the Army by the creation of an independent corps. Secretary Baker is quoted as saying that the time is not far distant when the United States should add armored and armed aeroplanes and other fighting aircraft to its Army air fleet, and that if this is done a new organization must be created to control it, so that its work may be coordinated with that of the other fighting forces of the Army. The Secretary is also quoted as saying, in substance, that heretofore the service has been looked upon as purely an auxiliary one for scouting, carrying messages, etc., but that the European war has demonstrated the broader usefulness of aircraft. I have no authority to quote the chairman of the Military Affairs Committee of the Senate, but I believe that he is convinced that a thorough reorganization of the aviation service is desirable, and that it will be necessary to establish a separate corps for its proper development. In any event, I express the hope that a satisfactory provision looking to that end may be adopted in the conference, as it is impracticable to prepare and adopt now the necessary amendments the preparation of which, as before stated, will require careful attention and technical knowledge.

Mr. President, I withdraw the amendment.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is on agreeing to the amendment of the committee as amended.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. I desire to reserve the amendment of the Senator from New York [Mr. WADSWORTH] on page 169.

Mr. LEE of Maryland. I desire to amend line 14, page 163, the sixty-second section of the bill. This is a limitation on the ultimate number of the National Guard, which fixes the ultimate strength of the National Guard at 500 to each Senator and Representative in Congress.

The section starts with 200 and by adding 50 per cent per annum reaches a maximum of 500, or, in other words, at the end of two years it will reach under the bill a total of $225,000, practically the maximum provided by this limitation. The House provides a maximum of 800. In view of the great liberality that has been shown by the Senate in agreeing just now to the amendment of the Senator from Connecticut fixing the number for the standing army at 250,000, it seems to be entirely appropriate now to move to strike out this limitation upon the ultimate number of the National Guard of 500 and insert 1,000 in lieu thereof for each Member of the House and of the Senate.

This amendment will give at the end of a four years' period 505,000 men as the number attained. At the end of the six years' period it will have gone to 530,000 men, not a disproportionate number by any means, with reference to a comparison between citizen soldiery and the professional soldiery. A ratio of two citizen soldiers to one professional is not an unreasonable number from any standpoint. Moreover, from the standpoint of reserves, even if the first line is to be the Regular Army, reserves should certainly be on a basis of not less than two to one. So, from both standpoints, from that of constitutional balance, and from the standpoint of a sufficient reserve, this limitation of 500 is too low. I move, therefore, that it be changed to 1,000.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The amendment will be stated.

The SECRETARY. On page 163, line 14, strike out "500" and insert "1,000."

The amendment to the amendment was rejected.

Mr. NORRIS. Mr. President, a parliamentary inquiry.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Senator will state it.

Mr. NORRIS. Are we not to vote on the substitute amendment?

The VICE PRESIDENT. That is the question now before the Senate.

Mr. NORRIS. Upon that I ask for the yeas and nays.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is on agreeing to the amendment made as in Committee of the Whole as amended. The yeas and nays have been requested. Is the request seconded?

The yeas and nays were ordered.

Mr. SUTHERLAND. Mr. President, a parliamentary inquiry. If the substitute of the committee as amended be adopted, then I understand the bill will be reported to the Senate. I ask whether in the Senate it will be in order for me to offer the amendment which I offered as in Committee of the Whole and which was voted down without reserving the right to offer it in the Senate?

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. Unquestionably the whole subject comes up again in the Senate.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Senator from Georgia has answered the Senator from Utah.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. I wanted to present that view, because I certainly would insist that that is the case.

Mr. SUTHERLAND. I have great confidence in the Senator from Georgia; but still I should like to know whether the Vice President confirms that view.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Chair is of the opinion that if the amendment of the committee as amended meets the approval of the Senate, and is then reported to the Senate from the Committee of the Whole, before it is adopted in the Senate any amendment may be submitted that Senators desire to offer. The yeas and nays have been ordered on agreeing to the amendment as amended.

Mr. STONE. Would it be necessary to have an amendment reserved now?

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Chair does not think it necessary to reserve any amendment, because there is only one amendment, and if agreed to in the Senate that will end the question; but before it is agreed to in the Senate, when the bill comes to the Senate, it is open to amendment.

The Secretary will call the roll on agreeing to the amendment of the committee as amended.

The Secretary proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. BRADY (when his name was called). I have a general pair with the senior Senator from Florida [Mr. FLETCHER]. He is absent, and I withhold my vote. If permitted to vote, I would vote "yea."

Mr. CHILTON (when his name was called). Making the same announcement as to my pair which I did on the former vote, I vote "yea."

Mr. COLT (when his name was called). Announcing the transfer of my pair the same as before, I vote "yea."

Mr. HARDING (when his name was called). Knowing that my general pair would vote on this question as I would vote, I vote "yea."

Mr. BRANDEGEE (when Mr. MCLEAN's name was called). My colleague [Mr. MCLEAN] is necessarily absent. He is paired with the Senator from Montana [Mr. MYERS]. If my colleague were present, he would vote "yea."

Mr. SUTHERLAND (when his name was called). I again announce my pair with the Senator from Arkansas [Mr. CLARKE]. I transfer my pair to the Senator from New Mexico [Mr. CATRON] and vote "yea."

Mr. THOMAS (when his name was called). I have a general pair with the senior Senator from North Dakota [Mr. MCCUMBER] which I transfer to the Senator from Oklahoma [Mr. GORE] and vote "yea."

Mr. TILLMAN (when his name was called). Making the same announcement of transfer of pair which I did before, I vote "yea."

Mr. WILLIAMS (when his name was called). Repeating the explanation made upon an earlier roll call in regard to my pair, I vote "yea."

The roll call was concluded.

Mr. SWANSON. I desire to announce that my colleague [Mr. MARTIN of Virginia] is paired with the Senator from Maine [Mr. BURLEIGH], and that if present he would vote "nay."

Mr. ROBINSON. I desire to announce that my colleague [Mr. CLARKE of Arkansas] is absent on account of illness. He is paired with the Senator from Utah [Mr. SUTHERLAND].

Mr. MYERS. I have a pair with the Senator from Connecticut [Mr. MCLEAN]. I transfer that pair to the Senator from Texas [Mr. CULBERSON] and vote "nay."

Mr. BECKHAM. I desire to announce that the Senator from Tennessee [Mr. SHIELDS] is unavoidably absent on account of sickness in his family.

Mr. CURTIS. I wish to announce that the Senator from Michigan [Mr. TOWNSEND] is paired with the Senator from Florida [Mr. BRYAN], and that the Senator from Maine [Mr. BURLEIGH] is paired with the Senator from Virginia [Mr. MARTIN].

The result was announced—yeas 61, nays 14, as follows:

So the amendment of the committee as amended was agreed to.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Chair believes that amendments to the amendment should now be offered, rather than after the amendment made as in Committee of the Whole is concurred in.

Mr. SUTHERLAND. Mr. President, I offer the amendment which I send to the desk, which perhaps need not be read, because it is the same identical amendment which I offered when the bill was before the Senate as in Committee of the Whole, with reference to the increase of the Coast Artillery from twenty-four thousand-odd, as provided in this bill, to the maximum of 30,000. I would not again offer this amendment if it were not for the fact that I am fearful that this particular corps will not be covered automatically by the amendment offered by the Senator from Connecticut [Mr. BRANDEGEE], which was adopted by the Senate, increasing the maximum number of men in the Army to 250,000. The provision in that proviso to the amendment is:

That in addition to the units specified in this section, additional units of Infantry, Cavalry, or Field Artillery to conform in composition with the requirements of sections 19, 20, and 21 of this act may be organized in the discretion of the President.

I observe that these three branches of the service are particularly mentioned, but the Coast Artillery, which is a distinct branch, is not mentioned. For that reason, I think the amendment ought to be adopted. I hope the chairman of the committee will not object to it.

Mr. DU PONT. Mr. President, will the Senator from Utah yield for a question?

Mr. SUTHERLAND. Certainly.

Mr. DU PONT. I should like to know whether the provisions of the Senator's amendment are mandatory or permissive to the President?

Mr. SUTHERLAND. The provision for the increase is mandatory. It leaves it, however, to the President to decrease the number to the minimum, in his discretion.

Mr. DU PONT. The amendment offered by the Senator from Connecticut and adopted by the Senate evidently does not affect the Coast Artillery.

Mr. SUTHERLAND. I am afraid it does not.

Mr. DU PONT. I do not think it does.

Mr. SUTHERLAND. We have increased the other branches of the service, and certainly this is a very necessary branch, and it ought to be increased.

Mr. BRANDEGEE. Will the Senator let me ask him a question?

Mr. SUTHERLAND. Yes.

Mr. BRANDEGEE. The Senator from Utah knows I am in favor of his amendment; that I voted for it on yesterday, and will vote for it again, if it is necessary; but I wish to call the Senator's attention to the fact that while the amendment which I offered provides additional units of the Infantry, Cavalry, and Field Artillery, additional units of those might be created by the President, and it would not be necessary to create any additional units of the Coast Artillery, would it, in order to increase the personnel of that corps?

Mr. SUTHERLAND. I am not sure about that; but as there is doubt about it, and inasmuch as this bill is going into conference and a great many amendments have already been made upon the theory that they will be considered in conference, I see no reason why this amendment also should not be adopted, and let it go into conference, to be considered in connection with the other provisions of the bill.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is on the amendment proposed by the Senator from Utah to the committee amendment.

Mr. GALLINGER. Mr. President, I voted against the amendment when it was previously offered by the Senator from Utah, the statement having been made that other amendments to the bill would accomplish what the Senator from Utah had in view. I am now assured, however, by Senators who know much more about military matters than I do, that the amendments which have been made to the bill will not cover the Coast Artillery. Therefore, when I have an opportunity I shall change my vote and vote in favor of the amendment proposed by the Senator from Utah.

Mr. CHAMBERLAIN. Mr. President, I still think that this bill will cover the proposed amendment of the Senator from Utah. It is written in the same language as that in reference to the departments of the Army which is found on page 133, commencing in line 7, and is as follows:

Increase the number of sergeants to 2,104, the number of corporals to 3,156, the number of privates, first class, to 5,225, and the number of privates to 15,675.

It seems to me that is broad enough to cover the matter, Mr. President.

Mr. BRANDEGEE. Let it go to conference.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. Mr. President, I voted against the amendment when it was presented by the Senator from Utah at the time when the bill was under consideration as in Committee of the Whole. I did so under a misapprehension. I have since ascertained that precisely the increase in the Coast Artillery covered by the amendment of the Senator from Utah is in accordance with the recommendation of Gen. Weaver. Gen. Weaver is one of the military experts in this country who have not been carried into hysteria by the organized propaganda for increasing, without cause, the military organizations of the country beyond all reason. I shall therefore be glad of the opportunity to support the amendment of the Senator from Utah as it is now presented.

The amendment submitted by Mr. SUTHERLAND is as follows:

On page 132, line 18, strike out the words "one thousand seven hundred and eighty-four" and substitute therefor the words "two thousand one hundred and four."

On page 132, line 19, strike out the words "two thousand five hundred and sixteen" and substitute therefor the words "three thousand one hundred and fifty-six."

On page 132, line 21, strike out the word "four."

On page 132, line 22, strike out the words "thousand one hundred and eighty-six" and substitute therefor the words "five thousand two hundred and twenty-five."

On page 132, line 23, strike out the words "twelve thousand five hundred and sixty-two" and substitute therefor the words "fifteen thousand six hundred and seventy-five."

On page 133, line 7, strike out the words "increase the number of" and substitute therefor the words "decrease the number of."

On page 133, strike out lines 8, 9, 10, 11, and 12 and substitute therefor "sergeants to 1,784, the number of corporals to 2,516, the number of privates, first class, to 4,186, and the number of privates to 12,562 as reserves become available."

Mr. STONE. Mr. President, I wish to say just a word about this amendment. I voted against the amendment offered by the Senator from Utah as in Committee of the Whole. I was led to believe that the text of the bill carried substantially the same force for the Coast Artillery as provided for in the amendment. I think that is a mistake. I regard the coast-defense service as one of the most important branches of the military service. I am very much in favor of having our coast defenses as strong as possible, within every limitation of reason and common sense, and I am going to change my vote and support the amendment now.

Mr. SWANSON. Mr. President, I voted against the amendment of the Senator from Utah when the bill was being considered as in Committee of the Whole. The Regular Army has been increased to 250,000 men, and I think the number of Coast Artillery provided in the amendment of the Senator from Utah will make it well proportioned. I think that branch of the service should be increased, and I shall take pleasure in changing my vote and voting for the amendment.

Mr. ROBINSON. Mr. President, I merely desire to say that I have made some investigation into this subject, and I am in favor of the amendment offered by the Senator from Utah, and hope that it will prevail.

Mr. THOMAS. Mr. President, I had the pleasure of supporting the Senator from Utah on the first occasion when he offered his amendment, and I shall take equal pleasure in voting with him now.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is on the amendment proposed by the Senator from Utah to the amendment reported by the committee.

The amendment to the amendment was agreed to.

Mr. LEWIS. Mr. President, I desire now to tender an amendment, for which I ask the serious consideration of the Senate. I move to strike out section 56 of the bill and insert the amendment which I tender, and which I desire to inform the Senate is a repetition of section 82 of the bill as sent over from the House providing for training camps. I should like to have the amendment read.

Mr. OVERMAN. I think the Senate understands the amendment.

Mr. LEWIS. If the Senate is informed upon it, I will not take the time of the Senate to have it read.

Mr. REED. Let the amendment be stated, Mr. President.

Mr. LEWIS. Then let it be stated on request.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The amendment proposed by the Senator from Illinois to the amendment reported by the committee will be stated.

The SECRETARY. It is proposed to strike out section 56 and insert in lieu thereof the following:

SEC. 56. That the Secretary of War is hereby authorized to maintain, upon military reservations or elsewhere, camps for the military instruction and training of such citizens as may be selected for such instruction and training, upon their application and under such terms of enlistment and regulations as may be prescribed by the Secretary of War; to use, for the purpose of maintaining said camps and imparting military instruction and training thereat, such arms, ammunition, accouterments, equipments, tentage, field equipage, and transportation belonging to the United States as he may deem necessary; to furnish, at the expense of the United States, subsistence and medical supplies to persons receiving instruction at said camps during the period of their attendance thereat, to authorize such expenditures, from proper Army appropriations, as he may deem necessary for water, fuel, light, temporary structures, not including quarters for officers nor barracks for men, screening, and damages resulting from field exercises, and other expenses incidental to the maintenance of said camps, and the theoretical winter instruction in connection therewith; and to sell to persons receiving instruction at said camps, for cash and at cost price plus 10 per cent, quartermaster and ordnance property, the amount of such property sold to any one person to be limited to that which is required for his proper equipment. All moneys arising from such sales shall remain available throughout the fiscal year following that in which the sales are made, for the purpose of that appropriation from which the property sold was authorized to be supplied at the time of the sale. The Secretary of War is authorized further to prescribe the courses of theoretical and practical instruction to be pursued by persons attending the camps authorized by this section; to fix the periods during which such camps shall be maintained; to prescribe rules and regulations for the government thereof; and to employ thereat officers and enlisted men of the Regular Army in such numbers and upon such duties as he may designate.

Mr. LEWIS. Mr. President, I desire to make a simple statement. I am now moving to strike out section 56. When the bill was being considered as in Committee of the Whole, that motion was entertained by the Senate, and I then set forth my objection to that section, which provides for a volunteer army. I pointed out how I felt—that that section practically neutralized the National Guard out of existence, was of little service at best, and of no service under ordinary conditions of the country. The reasons I gave then, through the courtesy of the Senate, were rather elaborate, and I will not impose upon the Senate by repeating them.

I beg to say that from all over the country there came, in the form of telegrams and otherwise, an expression that we were striking out the provision of the bill which authorized training camps. The junior Senator from Georgia [Mr. HARDWICK] responded to that, as did others, pointing out that there was no foundation for this accusation. There was, however, a misapprehension in the country concerning it, and I tender now, in lieu of section 56, the amendment which has been read, which provides for the training camps, and which will leave no doubt on the subject. I respectfully ask that section 56 be stricken out and this provision covering the training camps be inserted.

Mr. HARDWICK. Mr. President, will the Senator yield for just a moment?

Mr. LEWIS. I yield to the Senator.

Mr. HARDWICK. The amendment which the Senator has offered, as I understand, is in exactly the same terms as section 82 of the House bill.

Mr. LEWIS. The statement of the Senator is correct. I have conformed to that section of the House bill literally. I ask that the amendment be adopted.

Mr. CHAMBERLAIN. Mr. President, a parliamentary inquiry. I ask if the question may not be divided, so that we may vote separately on the two propositions, first to strike out and then to insert?

The VICE PRESIDENT. A question of that kind can not be divided.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. Mr. President, I wish to ask the Senator from Illinois if he will not explain briefly to the Senate the difference between the Senate provision which he proposes to strike out and the House provision which he proposes to substitute?

Mr. LEWIS. I will state to the Senator that section 56 of the bill provided for a volunteer army, permitted that army to be organized as a Federal force, put it under the surveillance of the President, as I respectfully insist, in time of peace, and subject to be called out by the President in time of war. Under the bill they were subject to training for 60 days a year. There were some amendments offered, I may say to the Senator, providing for 30 days' training and 90 days' training, respectively. The provision I tender serves this, as I see it. It does not create an army; it creates a mere opportunity for encampment on the part of the men in order that they may be trained by the United States, fitted to become soldiers, so that they may either become volunteers, in the event of a Federal volunteer army being created, or National Guardsmen, or, if they so desired, they could enter the Regular Army. It has the object of providing that form of an organization without creating a volunteer army.

Mr. LODGE. Mr. President, I desire to offer a substitute for the amendment proposed by the Senator from Illinois. My substitute follows the lines of section 82 of the House bill—which section the Senator from Illinois has embraced in his amendment—with one or two modifications, or rather additions. I provide in this amendment that the United States shall pay the transportation and shall also—and this is a principal change—pay the "persons receiving instruction in said camps at the rate of pay now received by enlisted men in the Regular Army"—that is, for the month they are in camp. Otherwise my amendment is the same as that of the Senator from Illinois, except that I eliminate some provisions that are not necessary in regard to purchasing supplies, which are unimportant.

The main purpose of the amendment is to give those attending the camps pay. My reason for that is this: The Plattsburg camp last year, which was a very great success, could only be attended by men who were able to give not only their time, but who were able to pay all their own expenses. I think it is extremely desirable in connection with such camps to pay those who attend $15 for the month they are there and pay for their transportation and equipment. We should thus enable a much larger body of young men to receive the training afforded by the camps, men to whom the payment of $15 and expenses would be important. I think it will open the door much wider for a much larger class of young men, and I offer the amendment as a substitute for that of the Senator from Illinois.

Mr. LEWIS. Mr. President, does the Senator offer a substitute?

Mr. LODGE. Yes.

Mr. LEWIS. Then may I ask, Does the Senator concur in the motion to strike out section 56?

Mr. LODGE. This is offered as a substitute amendment to the Senator's amendment.

Mr. LEWIS. But I make the point that that can not be tendered unless the Senator concurs in my motion to strike out section 56.

Mr. LODGE. Why, Mr. President, under our rules, on a motion to strike out and insert, amendments are in order either to the paragraph proposed to be stricken out or the portion proposed to be inserted.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The amendment is in order.

Mr. LEWIS. If the Senator tenders his amendment, I am willing to accept it as an amendment to my amendment.

Mr. LODGE. Of course, if the Senator insists, I can take section 82, and, by a few verbal changes, make it my section.

Mr. LEWIS. I should like, then—if I may be pardoned to reply at this point—to adopt the suggestions which the Senator has made as additions to the provision I have tendered to be inserted in place of section 56; but I must first insist upon striking out section 56, in order to provide a place for the provision I have tendered and the amendment which the Senator from Massachusetts tenders to my provision.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Illinois accept, in lieu of the amendment which he proposed to insert, the amendment of the Senator from Massachusetts?

Mr. LEWIS. I will accept the amendment of the Senator from Massachusetts if section 56 is stricken out; but I reserve my right to strike out section 56.

Mr. LODGE. Why, certainly, Mr. President.

The VICE PRESIDENT. There is not any question about it. The question now is on the motion of the Senator from Illinois to strike out section 56, and to insert an amendment modified by the amendment of the Senator from Massachusetts.

Mr. LEWIS. Which I accept, sir, as modified by the Senator from Massachusetts.

Mr. CHAMBERLAIN. Mr. President, I am not going to bore the Senate by making another speech, but I do hope the Senate will stand by its original determination to retain section 56. I am not going to undertake to make a speech again on it.

Mr. LEWIS. The two votes that were taken were taken under a misapprehension.

The VICE PRESIDENT. All in favor——

Mr. LEWIS. I should like to have a yea-and-nay vote upon the question. I demand a yea-and-nay vote upon it.

Mr. KERN. Let the amendment be stated as amended.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Secretary will again state the amendment.

The SECRETARY. It is proposed to strike out section 56 and to insert the following:

SEC. 56. That the Secretary of War is hereby authorized to maintain, upon military reservations or elsewhere, camps for the military instruction and training of such citizens as may be selected for such instruction and training, upon their application and under such terms of enlistment and regulations as may be prescribed by the Secretary of War; to use, for the purpose of maintaining said camps and imparting military instruction and training thereat, such arms, ammunition, accouterments, equipments, tentage, field equipage, and transportation belonging to the United States as he may deem necessary; to pay persons receiving instruction in said camps at the rate of pay now received by enlisted men in the Regular Army; to furnish, at the expense of the United States, transportation, subsistence, medical supplies, uniforms, and equipment to persons receiving instruction at said camps during the period of their attendance thereat; to authorize such expenditures, from proper Army appropriations, as he may deem necessary for water, fuel, light, temporary structures, not including quarters for officers nor barracks for men, screening, and damages resulting from field exercises, and other expenses incidental to the maintenance of said camps, and the theoretical winter instruction in connection therewith. The Secretary of War is authorized further to prescribe the courses of theoretical and practical instruction to be pursued by persons attending the camps authorized by this section; to fix the periods during which such camps shall be maintained; to prescribe rules and regulations for the government thereof; and to employ thereat officers and enlisted men of the Regular Army in such numbers and upon such duties as he may designate.

Mr. THOMAS. Mr. President, I suggest that the reading of this amendment is of no aid whatever. We can not hear a word the Secretary says, although he is trying to read at the top of his voice.

The VICE PRESIDENT. A request for the yeas and nays has been made. Is the request seconded?

The yeas and nays were ordered.

Mr. WILLIAMS. Did the Secretary conclude the reading of the amendment?

The VICE PRESIDENT. Yes.

Mr. WILLIAMS. There was so much confusion that I could not understand it. Was the amendment read as modified by the amendment to the amendment submitted by the Senator from Massachusetts?

The VICE PRESIDENT. It was.

Mr. NELSON. Mr. President, is not this a motion to strike out and insert as an entirety?

The VICE PRESIDENT. It is; undoubtedly.

Mr. NELSON. And if the amendment is carried it strikes out section 56?

The VICE PRESIDENT. And inserts.

Mr. WILLIAMS. A parliamentary inquiry, Mr. President—indeed, an inquiry about a matter of fact. Was what the Secretary read—which I could not hear in the disorder—merely the amendment offered by the Senator from Illinois [Mr. LEWIS], or was it the amendment offered by the Senator from Illinois as modified by the amendment of the Senator from Massachusetts?

The VICE PRESIDENT. As modified by the amendment of the Senator from Massachusetts.

Mr. LEWIS. Which was accepted by myself.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Which was accepted by the Senator from Illinois.

Mr. LODGE. I want to say that in offering the substitute which the Senator from Illinois accepted, I did so because I thought it put in a better form what was embodied in section 82. I am not in favor of striking out section 56, and I shall vote against striking it out and inserting.

Mr. NORRIS. Mr. President, I voted to strike section 56 out of the bill. I shall be glad to vote to strike it out again; but this motion includes the insertion of something that was only partly read by the Secretary, and when he was reading it there was so much confusion that nobody heard what he did read, so it is a leap in the dark.

Mr. GALLINGER. Mr. President, will the Senator permit a question?

Mr. NORRIS. I yield to the Senator from New Hampshire.

Mr. GALLINGER. As I understand, the matter to be inserted pays the expenses, besides a per diem, of every man in the country who wants to take a trip somewhere to attend a camp. It seems to me that they will have about a million to take care of.

Mr. NORRIS. Well, it may be. I do not know that that is the result of it; but I felt that if I voted against this motion, I did not want to be charged with favoring section 56. I believe section 56 ought to go out of the bill; but from what little I could get from what the Secretary read, it seemed to me that this put something into the bill that did not add anything to the Army. There was no enlistment. There was not any provision by which this army could be brought into the service of the United States, but, in effect, it provided for an outing for somebody. I am unable to tell, from what I heard read, how long it would last, or how large it might be, or who paid for the refreshments.

Mr. SHAFROTH. Mr. President——

Mr. NORRIS. I yield to the Senator from Colorado.

Mr. SHAFROTH. Inasmuch as every Senator is entitled to know what is before the Senate, I ask that the part which was accepted by the Senator from Illinois, being the amendment offered by the Senator from Massachusetts, may be read.

Mr. NORRIS. That would not give sufficient information unless he read the part of section 82 that was stricken out. It ought to be read in its entirety; and it will not do any good to read it unless there is sufficient order in the Senate, so that it can be heard.

Mr. SHAFROTH. Inasmuch as the bill is before us, section 82 can be readily read.

Mr. NORRIS. Yes; I can read section 82, but this strikes out part of section 82, and inserts something that is not in the bill as a part of the portion that is stricken out.

Mr. SHAFROTH. I ask that the amendment offered by the Senator from Massachusetts to the amendment offered by the Senator from Illinois may be read.

Mr. NORRIS. I ask that the amendment now pending—the amendment proposed by the Senator from Illinois, and that means the amendment as modified—the amendment that we are voting on, may be read by the Secretary.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Secretary will read, slowly.

Mr. LANE. I ask for order.

Mr. LEWIS. I ask that there may be some order that we may hear this read.

The VICE PRESIDENT. That the Chair can not furnish.

The SECRETARY. The Senator from Illinois [Mr. LEWIS] moves to strike out section 56 as reported by the committee and to insert the following:

That the Secretary of War is hereby authorized to maintain, upon military reservations or elsewhere, camps for the military instruction and training of such citizens as may be selected for such instruction and training, upon their application and under such terms of enlistment and regulations as may be prescribed by the Secretary of War; to use, for the purpose of maintaining said camps and imparting military instruction and training thereat, such arms, ammunition, accouterments, equipments, tentage, field equipage, and transportation belonging to the United States as he may deem necessary; to pay persons receiving instruction in said camps at the rate of pay now received by enlisted men in the Regular Army; to furnish, at the expense of the United States, transportation, subsistence, medical supplies, uniforms, and equipment to persons receiving instruction at said camps during the period of their attendance thereat; to authorize such expenditures, from proper Army appropriations, as he may deem necessary for water, fuel, light, temporary structures, not including quarters for officers nor barracks for men, screening, and damages resulting from field exercises, and other expenses incidental to the maintenance of said camps, and the theoretical winter instruction in connection therewith. The Secretary of War is authorized further to prescribe the courses of theoretical and practical instruction to be pursued by persons attending the camps authorized by this section; to fix the periods during which such camps shall be maintained; to prescribe rules and regulations for the government thereof; and to employ thereat officers and enlisted men of the Regular Army in such numbers and upon such duties as he may designate.

Mr. SHAFROTH. Mr. President, a parliamentary inquiry. As the amendment was read by the Secretary, does it contain an amendment offered by the Senator from Massachusetts?

The VICE PRESIDENT. Why, it is the amendment that the Senator from Massachusetts offered that the Senator from Illinois accepted.

Mr. SHAFROTH. Very well.

Mr. JONES. Mr. President, is this question divisible?

The VICE PRESIDENT. It is not. It is a motion to strike out and insert.

Mr. HARDWICK. Mr. President, a parliamentary inquiry. If the motion of the Senator from Illinois is voted down by the Senate, will a plain motion to strike out the section then be in order?

The VICE PRESIDENT. Undoubtedly. The yeas and nays have been called for, and have been ordered. The Secretary will call the roll.

The Secretary proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. CHILTON (when his name was called). Making the same announcement that I made on the former votes, I vote "yea."

Mr. ROBINSON (when the name of Mr. CLARKE of Arkansas was called). I announce that my colleague [Mr. CLARKE of Arkansas] is absent from the Chamber on account of illness. He is paired with the Senator from Utah [Mr. SUTHERLAND].

Mr. COLT (when his name was called). Making the same announcement as before, I vote "nay."

Mr. HARDING (when his name was called). In the absence of the junior Senator from Alabama [Mr. UNDERWOOD], with whom I have a general pair, I withhold my vote.

Mr. SWANSON (when the name of Mr. MARTIN of Virginia was called). I desire to announce that my colleague [Mr. MARTIN of Virginia] is paired with the junior Senator from Maine [Mr. BURLEIGH]. If my colleague were present, he would vote "nay."

Mr. SUTHERLAND (when his name was called). Again transferring my pair with the senior Senator from Arkansas [Mr. CLARKE] to the junior Senator from New Mexico [Mr. CATRON], I vote "nay."

Mr. THOMAS (when his name was called). Announcing the same pair as before, I vote "nay."

Mr. TILLMAN (when his name was called). Announcing the same pair that I announced on the other roll calls, I vote "nay."

Mr. BANKHEAD (when Mr. UNDERWOOD's name was called). I desire to announce the unavoidable absence of my colleague [Mr. UNDERWOOD], and to state that he is paired with the junior Senator from Ohio [Mr. HARDING].

Mr. WILLIAMS (when his name was called). Repeating the explanation with regard to pairs which I made on the previous roll calls, I vote "nay."

The roll call was concluded.

Mr. BECKHAM. I wish to make the same announcement as before with regard to the absence of the junior Senator from Tennessee [Mr. SHIELDS]. He is absent on account of illness. I will let this announcement stand for the day.

Mr. BRANDEGEE. I wish to state that my colleague [Mr. MCLEAN] is paired with the Senator from Montana [Mr. MYERS]. If my colleague were here, he would vote "nay."

The result was announced—yeas 15, nays 58, as follows:

YEAS—16.

Ashurst	La Follette	Martine, N. J.	Sherman
Chilton	Lane	Myers	Simmons
Clapp	Lee, Md.	Reed	Smith, Ariz.

So Mr. LEWIS's amendment to the amendment of the committee was rejected.

Mr. LEWIS. Mr. President, I now move to strike out section 56, and upon that I ask for the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

Mr. JAMES. Mr. President, I send to the desk and ask to have read to the Senate a telegram sent to me by the adjutant general of Kentucky, J. Tandy Ellis, Gen. Roger D. Williams, Col. Jouett R. Henry, and Col. J. Embrey Allen, in reply to a statement of an interview given by former Assistant Secretary of War Breckinridge. I ask that it may be read to the Senate.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Is there objection? The Chair hears none, and the Secretary will read, as requested.

The Secretary read as follows:

LEXINGTON, KY., April 16, 1916.

Senator OLLIE JAMES,
Washington, D. C.:

Referring to interview of former Assistant Secretary Breckinridge in to-day's issue of the Post, in which he attacks the National Guard and executive committee of the National Guard Association. Breckinridge does not represent sentiment of the Kentucky National Guard in criticism of this committee, which has the absolute confidence and indorsement of the entire Kentucky National Guard. Regarding his statement as to record of attendance, loss, waste, and embezzlement of public property, being a member of this guard himself and familiar with the official reports of his brother, Capt. E. L. D. Breckinridge, who was inspector instructor of Kentucky National Guard for a number of years and rendered most favorable reports to the War Department, we do not consider Henry Breckinridge's statements as applying to the Kentucky National Guard.

J. TANDY ELLIS,
Adjutant General Kentucky.
ROGER D. WILLIAMS,
Brigadier General Commanding Brigade.
JOUETT R. HENRY,
Colonel Third Kentucky.
J. EMBREY ALLEN,
Colonel Second Kentucky.

Mr. SHEPPARD. Mr. President, I ask to have the following telegram read.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Is there objection? The Chair hears none. The Secretary will read.

The Secretary read as follows:

GALVESTON, TEX., April 13, 1916.

Hon. MORRIS SHEPPARD,
United States Senate, Washington, D. C.:

Permit us to acquaint you with our firm belief that section 56 of Chamberlain bill providing for volunteer army should be adopted. This is not a protest against National Guard features, but as the entire military policy is only an experiment we do not think so valuable an arm as volunteer force, under exclusive Federal control, should be left out.

Robert G. Street, Maco Stcart, John Sealy, E. D. Cavin, R. Waverly Smith, H. A. Eiband, W. T. Armstrong, Frank J. Becker, Edward F. Harris, Louis A. Adoue, E. R. Cheesborough, V. E. Austin, Robert I. Cohen, Geo. Waverly Briggs, Chas. R. Brown, John D. Hodson, I. H. Kempner, M. S. Ujffy, Geo. D. Flood, Lewis Fisher, Frank A. Allen, F. G. Pettibone, E. O. Flood, and many others.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The yeas and nays have been ordered on the motion of the Senator from Illinois [Mr. LEWIS] to strike out section 56, and the Secretary will call the roll.

The Secretary proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. COLT (when his name was called). Making the same announcement that I made before, I vote "nay."

Mr. HARDING (when his name was called). I transfer my pair with the junior Senator from Alabama [Mr. UNDERWOOD] to the Senator from Utah [Mr. SMOOT], and vote "nay."

Mr. SUTHERLAND (when his name was called). Making the same announcement that I made on the previous vote with reference to my pair, I vote "nay."

Mr. THOMAS (when his name was called). Announcing my pair and its transfer as heretofore, I vote "nay."

Mr. TILLMAN (when his name was called). Making the same announcement of my pair and its transfer that I did the other time, I vote "yea."

Mr. WILLIAMS (when his name was called). Repeating the previous announcement on the previous roll call, I vote "nay."

The roll call was concluded.

Mr. SWANSON. I desire to state that my colleague [Mr. MARTIN of Virginia] is paired with the junior Senator from Maine [Mr. BURLEIGH]. If my colleague were present, he would vote "yea."

Mr. CHILTON. Making the same announcement as to my pair and its transfer that I did before, I vote "yea."

Mr. CURTIS. I wish to announce that the Senator from Michigan [Mr. TOWNSEND] is paired with the Senator from Florida [Mr. BRYAN] and that the Senator from Idaho [Mr. BRADY] is paired with the Senator from Florida [Mr. FLETCHER].

The result was announced—yeas 37, nays 40, as follows:

YEAS—37.

Ashurst	James	Overman	Smith, Ga.

So the Senate refused to strike out section 56.

Mr. WEEKS. Mr. President, an amendment was adopted to section 56 the other day. I have it not before me, but it limits the time of training in the camps to 30 days a year. I wish to strike out section 56 as it is now and insert the section as it appears in the bill under date of March 24, which in effect leaves it——

Mr. REED. Mr. President, a parliamentary inquiry.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Senator will state it.

Mr. REED. Does a motion now lie to substitute a section for the section which has already been adopted as in Committee of the Whole and which the Senate has just refused to strike out?

Mr. BRANDEGEE. Mr. President, a parliamentary inquiry.

Mr. WILLIAMS. The amendment which the Senator from Massachusetts is seeking to offer I have offered, and it is pending. I had concluded that the conferees would have full jurisdiction over the subject matter, and I thought instead of offering it I would let it go to conference and let the conferees handle the matter. If I understand what the junior Senator from Massachusetts desires, it is this: The Senate adopted an amendment to the Senate committee bill whereby it was agreed that the period of drilling and training should not extend beyond 30 days.

Mr. WEEKS. Yes.

Mr. WILLIAMS. I offered an amendment and asked that it be regarded as pending, to be taken up at the proper time, to substitute 90 for 30, so that it would read "not beyond 90 days," but after thinking about it I concluded that the entire matter would be in conference, and I therefore did not call for it. If what the Senator is seeking is to offer the amendment which I offered, it is now pending and the Secretary can read it.

Mr. WEEKS. I should like to ask the Senator from Mississippi if, in his opinion, the conferees can increase the time from 30 days to 90 days?

Mr. WILLIAMS. The entire provision of which the provision for 30 days is a part goes to conference and the conferees will have as much right to increase the period as to decrease it. The two Houses will be in absolute difference regarding the entire proposition. I have no objection to offering it now and having it voted upon as expressing the sense of the Senate, because the sense of the Senate would help persuade the Senate conferees, at any rate, to insist. Let the Secretary read the amendment which I offered and which was pending. It comes in on page 161, I think.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The amendment to the amendment will be stated.

The SECRETARY. On page 161, in the proviso agreed to, following the word "only," on line 2, strike out "thirty" and insert "ninety," so as to read:

Provided, That without the consent of Congress such volunteer force shall not be called out for field service for more than a total period exceeding 90 days in any one year.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. Mr. President, I submit a point of order that, after a motion to strike out, a motion to amend the original proposition is not in order. I concede that a motion to strike out and substitute might be made, but this is entirely different.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Senator from Missouri [Mr. REED] raised the point of order. This is the rule:

If the question in debate contains several propositions, any Senator may have the same divided, except a motion to strike out and insert, which shall not be divided; but the rejection of a motion to strike out and insert one proposition shall not prevent a motion to strike out and insert a different proposition; nor shall it prevent a motion simply to strike out; nor shall the rejection of a motion to strike out prevent a motion to strike out and insert.

Mr. WILLIAMS. Mr. President, addressing myself to the amendment, I have not thought it was necessary to submit the amendment or to pass it. I am of the opinion that the conferees can handle the question perfectly, and if it is left to my judgment I shall not offer the amendment but shall leave it to the conferees. I have a great deal of confidence in the fact that when the conferees meet and begin to harmonize all these different things they will reach a right conclusion. The conferees might perhaps agree to 60 days instead of 30 days. I think it would be better, if the Senator from Massachusetts will pardon me for making the suggestion, just to let that go by the board.

Mr. CHAMBERLAIN. I think so, too.

Mr. SUTHERLAND and others. Regular order!

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Chair thinks the Senator from Georgia is correct, that it can only be amended by a motion to strike out and insert. However, that is out of the way.

Mr. JAMES. It has been withdrawn anyway.

Mr. REED. Is there anything before the Senate?

The VICE PRESIDENT. Unless some one wants to move to amend.

SEVERAL SENATORS. Regular order!

Mr. REED. I move to amend section 2 as amended by striking out the words "and fifty" before "thousand," where it occurs in the clause "exceed 250,000 men," so that the proviso will read:

Provided, That the total enlisted force of the line of the Regular Army, excluding the Philippine Scouts, the enlisted men of the Quartermaster Corps, of the Medical Corps, and the unassigned recruits, shall not at any one time, except in the event of actual or threatened war or similar emergency in which the public safety demands it, exceed 200,000 men.

Mr. HUGHES. I make a point of order on that amendment. It was passed upon as in Committee of the Whole, and having been passed upon it can not be renewed.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Chair has already ruled that there is one amendment, and that is the amendment which was reported from the committee as an entirety, and it is open to amendment in the Senate.

Mr. REED. Mr. President, I wish to say by way of preliminary that by offering this motion to reduce the number to 200,000 men I do not mean to say that I approve of a regular established army in time of peace of 200,000 men. But the Senate having passed an amendment raising the Army to 250,000 men in time of peace, I offer this amendment to the amendment in the hope that a reduction may be effected.

Mr. President, we are not, by the amendment, dealing with the question of a standing army in time of war. It is not a question of a standing army when war is threatened that we are dealing with, because the language of the amendment which was presented by the Senator from Connecticut is such as to fix the number at a time when there is no actual or threatened war and when there is no emergency in which the public safety demands a standing army greater than 250,000.

I do not believe we ought to fasten upon the taxpayers of this country an established army, a permanent army, a professional army of professional soldiers, in a time of profound peace to exceed 200,000 men. The figure named would have appalled us a few months ago; it would have appalled those of us who were not "peace-at-any-price" men; it would have appalled those of us who believe that the Army ought to be somewhat strengthened. When it is proposed, as it is proposed in this bill, to fasten upon the taxpayers the enormous burden of a standing army of 250,000 men in a time of profound peace, when there is neither threat of war nor danger of war; when it is proposed, in addition to that, to establish military camps which are to cost an unknown sum of money; when it is proposed, in addition to that, to establish a volunteer army of unknown size and at an unknown cost; when it is proposed, in addition to that, to turn every school almost in the country into a training camp—when all these are added together and when on top of that will come a bill to vastly increase our naval establishment, I say we have arrived at a time when we ought to give ourselves pause and indulge in a little sober thought.

If war threatens, if the clouds of war are lowering on the horizon, this amendment, with the restrictions contained in it, does not stop the President's hand, but in a time of peace, when there is no threat of war, when there is no trouble and no disturbance, I say that, in my humble judgment, to fasten a standing army of more than 200,000 men upon this country, an army of professional soldiers, whose business it is to maintain themselves, who will naturally be seeking for further advantage—to do that is a grave wrong to this country; it is a repudiation of the traditions not only of the Democratic Party but of the country itself, and it ought not to be done.

Mr. WILLIAMS. Mr. President, I do not think that the amendment offered by the Senator from Missouri [Mr. REED] means very much, and I am opposed to it principally because of what he thinks it means.

Mr. REED. Well, Mr. President, I thank the Senator for the compliment, and of course I am quite willing——

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Mississippi yield to the Senator from Missouri?

Mr. REED. To sit at his feet and learn wisdom.

Mr. WILLIAMS. I have not yielded to the Senator for an interruption. I have only five minutes in which to speak.

Mr. REED. The Senator ought to be polite during the five minutes.

Mr. WILLIAMS. I am; but I ask the Senator not to consume my time. I meant no disrespect to the Senator from Missouri; I meant just what I said; I am not so much opposed to the amendment because of what it really means as because of what the Senator from Missouri thinks it means.

The Senator from Missouri, by his amendment, provides that the Army shall not be over 200,000 men, except in the event of war or "threatened war." Now, what does "threatened war" mean? What sense is there in the phrase? The whole world has been threatened with war ever since Belgium was invaded and ever since the Lusitania was sunk. Are we now, the United States of America, in a state where we are threatened with war or not? Are we, or are we not, threatened with war from Mexico? Are we, or are we not, threatened with war from the settlement of the submarine question? Have we been, or have we not been, called in session to-morrow in solemn Congress assembled by the President of the United States for some purpose which we do not now ourselves even understand? Is that, or is it not, a war purpose? So, I say, of the phrase "threatened war" is kept in the Senator's amendment it means nothing——

Mr. REED. It is in the bill now.

Mr. WILLIAMS. Whether it is or not counts not, because it leaves in the President the same discretion to raise the Army to 250,000 men that was left with him by the amendment offered by the Senator from Connecticut [Mr. BRANDEGEE] and adopted by the Senate. Of course, if it means that the Army can not exceed a certain number except in the case of war or "threatened war," we are now in a state of "threatened war," provided the President thinks so.

I meant no disrespect to the Senator from Missouri; I think very highly of him; he and I are very good friends, and we are going to stay good friends; and whenever I say that a man means one thing and has stated another, I mean no disrespect to him morally, mentally, or physically. The Senator has said one thing and meant another. He thinks he means by this amendment that, if it is adopted, the President will not be able to raise the Army above 200,000 men, but it does not mean that, and can not mean that, provided the President thinks that we are "threatened" with international disturbance. I do not know what the Senator from Missouri thinks about it, but I think we are pretty seriously threatened right now with international disturbances, both from the East and from the South. So I see no use of adopting the amendment. If the amendment does mean what the Senator from Missouri intended it to mean, then I am still more opposed to it, because I think it is well and right to leave war preparation within the discretion of the President to raise the Regular Army up to 250,000 men if he thinks it necessary, if he thinks it advisable, and he will not think it either necessary or advisable unless the military advisers behind him—the Army officers and the staff—advise him to that effect.

Mr. REED. Mr. President——

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Mississippi yield to the Senator from Missouri?

Mr. WILLIAMS. I do.

Mr. REED. The time of the Senator from Mississippi has expired, I presume, has it not?

The VICE PRESIDENT. No; he has half a minute yet.

Mr. REED. Mr. President, I move to amend the amendment by striking out the word "excluding" and inserting the word "including" in the second line of the amendment.

The VICE PRESIDENT. There is an amendment pending.

Mr. HUGHES. There is an amendment pending, Mr. President.

The VICE PRESIDENT. There is an amendment pending.

Mr. HUGHES. I make a point of order against the second amendment that it is not in order.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The amendment is in the third degree, and is not in order.

Mr. MYERS. Mr. President——

Mr. HUGHES. I withdraw the point of order, so as to give the Senator from Missouri an opportunity to speak.

Mr. REED. Mr. President, I have just a word to say.

The VICE PRESIDENT. It is not within the power of the Chair to extend the five minutes.

Mr. REED. I have offered an amendment.

The VICE PRESIDENT. But there is an amendment pending.

Mr. REED. The point of order has been withdrawn.

Mr. HUGHES. I have withdrawn the point of order.

Mr. REED. Mr. President, if I had written the language of this amendment which the Senator from Mississippi [Mr. WILLIAMS] has criticized, I might have thought that I did not understand what I wrote myself, and I would naturally have taken it to the Senator from Mississippi to obtain his critical judgment upon it, but the language is not my own; it is the language that is in the bill now and that the Senator helped to vote in the bill, and, if it is ambiguous or meaningless, it is there not by any act or vote of mine. I have not undertaken to change that language. I am simply trying to strike out of the measure the one word "fifty." If that is done, the figures "250,000" will be reduced to "200,000" and would work a reduction in the proposed army of 50,000. If the section means nothing, it ought not to have been put in the bill. I think it does mean a great deal. I think it means that in a time of profound peace the President is absolutely authorized to have an army of 250,000 men to have that kind of an army whether there is any war or any threat of war; and that if we strike out the word "fifty" his power will be reduced to raising an army of 200,000 men in time of peace.

Mr. MYERS. Mr. President, I am very heartily in favor of the amendment offered by the Senator from Missouri [Mr. REED]. While I should prefer the number of the Army to be less than 200,000, I believe that 200,000 soldiers in times of peace are better than 250,000.

The way this bill now stands it provides for a regular standing army in times of peace of 250,000 men. The volunteer-army provision, which remains in the bill, at its full measure calls for about 258,000 men; the enrolled militia of the States at present number 134,000 men, with a prospect of being very greatly increased, making a total called for by this bill as it now stands of 642,000 men; and when you add to that number the pupils who will be enrolled in the schools and colleges, as provided in the bill, it will doubtless bring the number to a million—a soldiery of a million men in times of peace in this country; and this country is not yet in the millionaire class when it comes to a standing army in times of peace.

I do not believe that the sentiment of the people is in favor of an army of that size in peace times. I believe that the figures—200,000 men—offered by the Senator from Missouri are much more in accord with the sentiment of the people of this country than are the figures 250,000. This is a peace army we are organizing. Of course the million men which this bill practically calls for would not be any too large, and probably not large enough in time of war, and in time of war we would get that many men without any trouble, and more, too, if necessary; but I do not believe the people of the country want to count their soldiery in figures of millions in times of peace. I hope the amendment will be adopted.

Mr. REED and Mr. MYERS called for the yeas and nays, and they were ordered.

The Secretary proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. CHILTON (when his name was called). Making the same announcement that I have on several former ballots as to my pair and its transfer, I vote "nay."

Mr. CLARK of Wyoming (when his name was called). I have a general pair with the senior Senator from Missouri [Mr. STONE], who is detained from the Chamber. However, I have the privilege of voting upon this amendment and I vote "nay."

Mr. COLT (when his name was called). Making the same announcement which I made on previous roll calls, I vote "nay."

Mr. HARDING (when his name was called). Again transferring my pair with the junior Senator from Alabama [Mr. UNDERWOOD] to the Senator from Utah [Mr. SMOOT], I vote "nay."

Mr. SUTHERLAND (when his name was called). I again announce my pair with the Senator from Arkansas [Mr. CLARKE], and transfer it to the Senator from New Mexico [Mr. CATRON] and vote "nay."

Mr. SWANSON. I desire to say that if my colleague [Mr. MARTIN of Virginia] were present he would vote "yea."

Mr. THOMAS (when his name was called). Announcing my pair and transfer as heretofore, I vote "yea."

Mr. TILLMAN (when his name was called). Announcing my pair and its transfer as I did on former votes, I vote "yea."

Mr. BANKHEAD (when Mr. UNDERWOOD's name was called). My colleague [Mr. UNDERWOOD] is unavoidably absent. He is paired with the Senator from Ohio [Mr. HARDING]. If present, my colleague would vote "yea."

Mr. WARREN (when his name was called). I have a pair with the senior Senator from North Carolina [Mr. OVERMAN]. I transfer that pair to the junior Senator from Illinois [Mr. SHERMAN] and vote "nay."

Mr. WILLIAMS (when his name was called). Repeating previous announcements upon previous roll calls, I vote "nay."

The roll call was concluded.

Mr. CURTIS. Mr. President, I have been requested to announce the following pairs:

The Senator from Idaho [Mr. BRADY] with the Senator from Florida [Mr. FLETCHER];

The Senator from Maine [Mr. BURLEIGH] with the Senator from Virginia [Mr. MARTIN]; and

The Senator from Michigan [Mr. TOWNSEND] with the Senator from Florida [Mr. BRYAN].

The result was announced—yeas 32, nays 42, as follows:

YEAS—32.

Bankhead	Hitchcock	Norris	Swanson

So Mr. REED's amendment to the substitute of the committee was rejected.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. Mr. President, when in Committee of the Whole the Senate amended the pending bill on page 169, section 71, being the provision which described a contract that was to be made by the National Guard and by the militia. We amended the bill by adopting a substitute offered by the junior Senator from New York [Mr. WADSWORTH]. I move to strike out the words "Federal soldiers," in the substitute, and to insert the word "militia." It is utterly impossible, under the provisions of the Constitution to require the militia to sign a contract to become soldiers. That, however, is what we have done. The provision of the Constitution referred to in this amendment makes a distinction between Federal soldiers and the militia and between the powers of the President concerning the militia and the Regular Army.

Mr. President and Senators, we are dealing in this amendment with the National Guard or militia, and we provide that they shall be required to sign a contract of enlistment effective to create the status of Federal soldiers within the meaning of section 8, Article I, of the Constitution of the United States. I do not object to the oath required by the Senator from New York [Mr. WADSWORTH], that they shall obey the President of the United States and obey the governor of the State. Of course that means as the President and the governor have authority to command; but here you propose to require them to sign a contract, when they are militia, to be Federal soldiers. That is to say, they are one thing and you require them to sign a contract to be an entirely different thing. They can not be both. They are either militia under the Constitution or they are members of the Regular Army, Federal soldiers. They become entirely subject to the direction of the President under certain circumstances.

I am perfectly willing to let remain in the bill the oath that the Senator from New York prescribes, although that, I think, was unnecessary. I do submit, however, that we do not commend our conduct to the appreciation of those who consider it when we seriously adopt a provision that a member of the militia shall be required to sign a contract to be a member of the Regular Army—to sign a contract to be something which he expressly is not.

Mr. WADSWORTH. Mr. President——

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Georgia yield to the Senator from New York?

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. Certainly. I was through. I yield the floor to the Senator. I thought the Senator wanted to ask me a question.

Mr. WADSWORTH. Mr. President, the purpose of this amendment was to permit a soldier or officer of the so-called Organized Militia to voluntarily take an oath to sign an enlistment contract making himself primarily a Federal soldier. In my judgment that does not take away his obligation to the State, except in so far as his obligation to the Federal Government is superior.

There are cases of that kind in existence to-day, and if I may impose upon the patience of the Senate at this late hour for just a moment I will describe one or two.

The students at Yale University have organized a battalion of field artillery. They have enlisted for the regular term of enlistment in the Connecticut National Guard in order to do so. The Regular Army officer stationed at Yale University for the purpose of conducting the military courses there, which have been conducted for several years, is a lieutenant in the Regular Army, if my recollection is correct. He has, however, taken a commission in the Connecticut National Guard with the rank of major, in order to command that battalion of field artillery. He has a dual obligation. Will the Senator from Georgia contend that his obligation to the Federal Government, coming through his commission in the Regular Army, is not primary to his commission in the State militia?

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. I will answer the Senator. He simply accepted the assignment——

Mr. WADSWORTH. That is what this amendment proposes to do, on the assumption of dual obligation. The same is true of a captain of Infantry in the First New York Infantry.

Mr. LIPPITT. I understand that this is not compulsory.

Mr. WADSWORTH. It is voluntary.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. Not at all.

Mr. WADSWORTH. And the section of the Constitution which is referred to in this amendment of mine, which was adopted in Committee of the Whole, refers to the power of Congress to raise and maintain armies. I have contended—and, of course, I have not much pride of my opinion in my contention, but others have suggested it to me as being tenable, at least—that the Congress, under that section, has a right to raise and maintain an army in any way it chooses; and if it can do it in conjunction with the States, under a dual form of contract or oath, I think this particular provision which the Senator from Georgia attacks will stand.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. Mr. President, I ask that the Secretary read that part of the provision. The Senator said it was voluntary. I say it requires the signature.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Secretary will read as requested.

The Secretary read as follows:

The provisions of this act as to the National Guard shall not apply to enlisted men thereof who have not signed a contract of enlistment effective to create a status of Federal soldiers within the meaning of section 8, Article I, of the Constitution of the United States.

Mr. WORKS. Mr. President, I think the Senator from New York overlooks the fact that the Constitution and the enlistment of the militiaman fix his allegiance and determine exactly what his duties shall be. His duty is primarily to the State by virtue of the provisions of the Constitution and his enlistment. Now, the proposition is to change that allegiance by an oath that he is required to take, or may take, which is entirely violative of the Constitution.

Mr. THOMAS. Does the Senator think that allegiance could be changed if the oath were taken?

Mr. WORKS. No; it might not be changed, but certainly we ought not even to authorize an oath of that kind.

Mr. THOMAS. I quite agree with the Senator.

Mr. HUGHES. Mr. President, as I understand the provision of the Constitution, a State may organize and maintain militia, but it may not maintain troops. How can a man be a trooper of the United States and a militiaman of the State at the same time?

The difficulty with the whole proposition is that it is attempting to utilize the National Guard in a way that never was intended. It can not be done. You may get the votes of the members of the National Guard by attempting it, but it can not be done in a way to make it effective as a national force in time of peace.

Mr. MARTINE of New Jersey. Mr. President, almost remarkable, and yet fitting, I think, in this particular place, is the counsel of the father of the Democratic Party, Thomas Jefferson. I find in Jefferson's Autobiography, on page 226, these words:

If the present Congress—

Referring to the Congress of his day—

If the present Congress errs in too much talking, how could it be otherwise in a body to which the people send 150 lawyers, whose trade is to question everything, yield nothing, and talk by the hour? That 150 lawyers should ever do business together should never be expected.

That is from Thomas Jefferson's Autobiography. I commend it to my legal friends in this body. [Laughter.]

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is on the amendment of the Senator from Georgia [Mr. SMITH] to the amendment of the committee.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. I call for the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered, and the Secretary proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. CHILTON (when his name was called). I make the same announcement as on a former ballot, and vote "nay."

Mr. CLARK of Wyoming (when his name was called). Repeating the announcement as to my pair made on a former occasion, I vote "nay."

Mr. HARDING (when his name was called). Repeating my announcement as to the transfer of my pair, I vote "nay."

Mr. JOHNSON of Maine (when his name was called). I have a general pair with the junior Senator from North Dakota [Mr. GRONNA]. In his absence, I withhold my vote.

Mr. SUTHERLAND (when his name was called). Repeating the announcement with respect to my pair that I made on the prior roll calls, I vote "nay."

Mr. WARREN (when his name was called). Announcing my pair as before, and the transfer of the Senator from North Carolina to the Senator from Illinois [Mr. SHERMAN], I vote "nay."

Mr. WILLIAMS (when his name was called). Making the same announcement as previously, I vote "nay."

The roll call was concluded.

Mr. JOHNSON of Maine. I transfer my general pair with the Senator from North Dakota [Mr. GRONNA] to the Senator from Arizona [Mr. ASHURST] and will vote. I vote "nay."

Mr. CURTIS. I have been requested to announce the following pairs:

The Senator from Idaho [Mr. BRADY] with the Senator from Florida [Mr. FLETCHER];

The Senator from Maine [Mr. BURLEIGH] with the Senator from Virginia [Mr. MARTIN]; and

The Senator from Michigan [Mr. TOWNSEND] with the Senator from Florida [Mr. BRYAN].

The result was announced—yeas 15, nays 48, as follows:

YEAS—15.

Brandegee	Myers	Shafroth	Swanson
Culberson	O'Gorman	Simmons	Thomas
Hardwick	Owen	Smith, Ariz.	Tillman

So the amendment of Mr. SMITH of Georgia to the amendment of the committee was rejected.

Mr. OWEN. Mr. President, in the organization of the General Staff the provision is that the members shall be detailed from corresponding grades in the Army. I move to insert, after the word "Army," in line 8, page 110, the words "including the Medical Corps," so that the Medical Corps will be represented on the General Staff. At present they have no representation as of right, although I believe they have an assignment there.

Mr. CHAMBERLAIN. I will accept that amendment.

Mr. OWEN. I send to the desk a letter which I ask to have included as a part of my remarks.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Without objection, that may be done.

The letter referred to is as follows:

WAR DEPARTMENT,
Washington, April 14, 1916.

Hon. ROBERT L. OWEN,
United States Senate, Washington, D. C.

MY DEAR SIR: Referring to your letter of the 7th instant in regard to the Medical Corps, I beg to submit replies to your inquiries, as follows:

1. How many general officers of the line will there be in the Army should the provisions of H. R. 12766, calendar No. 285, of the Senate, become a law?

There will be 47 general officers of the line.

2. What will be the proportion of general officers to the officers of the line of the Army?

There will be 1 general officer to 163 officers of the line.

3. What is the proportion of general officers in the Medical Corps to the officers of the Medical Corps as a whole?

At present 1 general officer to 443 medical officers. As provided in the Senate bill 1 general officer to 896 officers of the Medical Corps.

4. Should R. S. 1222–1224 apply to the Medical Corps?

The medical officers provided for the Military Establishment are needed for duty therewith. If the provisions of R. S. 1222–1224 did not apply to medical officers, we would see them detailed away on all manner of duties.

The technical knowledge of these officers in matters of sanitation and in preventive medicine is made available to the country without the necessity of detailing them away from their proper duties and the Army suffering as a result. These officers are now available for a wide range of duties with the Regular Army and Organized Militia. Were they permitted to serve outside the Military Establishment, they could not but interfere with other properly constituted governmental agencies organized and supported to perform a particular function. If medical officers are to be permitted to accept civil positions, the department must know to what extent, the Medical Corps must then be increased accordingly, and the increased expense involved should then become a proper charge against some department of the Government other than the War Department.

5. What is the rate of casualties for medical officers?

The only data available at this time is that for the English service, compiled from the London Lancet, August 1, 1914, to January 29, 1916:

Killed	64
Died of wounds	33
Died from other causes	17
Missing	65
Wounded	271
Total	450

No figures are available from French sources as to casualties among medical officers. The Journal Officiel for August 14, 1915, Chamber of Deputies, reporting debate in the Chamber of Deputies of France, page 1, 359, second column, in debate M. Nevarre stated:

"Officers of the health service have paid a large tribute to this war. They have fallen at the side of our valiant fighters in proportion equivalent to those of officers of infantry."

There is not sufficient data at hand to show what the percentage of these losses has been.

Very respectfully,

NEWTON D. BAKER,
Secretary of War.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is on agreeing to the amendment of the Senator from Oklahoma to the amendment of the committee.

The amendment to the amendment was agreed to.

Mr. JONES. Mr. President, before this amendment is agreed to, I want to ask the chairman of the committee a question.

As I understand, the Chief of the Coast Artillery was made a member of the General Staff by legislation of Congress several years ago. I do not find in the bill here anything recognizing that provision to exist. I want to know whether or not this bill does away with that provision of the law and possibly takes the Chief of Coast Artillery out of the General Staff?

Mr. CHAMBERLAIN. Mr. President, the committee concluded, after going into this matter, that the Chief of the Staff Corps ought not to be on the General Staff. The Chief of the Coast Artillery was the one man who was retained on it. The committee thought they ought to be all put on or all left off; and to that end the Chief of the Coast Artillery Corps was left off.

Mr. JONES. I do not care whether the Chief of Engineers is a member of the General Staff or not. I think the Chief of Coast Artillery ought to be a member of the General Staff. It seems to me that is one of the most important lines of our defense, and I regret very much indeed that the committee has repealed that part of the law that made him a member of the General Staff. I think he ought to be a member of it.

Mr. CHAMBERLAIN. But, with all due deference to the distinguished officers connected with the Coast Artillery Corps, they have been insisting on more here all the time than almost any other branch of the service. I say that without disrespect to them. I could name some of the gentlemen who are here almost all the time, but they insisted on more than any other branch of the service. They have done it in the committee. They do it here in Congress. That amendment to leave off the Chief of the Staff Corps was adopted here this afternoon, and four or five Senators have come to me and asked me why he was left off. It is perfectly proper, of course; I am not criticizing anybody, but it has been so all the time.

Mr. JONES. I want to say to the Senator from Oregon that no member of the corps has spoken to me about it. In looking through the bill here I did not know that any amendment of that kind had been adopted this afternoon until a little while ago.

Mr. CHAMBERLAIN. Let me call the Senator's attention to the fact that the Coast Artillery Corps is represented on the General Staff by Maj. Moses, by Maj. Compton, and by Maj. Cullen—a pretty good representation on the General Staff for one branch of the service—and by Capt. Kilbourne, a very distinguished officer, as all of them are. Now, why should the chief of that particular corps be placed on the General Staff?

Mr. JONES. Of course, I do not know much about these military matters, but it has occurred to me that the Chief of the Coast Artillery, no matter who he is, ought to be on the General Staff.

The VICE PRESIDENT. There is no amendment pending before the Senate.

Mr. THOMAS. I wish to ask the Senator having charge of the bill whether the chiefs of other arms of the service are on the staff.

Mr. CHAMBERLAIN. They are not, except the Chief of the Militia Division.

Mr. DU PONT. If I may be permitted to say a word, the Engineer Corps——

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Chair would like to know what, under the unanimous-consent agreement, Senators are discussing.

Mr. JONES. I understood that the amendment offered by the Senator from Oklahoma had not been voted upon.

The VICE PRESIDENT. It has been agreed to.

Mr. JONES. Then, I move to strike out the amendment the chairman of the committee refers to, which was adopted this afternoon, taking the Chief of the Coast Artillery off the General Staff.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is on agreeing to the amendment of the Senator from Washington to the amendment of the committee.

The amendment to the amendment was rejected.

Mr. CHAMBERLAIN. There is one request that I desire to make, and that is to ask permission of the Senate that authority be given the clerks to renumber the sections of the bill so as to make them come in numerical order and that sections not specified by enumeration be given their proper numbers.

The VICE PRESIDENT. That is always done as a matter of form by the clerks. The question is on concurring in the amendment made as in Committee of the Whole.

The amendment was concurred in.

The amendment was ordered to be engrossed and the bill to be read a third time.

The bill was read the third time, and passed.

The title was amended so as to read: "A bill for making further and more effectual provision for the national defense, and for other purposes."

MESSAGE FROM THE HOUSE.

A message from the House of Representatives by J. C. South, its Chief Clerk, announced that the House had passed the following bills:

S. 1294. An act to amend section 81 of the act entitled "An act to codify, revise, and amend the laws relating to the judiciary," approved March 3, 1911;

S. 3560. An act to validate a certain title whereon the purchase money has been paid on a private sale by order of the United States district court for the middle district of Pennsylvania, at No. 83, June term, 1910, sitting in bankruptcy; and

S. 4480. An act providing for the establishment of two additional terms of the district court for the eastern district of North Carolina, at Raleigh, N. C.

The message also announced that the House had passed the following bills, in which it requested the concurrence of the Senate:

H. R. 308. An act to amend the act to regulate commerce, as amended, and for other purposes;

H. R. 529. An act creating an additional land district in the State of California, and for other purposes;

H. R. 6782. An act providing for the leasing of arid lands which are irrigable, belonging to Indian allottees, and fixing the maximum time for which such leases may run;

H. R. 8654. An act to amend an act entitled "An act to provide for an enlarged homestead," approved February 19, 1909, by adding a new section, to be known as section 7;

H. R. 8669. An act authorizing the Secretary of the Interior to extend the lease of certain land in Stanley County, S. Dak., for a buffalo pasture;

H. R. 9525. An act to establish a national park in the Territory of Hawaii;

H. R. 9909. An act to authorize the Chicago, Milwaukee & St. Paul Railway Co. to construct a bridge across the Missouri River;

H. R. 11320. An act granting the consent of Congress to the counties of Twin Falls and Minidoka, State of Idaho, to construct a bridge across Snake River;

H. R. 12716. An act amending sections 4898, 4906, 4921, 4934, and 4935 of the Revised Statutes of the United States; and

H. R. 13112. An act to amend section 14 of the seamen's act of March 4, 1915.

The message further announced that the House had passed the bill (S. 683) prohibiting the use of the name of any Member of either House of Congress or of any officer of the Government by any person, firm, or corporation practicing before any department of the Government.

The message also announced that the House had passed the bill (S. 4876) to provide for an increase in the number of cadets at the United States Military Academy.

ENROLLED BILLS SIGNED.

The message further announced that the Speaker of the House had signed the following enrolled bills, and they were thereupon signed by the Vice President:

S. 4889. An act to renew patent No. 21053; and

S. 5229. An act granting the consent of Congress to the county commissioners of Warren County, Pa., to construct a bridge across the Allegheny River in the borough of Warren, county of Warren, in the State of Pennsylvania.

PETITIONS AND MEMORIALS.

Mr. BURLEIGH presented a memorial of sundry citizens of Soldier Pond, Me., remonstrating against the enactment of legislation to permit railroad station agents to deliver the mail to post offices, which was referred to the Committee on Post Offices and Post Roads.

He also presented a memorial of sundry citizens of Lakeview, Mich., remonstrating against the enactment of legislation for compulsory Sunday observance in the District of Columbia, which was ordered to lie on the table.

He also presented a petition of sundry citizens of Three Rivers, Mich., praying for the enactment of legislation to further restrict immigration, which was ordered to lie on the table.

BILLS INTRODUCED.

Bills were introduced, read the first time, and, by unanimous consent, the second time, and referred as follows:

By Mr. BURLEIGH:

A bill (S. 5638) granting a pension to Sibae S. Andrews; to the Committee on Pensions.

By Mr. PAGE:

A bill (S. 5639) granting a pension to Saloma V. Bedell (with accompanying papers); to the Committee on Pensions.

By Mr. LANE:

A bill (S. 5640) to amend paragraph 207 of the act approved October 3, 1913, entitled "An act to reduce tariff duties and to provide revenue for the Government, and for other purposes"; to the Committee on Finance.

A bill (S. 5641) granting an increase of pension to George M. Spencer (with accompanying papers); to the Committee on Pensions.

By Mr. JONES:

A bill (S. 5642) granting a pension to Lora W. Hughes; and

A bill (S. 5643) granting an increase of pension to Lydia A. Belknap (with accompanying papers); to the Committee on Pensions.

By Mr. CHAMBERLAIN:

A bill (S. 5644) granting an increase of pension to Annie Humphreys; to the Committee on Pensions.

RIVER AND HARBOR APPROPRIATIONS.

Mr. NELSON submitted an amendment intended to be proposed by him to the river and harbor appropriation bill (H. R. 12193), which was referred to the Committee on Commerce and ordered to be printed.

Mr. CHILTON. I move that the Senate adjourn.

The motion was agreed to; and (at 9 o'clock and 2 minutes p. m., Tuesday, April 18, 1916) the Senate adjourned until tomorrow, Wednesday, April 19, 1916, at 12 o'clock meridian.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES.

TUESDAY, April 18, 1916.

The House met at 11 o'clock a. m.

The Chaplain, Rev. Henry N. Couden, D. D., offered the following prayer:

O Thou who art infinitely wise, all powerful, whose essence is love, God of our fathers and our God, we come to Thee because we believe in Thee and that without Thy help we can do nothing. As we turn back the pages of history and let the light of the past fall into our souls, we are impressed with the overwhelming fact that it is but the reflection of Thy glory shining down to us through the acts of our fathers who wrought well, wrought nobly, and builded even better than they knew, because Thy spirit brooded over them and was in them. So let it be with these Thy servants, for we realize that no act of theirs will stand the test of time unless it be in accordance with the eternal principles of right and truth and justice which are written in the heart of man, exemplified in the precepts and incomparable life of the Jesus of Nazareth. Amen.

The Journal of the proceedings of yesterday was read and approved.

MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE.

A message from the Senate, by Mr. Waldorf, one of its clerks, announced that the Senate had passed bill, joint resolutions, and concurrent resolution of the following titles, in which the concurrence of the House of Representatives was requested:

S. 5310. An act to authorize the county commissioners of Walla Walla and Franklin Counties, Wash., to construct a bridge across the Snake River between Pasco and Burbank;

S. J. Res. 119. Joint resolution to permit the issuance of medical and other supplies to the American National Red Cross for a temporary period;

S. J. Res. 98. Joint resolution to print as a public document the final report and testimony submitted to Congress by the United States Commission on Industrial Relations; and

S. Con. Res. 19. Concurrent resolution directing the Attorney General to investigate whether the phenomenal increase in the price of gasoline is the result of any violation of the laws of the United States.

AGRICULTURAL APPROPRIATIONS.

On motion of Mr. LEVER, the House resolved itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the further consideration of the bill (H. R. 12717) making appropriations for the Department of Agriculture for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1917, with Mr. HAMLIN in the chair.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will state that when the committee rose on Saturday last there was pending an amendment offered by the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. WALSH] to strike out the paragraph.

Mr. LEVER. Pending the discussion of that I wish to make a brief statement. A few weeks ago the Committee on Agriculture authorized me to offer an amendment to this bill, at the proper place, providing—

For investigation and demonstration within the United States to determine the best methods of obtaining potash on a commercial scale, including the purchase or rent of lands and buildings and the erection of buildings and other structures necessary therefor, $175,000.

I ask unanimous consent that this amendment may be printed in the RECORD, so that gentlemen may see it and have an opportunity to study it before it is reached. It will be offered at page 49, after line 11. I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks by printing this amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The amendment will be reported for the information of Members.

Mr. LEVER. I have read it already.

Mr. MANN. It has been read, and the gentleman asks to have it printed for information.

The CHAIRMAN. Without objection, it will be printed in the RECORD.

The amendment is as follows:

Page 49, after line 11, insert the following:

"For investigation and demonstration within the United States to determine the best methods of obtaining potash on a commercial scale, including the purchase or rent of lands and buildings and the erection of buildings and other structures necessary therefor, $175,000."

The CHAIRMAN. The attention of the Chair has been called to the fact that the motion of the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. WALSH] to which the Chair referred a moment ago has not been reported from the Clerk's desk. Will the gentleman from Massachusetts renew his motion?

Mr. WALSH. I move to strike out the paragraph.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Mr. WALSH moves to amend by striking out the paragraph beginning with line 1, page 25, and ending with line 14, page 27.

Mr. LEVER. Mr. Chairman, this is the paragraph relating to the purchase and distribution of valuable seeds. Before the gentleman proceeds I wonder if we can not reach an agreement as to the amount of discussion on this item. I am going to suggest one hour, one-half to be controlled by the proponents of the amendment and one-half by the opposition to it.

Mr. MANN. Make it an hour and a half.

Mr. LEVER. I do not believe we will need that much.

Mr. MANN. I hope the gentleman will make it an hour and a half.

Mr. LEVER. Then I will make it an hour and a half, though I do not think it will all be consumed.

Mr. MANN. I hope not.

Mr. LEVER. I ask unanimous consent that all debate on this paragraph and amendments thereto be closed in one hour and a half, one half to be controlled by the proponents of the proposition and the other half by the opponents of it.

Mr. MANN. The gentleman had better make it specific.

Mr. LEVER. One-half to be controlled by the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. WALSH] and one-half by myself.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman asks unanimous consent that debate on this paragraph and all amendments thereto close in one hour and a half; one-half that time to be controlled by himself and one-half by the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. WALSH]. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. WALSH. Mr. Chairman, this is a provision of the Agricultural bill which Members of Congress would have the people believe is inserted for the benefit of the farmers of this country. Members may be able to fool themselves into thinking that it is for the benefit of the farmers, but you are not fooling the farmers of the country for one moment, neither are you fooling anybody else. Of what benefit is it to the farmer—the real farmer—of the West or of the South to receive a package of seed with 211 grains of corn in it? He could plant that in the corner of his front yard and never know that it was a part of his crop. It is not any new variety, but a kind with which he is familiar. Of what benefit is it to the farmer to receive a package of peas with something over 300 grains of seed? He knows how to plant peas, and how they grow, and what they are. The gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. SIMS] gave vent to a plaintive cry, when this paragraph was reached the other day, for more beans for Tennessee. I want to state to the gentleman that the city of Boston claims a monopoly on beans as well as culture, and I trust some Member from the Boston district will properly resent this attempt to take away that well-earned distinction.

Mr. ALLEN. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. WALSH. I do not.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman declines to yield.

Mr. WALSH. But the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. SIMS] says they want these beans down there so they can can them. Apparently they eat what they can, and what they can not they can. The best thing to do with the proposition for congressional free seed is to "can" it. The other day we had a measure before this House calling for vast appropriations for river and harbor improvements, and I voted against it. It had been properly termed, in several respects, a pork measure. I voted against that, and I shall vote against this provision, which the gentleman from Tennessee would have converted into a "bean measure." There is no reason why the Congress of the United States should furnish the farmers of Tennessee with seed to plant beans so that they can turn them over to the canneries and make a profit out of them. We ought to do the canning, and can both the "pork" bill and the "bean" bill, too. If you should provide in this bill to furnish the people of this country a package of clothespins or a bottle of soothing sirup, you would have a great demand for them, because it is human nature to get something for nothing; and undoubtedly the same gentlemen would vote for it, and seek to justify their action by giving the same reasons we now hear. Members say it is a great thing to have the children of the country receive seeds and plant them in their little gardens, because it stimulates the love of agriculture and horticulture; but you will notice that the children as they grow up into young manhood and womanhood do not stay on the farm. There is a cry to keep the children and young men on the farm, but all these years that we have spent money in sending out these seeds in the past have not resulted in stimulating the love of agriculture, as the boys continue to leave the farm just the same.

If this is such an important activity of the Department of Agriculture, I would like to inquire why it is, in the report of the Secretary and in the report of the Bureau of Plant Industry, you can not find a paragraph stating what has been accomplished by it; you can not find set forth in any of the department reports for the past year any reports that have been sent to the department by the recipients of these seeds; and yet on every package of seeds that is sent out by congressional distribution is a line, "Please report the results of the planting of these seeds to the department." And yet the Secretary of Agriculture in his report has not a single line regarding the congressional distribution of these seeds. The men in charge of the bureau having charge of the distribution of these seeds have not a single word as to the benefits or results that have been attained, and the committee's report has only five lines regarding it.

In these days, Mr. Chairman, when the people have their minds turned toward greater problems, I say to you that if you sincerely believe that the farmers of the country are deeply interested in this matter you will find they are willing to sacrifice for this year at least this gift out of your hands of one package of seeds, particularly if their attention were called to the fact that the amount called for in this paragraph, $250,000, will be sufficient to complete 20 aeroplanes for our Army and Navy in this country, which is a branch of the service which is sadly in need of attention, or go far toward paying for additional enlisted men in the ranks of the Army. I believe that the farmers would gladly sacrifice the little gift of a package of seeds which you are sending out under the guise of stimulating a love for agriculture.

Mention was made the other day of a young Swiss farmer in Nebraska by the gentleman from Nebraska [Mr. REAVIS], who had reached a high place in his profession as a farmer, who had taken prizes as the result of a high state of cultivation on his 20-acre farm. I warrant that that young farmer accomplished that without any aid from free seeds. As a matter of fact, Mr. Chairman, he took care to see to it that the farmers in his vicinity were furnished with seed by himself in order that his own crops might not be polluted; he did not want any free seed planted around in his neighborhood. If you are going to send out seed I say it should be seed of new and rare varieties, such as we provide for in the preceding paragraph in this bill. If you turn this appropriation into that you might accomplish some good and be solving some problems that the farmers at home would like to have solved. [Applause.]

Mr. LEVER. Mr. Chairman, I yield five minutes to the gentleman from Mississippi [Mr. QUIN].

Mr. QUIN. Mr. Chairman, I am surprised that the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. WALSH] wants to gouge the farmers of this country out of what little they get from the Government. I take it from his viewpoint that he thinks all the farmer is fit for is to pay taxes and go out to fight for his country. [Laughter.]

I suppose he lives in the city of Boston where, as he says, there is a monopoly on navy beans and culture. I have nothing against Boston; that is the place where our forefathers turned the tea overboard because they did not want to be treated unjustly, because they did not want to be taxed without representation; but it seems that the modern idea, according to this distinguished statesman, is that Boston is different from the old days when patriotism ruled there.

Mr. TAGUE. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. QUIN. No; I can not yield.

Mr. TAGUE. I only wanted to correct the statement that the gentleman made. The gentleman from Massachusetts he refers to is not from the city of Boston.

Mr. QUIN. Then I am surprised at his taking so much unction unto himself to speak for Boston. I presume they want all the seed over there to feed the codfish, because they want to monopolize everything on earth. They already have, he says, a monopoly on culture and navy beans. I do not object to their keeping it on navy beans, for they serve a good purpose, but I think he overstates it when he says that they have it on culture. I know that Boston has one distinction—they consider the flavor of coon as sweet perfume and consider the standing of the nigger socially equal to that of a white man; that he is as good as a white citizen. They can keep that distinction if they want to, but I do not believe in that doctrine.

But this question of cutting out the seed, Mr. Chairman, seems to me to be one of injustice and hardship on the people of this country. The seeds that go to the farmer and the people in the towns, who can plant a little garden in their backyard and raise vegetables enough for the family; the seeds that go out from the Agricultural Department through the distribution by Congressmen to the people of this Republic enable them to grow vegetables and raise something to reduce the high cost of living. I want to say to the distinguished gentleman from Massachusetts that the farmers of this country write to their Congressmen for garden seeds. They write to them for special field seeds. Not only is the amount allotted to Congressmen distributed, but they have hundreds and thousands of letters asking for garden seeds and flower seeds that they are not able to send out. While the farmer of this country is trying to earn the taxes that are levied upon him, let us in the name of justice keep giving him the little package of garden seeds that he is entitled to. [Applause.] Let his wife be made happy by raising a few beautiful flowers from the Government flower seeds. [Applause.] The gentleman from Massachusetts said that this item would build a few aeroplanes. I know there are a few cranks in this country like him who think you ought to tax the people enough to send them to the poorhouse in order to build a few more battleships and aeroplanes. That element never will be satisfied; they even want to take the shirt off the farmer's back and take his plow gear and harness away from him and his old turning plow and weld them into swords and other instruments for human destruction here in time of peace. I am for this garden-seed item and all the field seeds possible. [Applause.]

Mr. WALSH. Mr. Chairman, I yield 10 minutes to the gentleman from Nebraska [Mr. REAVIS].

Mr. REAVIS. Mr. Chairman, I infer from remarks made in the House last Saturday afternoon when this motion to strike out the paragraph was first made that motions of this nature have been made in the past respecting this item, and that those occasions were more or less field days for the cub Members.

I have sat in this body for some four months and listened to the gentlemen on the other side of the aisle tell of the urgent necessity of devising new means for raising revenue. I have heard them appeal for a continuation of the obnoxious and odious stamp tax, misnamed the war tax, because of the impoverished condition of the Treasury. They have placed Uncle Sam, the symbol of a Nation that built God's youngest and best Government, that subdued a wilderness from sea to sea, that constructed the Panama Canal, the greatest engineering feat of all time—Uncle Sam the majestic, as stated by the gentleman from Wyoming [Mr. MONDELL], has been placed by them like a patient mendicant by the side of telephone booths begging pennies of chance customers for the purpose of defraying the expenses of his daily existence. I have seen gentlemen on the other side of the aisle abate their time-honored prejudice against the protective tariff principle, searching their souls for phrases to show how sad they were at being compelled to continue a tariff upon sugar for the purpose of raising needed revenue. The Ways and Means Committee at this time is searching this Nation with a telescope for some business, some commodity not already overtaxed, upon which to raise an additional sum which the enormous appropriations of this Congress will make necessary. And yet, Mr. Chairman, after burdening the taxpayer of this Nation with a continuation of the obnoxious war tax, with the tax upon sugar, with the taxes and tariffs yet to be returned from the Ways and Means Committee, I have seen the same gentlemen, who have been so grieved because of this necessity, and who have voted for these measures to raise the money, expend the money so derived by such measures to take the stumps out of the Trinity River, the snags out of the Brazos, to make navigable another stream that boasts of but a single boat with a 2-foot draft, having installed in it a foreign engine that is very satisfactory, because, as the testimony shows, "it can make a whistle blow and do other things." [Laughter.]

They have continued that appropriation by expenditures upon another so-called navigable river in such a condition that the appropriation will carry with it funds for the employment of some individual to gather the water hyacinths from the bosom of the sunny southern stream. At least $15,000,000, in my judgment, wasted in that bill alone. And on top of that now we have this other item, the free seed proposition, two hundred and fifty thousand and odd dollars appropriated for a distribution that is not a governmental function in any manner at all. I presume when this appropriation was originally made it was made for the purpose of ascertaining what seeds would grow in the different soils of the Nation, that it was experimental in character, and I presume—I must presume, because I am now in my first term—that the defense of it would be that it was still experimental; that we were sending out new and rare seeds for the purpose of learning something with reference to agriculture, but that presumption was dissipated by the impassioned and eloquent utterances of the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. SIMS] last Saturday afternoon, when he said, "We do not want any new vegetables; we do not want any rare seeds; we want beans, and we want the old-fashioned bean," I suppose with all of its functions and characteristics intact and fully preserved. [Laughter.]

Mr. Chairman, I have heard of a Congressman on this floor who received a request from his constituent that he frank him a guinea pig, and of another one who received a request from a constituent that he frank him a goat, and upon his replying courteously that the Government was not distributing goats this year the constituent replied to him in this language: "It is a hell of a Congressman that can't get a goat for a constituent." [Laughter.] I sincerely trust that the desires of that constituent for a goat are not so enthusiastic that he will seek his Congressman's goat.

What governmental function is answered by this distribution of free seed? Why do you not send out postage stamps; and you gentlemen who represent suffrage States, why do you not have an appropriation to send out cut flowers to your lady voters? From my district there have been returned to me this year more than 200 packages of the seeds that were sent out, accompanied in most instances by a note to the effect that "We are not the objects of charity; we can purchase our own garden seed." [Applause.] And I say to you now, with this Congress facing the tremendous expenses that it is facing, with the momentous matters we have to meet that will add hundreds of millions of dollars to the burdens of the taxpayers in this country in the next year, you and I have no right to prostitute governmental functions by appropriating $250,000 with which to send out seeds, not for the benefit of the farmer, not for the benefit of agriculture, but for the benefit of the Congressman, to such an extent that the Nation to-day is rightfully looking upon it as the annual congressional graft. I shall support the amendment of the gentleman from Massachusetts to strike this appropriation from the bill. [Applause.]

I yield back the remainder of my time.

Mr. LEVER. Mr. Chairman, I yield five minutes to the gentleman from New York [Mr. BENNET].

Mr. BENNET. Mr. Chairman, I am opposed to the amendment of my good friend from Massachusetts [Mr. WALSH], and when he has been here seven years as the time will come, he himself will be opposed to the position which he now takes. I say this with absolute impartiality because I have voted both ways in the last seven years on this matter. There is no place in the country where this distribution of seed is of more real benefit than in a city district. I find by a little hasty calculation that this distribution costs the Government about $585 per congressional district. It is worth it in the city of New York.

Mr. MANN. The gentleman is leaving out the Senators in that calculation, is he not?

Mr. HOUSTON. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BENNET. For a question.

Mr. HOUSTON. I would just like to ask the gentleman if he has made a calculation as to the cost of one package of seed to the Government?

Mr. BENNET. No, sir.

Mr. HOUSTON. The figures which I have made hurriedly are that each package costs the Government about 1⅝ cents. That package contains five smaller packages each of which would retail and does retail at 5 cents, making the Government furnish to the people for 1⅝ cents 25 cents' worth of seed. [Applause.]

Mr. BENNET. I accept the gentleman's statement. I am not very much interested, however, in the intrinsic value of the seed because I have learned in my seven years of experience that there is a great deal more than $580 worth of brightness brought into the lives of the children in every city congressional district. What the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. WALSH] proposes, innocently, to do is to take out of the lives of hundreds of thousands of city children the only piece of nature study that they have during the entire year. There are many things I would give up far more quickly than I would the pride and satisfaction that I get from the letters that come to me from children, children in institutions, for instance, where a little package of flower seed gave them a little garden that is the only spot of nature's beautiful brightness that they have for their own from year's end to year's end. Out on the broad prairies and out in the farming communities the green grass and blue sky are common things not to be measured, but in the city with its teaming thousands, congested and crowded as it necessarily is, we ought to conserve if we can that which links humanity with nature's God.

I have been for this seed proposition now for the last three or four years, because I have become convinced that its trivial expenditure is one of the best little items of expenditure that the Government makes. I know the motion of the gentleman from Massachusetts is not going to prevail; it never has and it never does. There are different reasons why different people vote for it, but I wanted for once to lay before the House the reason why as a city representative, representing always a city district, I voted the last two or three times to keep this seed proposition in, and why I propose this time, with all respect to my friend from Massachusetts, whom I admire, to vote again as a city man to keep this item in and to preserve for the children of my district—and there are many of them—this link between that impulse that is in each of us to admire everything that there is of nature as manifested in its beautiful outward shape——

Mr. GORDON. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BENNET. I will.

Mr. GORDON. To what extent is the gentleman influenced by the strength that is caused by that link between the gentleman and his constituents?

Mr. BENNET. I am influenced precisely to the same extent as the gentleman from Ohio.

Mr. GORDON. Then the gentleman thinks it is graft?

Mr. BENNET. I disagree with the gentleman.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. LEVER. Mr. Chairman, I yield three minutes to the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. MOORE].

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. Mr. Chairman, I am sorry I can not agree with my distinguished friend from Massachusetts [Mr. WALSH] on this proposition. I think his economy in this instance is misplaced. Neither can I agree with the gentleman from Nebraska [Mr. REAVIS]. I am surprised, coming from the State of Nebraska, as he does, he should support an amendment of this kind. Now, the farmers in my section of the country are not particularly anxious about this paragraph in the bill, but there are thousands of city dwellers who desire to participate in this distribution of seed.

My colleague from New York [Mr. BENNET] has made the kind of speech I would like to make if I had five minutes in which to do it and could do it as well. He has spoken of the school children. Let me say there are others besides school children who find a great deal of pleasure in cultivating these seeds. There are those who have small patches of ground in the country. They get out into the country during the recess period or during moments of leisure and there endeavor to cultivate the ground. It is a good thing for the city man and it is good for the farmer.

Apart from the fact that school children do seek these seeds and do indulge in nature's study resulting from the planting of them upon bare spots around congested centers, there is an economical side to this proposition too. The city man ought to know more about farming. He is constantly facing the problem of a higher cost of living and ought to be able to help himself.

We are now cultivating vacant tracts in built-up sections of the city, and these seeds help us in this respect. Strange to say, for one who represents a district that has not an unimproved acre of ground in it, I have a great demand from school-teachers and from children, as well as from men who have small patches of ground in the country. I delight in sending them seed, because I know they do a great deal of good. It keeps the folks in the open air. They ornament and beautify the waste places in the city. The planting of the seed brings the children up to nature, who otherwise never would see its beauties. It brings them into the glorious sunshine that prevails in the country and which we enjoy so little where the brick walls and the heated streets hedge us round about. I do not regret the expenditure of this seed money. It helps us in the cities to a little of your rich and wholesome country environment.

Give us a little more of the sunshine in the city, a little more of that happiness and cheer which comes upon every side of the home in the country. Give us a chance to see daylight once in a while in the built-up sections. The flowers, the sunshine, and the garden help to make life happier all along the line. [Applause.]

Mr. WALSH. Mr. Chairman, I yield five minutes to the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. GREEN].

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. Mr. Chairman, I am in favor of the motion to strike out this provision, although I am not entirely agreed with the gentlemen who consider that no useful object is promoted by the distribution of this seed. Perhaps the greatest benefit we get out of it is the annual speech of my friend from Mississippi [Mr. CANDLER]. That is worth a good deal, but it is not worth $250,000.

My opposition to this provision in the bill is not entirely unselfish. I have found the distribution of seeds—and I will say to the young Members of the House who in the future will have occasion to distribute them, that I think they will have the same experience—I have found the distribution of seeds to be a great burden and an intolerable nuisance; that it takes up the time of the Congressman, with no benefit whatever to him. I have tried all kinds of methods for distributing them, usually the universal method of sending them out broadcast, with the result that some write to me as they have written the gentleman from Nebraska [Mr. REAVIS]. And some other constituent, objecting to my vote on the military bill or some other question, writes indignantly to ask if I think his vote can be purchased with a package of seeds. Then letters of explanation have to follow, stating that I have always opposed this provision, and only distribute the seeds because they are allotted to me, and that the people of some other district would have them if I did not send them out.

But the chief objection I have to this provision, Mr. Chairman, is that, in my judgment, it tends to bring Congress into disrepute. Notwithstanding the fact that the distribution of seeds is the cause of a great deal of expense and, as I have said, a great burden to every Member of the House who has them to distribute, a large part of the people in the country regard it as a form of congressional graft, and in this they are largely wrought up by the newspapers, who always have some adverse comment upon the proceedings in which we are now engaged.

A great portion of the public imagine that the distribution of seeds is for the benefit of the Congressman, that he gets some sort of political advantage out of that distribution. If he does, it is something that some other Members have been able to discover, because I have never been able to find it. The people at large regard the distribution of seeds as a small and petty matter, so far as results and methods are concerned, but as quite a large and important matter when they consider the item of $250,000 which is used to purchase the seeds.

Mr. RUCKER. Will the gentleman yield for a question?

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. With pleasure.

Mr. RUCKER. Has the gentleman made any attempt to ascertain how much it costs to send out these seeds per capita?

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. Do you mean what it costs the Government?

Mr. RUCKER. The people of the United States.

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. I can not say.

Mr. RUCKER. Does not the gentleman know that the cost per capita would be about one-fourth of a mill?

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. I know it is a very small sum considered individually, but it amounts probably to half a million dollars, taking it altogether, the entire expense connected with it in all forms. And the net result is that it tends, as I have said, to bring Congress into disrepute and cast a sort of a shadow upon the work of all the Members here. I think this amendment ought to be sustained. [Applause.]

Mr. WALSH. Mr. Chairman, I yield five minutes to the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. GORDON].

Mr. GORDON. Mr. Chairman, this old hoary-headed graft of free seeds has been in this bill since the time "when the memory of man runneth not to the contrary." The talk of our Republican friends that the Democrats are responsible for it is a little bit of cheap politics. Of course, our Republican friends are a little hard up for issues themselves at present, and they want to unload the burden of any appropriation which in any of its aspects is offensive to any class of people, upon the small Democratic majority in this House. My objection, however, to this appropriation is very much deeper than any mere matter of party and is, I hope, above any question of personal consideration.

I have faithfully distributed all the seeds allotted to me since the first year I was here. The first year I overlooked one of the provisions of the appropriation bill which forfeited all seeds not called for by April 1, and I missed the point that time and failed to distribute the entire allotment, which reverted under the law to the Agricultural Department. But I do wish that the gentlemen of this House, wholly regardless of political or personal considerations, would again give this question very careful consideration before the vote is taken. Two hundred and fifty thousand dollars is a small amount of money for Congress to appropriate, it is true, but that depends upon the purpose for which the appropriation is made. Now, the only claim that has been presented here for this appropriation is that it confers a special favor upon a large number of people and costs a small amount of money. But it seems to me that this contention wholly disregards the fact that it is appropriating public money to confer favors upon individuals. It is a step in the direction of that policy of the appropriation of grain to individuals out of the public warehouse, which obtained along toward the end of the decline and fall of the Roman Republic.

A great many sophistical reasons have been given here. I have heard my friend from Pennsylvania [Mr. MOORE] dilate at length about the little children and how pleased they were with these seeds. Now the real truth about it is that nearly everyone appreciates much beyond its real value anything he gets for nothing. And, of course, to that extent it is appreciated. But to the extent which the Government contributes toward this annual donation it seems to me that it violates a principle of sound government, and I am afraid that many of us are constrained to support this appropriation, not because of the personal benefit conferred upon individual constituents, but because of the political profit inuring to Members of Congress as the result of the distribution. It reminds your constituent that you are thinking of him, and I confess it is to that extent somewhat of a political asset, but I am getting sick and tired of having some of my constituents write me that it is time this graft were abolished and that I ought not to be a party to it. I feel they are right, too, and I hope it will be stricken out. [Applause.]

Mr. LEVER. Mr. Chairman, I yield five minutes to the gentlemen from Kentucky [Mr. KINCHELOE].

Mr. KINCHELOE. Mr. Chairman, in the short time I have been a Member of this House I have learned to believe that every time an appropriation is offered here for the benefit of the wealth-producing class of the country, especially the farmer, it is not only termed a "hoary-headed graft," but that Uncle Sam is a mendicant at all times and unable to pay this character of appropriation. Why, the gentleman from Nebraska [Mr. REAVIS] talks about Uncle Sam being a mendicant; that the Ways and Means Committee now are exerting their best efforts to raise revenue to run this Federal Government. You hear the majority of them on that side of the House talk that way when an appropriation comes up for the benefit of the people, and that we are threatening to go into bankruptcy. The Committee on Ways and Means is devising ways and means to raise revenue with which to defray the expenses of this Government—not in the way the Committee on Ways and Means devised revenue to run this Government when the Payne-Aldrich tariff bill was enacted into law, but in such a way as not to tax the shirts off the backs of the poor and consumers of this country, as a Republican Congress did, but, on the other hand, to continue to tax the rich of this country, who are able to pay. [Applause on the Democratic side.] By reason of this Democratic Congress and a Democratic President we have an income-tax bill that this year will raise a hundred million dollars of revenue to defray the expenses of this Government, not a dollar of which, thank God, comes out of the pockets of the poor, but every dollar of it comes out of the pockets of the rich of this country by reason of a Democratic administration. [Applause on the Democratic side.] Why, I have just left the committee room, where I heard the president of the Chamber of Commerce of New York City testify and say that this country was now in such a flourishing condition that confidence had been restored to the business interests of this country, so that it did not even need any Government aid to build up a merchant marine in this country.

The gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. WALSH] has undertaken to tell us how many grains of seed are contained in a package of corn that is sent out, and of peas. Now, with all due respect to the gentleman, I doubt very seriously whether he would know the difference between a grain of corn and a grain of peas, coming from the place he does. [Laughter.] So long as a $400,000 appropriation is proposed for the harbor of Boston, you will find Massachusetts is on the job, and Uncle Sam is able to pay it; but when you want to appropriate $250,000 with which to purchase this seed, to send to the humble tenants of the home where the wife and children may plant that seed and cultivate and produce the vegetables upon which they shall subsist, then you hear these gentlemen from the city saying it is a "hoary-headed graft," and therefore it ought to be beaten. My friends, there is not an appropriation in any of these appropriation bills, in my judgment, that brings more comfort and does more good to more people than this paragraph in this bill.

I want to say to the gentleman from Nebraska [Mr. REAVIS], who has said that he had 200 packages of seed sent back to him with the statement that the recipients were not paupers, if he will transfer those 200 packages to me I will send them to some humble homes in Kentucky whose occupants are not paupers, but who will appreciate them, and there will be a just return, dollar for dollar, upon every investment that is made under this section of this bill [applause on the Democratic side], and why any man can stand on the floor of this House and oppose this bill, and especially a gentleman who comes from a great agricultural State like Nebraska, who gets so solicitous about the solvency of Uncle Sam, I do not understand. I do not believe there ought to be a dissenting vote against it. [Applause on the Democratic side.]

Mr. WALSH. Mr. Chairman, I yield five minutes to the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. FESS].

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Ohio [Mr. FESS] is recognized for five minutes.

Mr. FESS. Mr. Chairman, I recognize two sides to this question. I believe that a proper distribution of the Government seeds might be justifiable, but I confess it is a pretty difficult thing for me as a Member to know how to distribute them in a way that will make them acceptable without criticism from the people who do not want to receive them. There are those who resent the receipt of this governmental gratuity. Since this debate started I sent to my office for some correspondence. Let me read to you just one, among others like it:

> I am in receipt of your sample of vegetable seeds, all of which I note are old standard sorts. I also note that you wish a report of the results in my trial of these seeds to your department. Of course, you know that nobody can afford to plant Government seeds, as they are of no account, and I understand that there are a few bushels of them lying in this post office unclaimed, because the farmers are wise to the fact that they can not afford to plant rubbish. It is certainly an interesting state of American politics that the people are compelled to pay for this tiresome graft when more than half of them do not want it and have protested to their Congressmen against it, wasting their money in this way, and yet we find it impossible to get a Congressman with enough backbone to stop wasting this money.

Mr. STEENERSON. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield there?

Mr. FESS. Yes.

Mr. STEENERSON. What is the business of that gentleman?

Mr. FESS. This man is a farmer.

Mr. STEENERSON. Is he a big farmer or a small farmer?

Mr. FESS. He is a large farmer. Now, here is another letter which I will read.

Mr. FORDNEY. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield there?

Mr. FESS. Yes; I will yield.

Mr. FORDNEY. I want to say that I represent a strictly agricultural district, and I never heard of anybody in that district who was not willing and glad to receive those seeds; not a soul.

Mr. FITZGERALD. That is because the Republicans are accustomed to being brought up under the Federal Government. [Laughter.]

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Ohio [Mr. FESS] has the floor.

Mr. FESS. Mr. Chairman, I read:

> We return with thanks sample of flower and vegetable seeds sent through the mail. Just why it is necessary for the people to pay for these seeds with their taxes is more than any of us has ever been able to figure out.

Those seeds sent to this particular farmer were returned to my office, he paying, of course, the postage for the return.

Mr. DAVENPORT. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield there for a question?

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman from Ohio yield to the gentleman from Oklahoma?

Mr. FESS. I will yield.

Mr. DAVENPORT. I would like to ask the gentleman if the farmers in Ohio, where he lives, who decline the seeds use a typewriter like the one used on the letter he is reading to the House? [Laughter.]

Mr. FESS. That was, but the other was not. [Laughter.] That makes it very evident that it is a very intelligent farmer, does it not? [Laughter.]

Now, here is another. I read:

> 'Tis sweet to be remembered; 'tis sad to be forgot;
> And deep, indeed, the anguish to be remembered not.

And then, later on, a dissertation upon the distribution of seeds, and, among other things, the letter says:

> Senator Foraker used to send me some garden seeds almost every year. You know I used to know him and Mrs. Foraker quite well, and she always saw to it that I got some seeds every year, until I got clean out of saving them any more.

Mr. ADAIR. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman from Ohio yield to the gentleman from Indiana?

Mr. FESS. I do not want you to think that I am reading humor into this debate. [Here the hammer fell.] That is what I expected. I was afraid of it. [Laughter.]

Mr. WALSH. I yield to the gentleman from Ohio one minute more.

Mr. ADAIR. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. FESS. I will not yield. I want time enough to state my position. I think that if we knew how to distribute these seeds so that those who wanted them could get them and those who do not care for them would not be bothered with them, realizing that we do not get a quantity sufficient to distribute to all of the district, it would be well to do it; but how are we to do that. Are we to send them out promiscuously and let them go everywhere, to those who wish them and to those who resent the gratuity? I doubt very much whether that is the best use to make of this money. Therefore I have my serious doubts whether this ought to be continued. Last year I addressed a letter to each school superintendent, requesting him to give me the number of families represented in the school. I stated to him my desire to distribute the seeds through the schools. I have no definite information of the success of the plan. However, many families in each community would be omitted because not represented in the school. This omission would be ground for the charge that discrimination was practiced.

There were many instances of clubs in villages using seeds for community betterment in a sort of clean-up campaign.

I am concerned about how to distribute these gratuities so as to justify sending them out.

My own opinion is that a better use of Government money can be made. It never was intended that the Government was to enter upon the practice of supplying the country with common garden and flower seeds. If the money were used to discover new uses or new vegetables and fruits, as well as flowers, it would be a very justifiable use of public funds. Any agency that multiplies either the knowledge of new products or the amount of the same is properly a governmental agency, and such knowledge should be given to the citizen. I would prefer to utilize the public funds for the purpose of such investigation rather than a distribution of seeds, especially when many recipients look upon such items as so many bids for political support.

Mr. LEVER. I yield three minutes to the gentleman from Minnesota [Mr. STEENERSON].

Mr. STEENERSON. Mr. Chairman, in the years that I have served here I have thought a good deal on this question, and I have heard the speeches annually delivered upon the subject of the Government seed distribution. I investigated the question as to where the opposition to the free distribution of garden seeds and flower seeds comes from. I find that, so far as my list is concerned, I have not received any letters against it for three or four years, and the only letters I ever received came from very wealthy farmers, who farm a thousand acres or more. I remember one particularly was very severe in his criticism of this graft, as he called it, and I investigated and found that he lived in Buffalo, N. Y., and that he came up to the Red River Valley and farmed about 4,000 acres of land, and had his own conservatory and his carriage and horses, and drove to Fargo, N. Dak., every other day to attend social functions. Now, that is not the kind of a farmer to whom I should send seeds. [Applause.]

The men who appreciate the vegetable seeds, as the gentleman from New York [Mr. BENNET] has stated, are the mechanics, the small people in the cities and villages, who have little garden spots, or perhaps just a few feet of ground upon which they can plant a little garden, or they are the school children who may have a school garden. Then, for instance, in a new country like my district, which was opened to settlement only a few years ago, the pioneer goes out on a claim, and he greatly appreciates the seeds that are sent to him. [Applause.]

As I say, for several years I have never heard one complaint. On the contrary, I will read in answer to the gentleman from Ohio one of the letters which I have received. It says:

> The garden seeds you sent me have done well. I got two wagon boxes full of tomatoes, three wagon boxes of cabbages. The onions and rutabagas are so large I can not describe them. One of our neighbors lost his calf, and we found him in my garden lying down behind a rutabaga, completely hidden.

[Laughter.]

Now, here is a postal card decorated on the back with a rose, which shows that the writer's idea of roses is well developed. This card says:

> The vegetable and flower seeds which you sent me were very good. We got good crops from the vegetables, and very well pleased with the flowers. Thank you.

On the back, to show the writer's appreciation, I suppose, is the form of a heart, and then this poem:

> Love is the union of two hearts
> That beat in silent melody,
> Time with its ravages imparts
> No fusion to its ecstasy.
> —Shakespeare.

Mr. HAMILTON of Michigan. Was this letter written by a man or a woman?

Mr. STEENERSON. That is objected to as incompetent, irrelevant, and immaterial. [Laughter.] In most cases the newspapers which oppose this free-seed distribution are those which publish the advertisements of seed houses.

The Government seed, according to my observation, is invariably good, and much of the seed sold is often old and fails to grow. I agree that some care and discrimination should be used in distributing seeds. They should not be sent to people who do not want them, but there are plenty of people who will make good use of them, and they can be found. The superintendents and teachers of the public schools in most cases will be glad to aid in this work.

I am convinced that the seed distribution stimulates love of nature in the young and interest in our great basic industry—agriculture—among the people.

Mr. LEVER. I yield three minutes to the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. SIMS].

Mr. SIMS. Mr. Chairman, every time there is an attempt to control or regulate certain corporations, you will hear the officers and fiscal agents of these corporations talk about their stocks being owned by widows and orphans. But now we hear gentlemen like the gentleman from Nebraska [Mr. REAVIS] and the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. GORDON] call this free seed distribution graft. Many poor widows and their orphans are unable to buy seeds, and who have to work in their little gardens in order to grow vegetables necessary for a living. There are some men whose souls are no larger than a mustard seed raised from free seeds, who call this seed distribution to real widows and their orphan children graft, and clamor to shut off this puny little appropriation for that purpose, but who vote to create new United States district judges where none are really needed to hold their offices 10 years and then retire on full salary for the balance of their lives. Some will even vote $20,000,000 for a superdreadnaught battleship to rust out on the seas, waiting for an enemy that never comes, and filled with officers who when they reach a certain age limit retire on three-quarters salary for the balance of their lives; and then contend that real destitute widows and orphans shall not have a package of free seeds that do not cost the taxpayers of this country more than 1¼ cents, as shown by my colleague, Judge HOUSTON. My friends, you ought to go and take something that will broaden your vision, and enlarge the impulses of your hearts and your love of humanity. [Applause.]

Mr. WALSH. I yield five minutes to the gentleman from Minnesota [Mr. ANDERSON].

Mr. ANDERSON. Mr. Chairman, I never have been able to understand the interest of the farmer from Philadelphia, Mr. MOORE, in the river and harbor bill until now. He is not interested in navigation. He is interested in irrigation. [Laughter.] He wants to get enough water in the Delaware River to irrigate some of the window boxes in which his constituents plant these garden seeds.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. ANDERSON. I yield to the gentleman from Philadelphia.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. We already have an assured depth of 30 feet at mean low water now in the Delaware River, and we are seeking to get 35 feet. We have all the water we need. All we want is channel depth. I am also interested in irrigation. I will explain that to the gentleman any time he wants to make an issue of it. [Laughter.]

Mr. ANDERSON. Well, the gentleman is interested in irrigation only to the extent of irrigating the Delaware River.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. Oh, no; I am interested in it all over the country. I want the farmers to thrive, especially in the gentleman's State. I like to see them grow wheat and grain, in order that they may supply us with the necessaries of life, so we can pay the farmer for it and make him prosperous.

Mr. ANDERSON. I am sure that if the farmers in Minnesota have to depend upon the interest of the gentleman from Philadelphia in order to prosper they will not get very far.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. Why, we are the best customers of the gentleman's farmers now.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Minnesota has the floor. [Laughter.]

Mr. ANDERSON. I thank the Chairman. I had almost overlooked that fact myself.

Mr. Chairman, I have never voted for this appropriation. I do not know that I shall do so now, although I think it has some merit. But it is so wasteful and so inefficient in the method which is ordinarily adopted in the distribution of these seeds that it is exceedingly difficult to justify it.

The gentleman from Ohio [Mr. FESS] says that he thinks some other method than the ordinary method of distribution of seeds might be of some value. I can tell the gentleman how he can make it of some value. Up to the present year I distributed seed to everyone in my district who asked for them and to many who did not ask for them and who did not want them. This year I adopted a different plan. I took up with all the superintendents of schools in my district the question of making the distribution through these schools. I got a very cordial cooperation from them, and made a very extensive distribution through the schools, with the result school gardens have been established in a large number of towns and communities in my district, where the children undertake the cultivation of small plats in contest with each other. Prizes have been hung up by local associations and a great interest has been inculcated by these contests with seeds furnished by the Government.

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. ANDERSON. Yes.

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. My predecessor tried that, and the result was that the schoolboys had an unusual supply of beans and such things for their bean shooters. [Laughter.]

Mr. ANDERSON. A gentleman sitting by me suggests that that was a good way to conserve the remainder of the crop.

Mr. FESS. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. ANDERSON. Yes.

Mr. FESS. That is the same plan that I used last year, but there are a lot of people that are not represented in the schools.

Mr. ANDERSON. And there are a lot of people that do not care anything about the seeds. It is not a question of getting an ideal method which will reach everyone. If you send them to everyone you will reach some one who does not care about seeds.

Mr. FESS. Will the gentleman yield again?

Mr. ANDERSON. Yes.

Mr. FESS. I found that there were a good many city-beautiful associations that asked for them for the city, but only a very few.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Minnesota has expired.

Mr. FESS and Mr. SIMS, by unanimous consent, were given leave to extend their remarks.

Mr. LEVER. Mr. Chairman, I yield two minutes to the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. COX].

Mr. COX. Mr. Chairman, when I first came to Congress I voted to strike this item out, but I quickly learned to my surprise that there was no danger of its being stricken out. The distribution of Government seeds has been a considerable proposition with me. I took it up at the farmers' institute in my district and found that the farmers did not care anything about it. Three years ago I commenced distributing seeds to school children. I first commenced it in two counties. I found that the system grew and grew until this year I have sent out between twenty-three and twenty-five thousand packages to school children direct. I have had the pleasure of attending old-fashioned country fairs in the last two years in my district, where the school children furnished the material grown from these seeds and where they have won first premiums in contests with the farmers. I have, I think, 10 organizations of Boy Scouts in my district. I took this proposition up two years ago with the scout masters of the various towns. I think I now represent five or six hundred organizations where the scout masters have gone out in various towns and rented vacant lots, and have now got the boys in these organizations engaged in raising little crops from their gardens. It is the only way I had of disposing of my seed. I believe it has been an effective way and that it has been done in an effective manner. I believe it has produced good results. I do not believe that the farmers in my district care very much about the seeds. They told me so, but every time you get a child interested in agriculture you have begun to tie him to the land. [Applause.]

Mr. LEVER. Mr. Chairman, I yield two minutes to the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. RUCKER].

Mr. RUCKER. Mr. Chairman, we each receive an allotment of 25,000 packages of seed each year. So far as I am concerned, I have never been able to get enough to supply the demand of my constituents. I can hardly appreciate the consistency of gentlemen who yearly send out 25,000 packages of seed and yet decry and denounce the practice as graft. It is hardly consistent. There is not one of these gentlemen who say their constituents do not want the seed that will exchange them with me for something that their constituents do want.

The action of these gentlemen in using so many seed every year which they say their constituents do not want reminds me of a story I heard some time ago which I will take the liberty of telling. Two street urchins found a stray pup. They could not determine which one should have it. They put it in a box and finally agreed that the one who could tell the biggest lie should have the pup. About that time a clerical gentleman came along and he said, "What is the matter, boys?" They told him that they had found a pup but were unable to decide which one should have it, so they had finally agreed that the one that could tell the biggest lie should have the pup. "Oh," said this clerical looking gentleman, "Boys, I am very sorry for you; I am 60 years old and I never told a story in my life." The boys exclaimed with one accord, "Mister, the pup is yours." [Laughter.]

Mr. LEVER. Mr. Chairman, how much time have I remaining?

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from South Carolina has 18 minutes and the gentleman from Massachusetts 7 minutes.

Mr. LEVER. I yield eight minutes to the gentleman from Alabama [Mr. HEFLIN].

Mr. HEFLIN. Mr. Chairman, every time this provision for distributing seeds among the farmers comes up some Member from a city district rises to oppose it. Usually he is a new man, and I suppose it is as good a time to break him in as any other time. The gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. WALSH] comes from a State where they have a monopoly of wooden nutmegs. That industry was started in Connecticut, but they have got to making them in Massachusetts now and have a monopoly of them. [Laughter.] Of course I do not suppose that the gentleman from Massachusetts would like to have that industry disturbed. He comes from the whaling district of Massachusetts, where they have codfish balls and the like. [Laughter.] The gentleman boasts that Boston has a monopoly of baked beans and culture, and he does not want seed distributed over the country for fear that competition might arise with the bean industry of Boston. We see these beans advertised extensively—pork and beans—and when you cut a can open you find a little piece of pork about as big as a possum's ear. [Laughter.] They call it, I believe, Boston pork and beans. The gentleman from Massachusetts does not want seeds, even a small quantity of choice vegetable seeds, distributed amongst the people of the United States. He does not want the farmers of the country to have seeds selected by the Agricultural Department. The department is selecting valuable seed and it is distributing them through the various sections of the country in order that our people may have the best variety of seed. We encourage garden work and increase the supply of garden products, and thus aid in feeding the people of the cities.

The gentleman from Massachusetts opposes the appropriation of $252,000 for this purpose, but he votes for a bill that appropriates $950,000 for pneumatic-tube service that carries the mails through the shutes and into the offices of the people of the cities. [Applause.] The gentleman from Nebraska [Mr. REAVIS], in opposing this measure and making light of sending these seed to farmers, said that we ought to send rose cuttings to the ladies; but the gentleman from Nebraska does not object to a bill that appropriates $950,000 for pneumatic-tube service which carries invitations to pink teas in the cities. [Laughter.] He does not object to that, but some of them over there oppose anything that will distribute a few vegetable seed among the farmers of the country. You Republicans over there are running up against a serious proposition when you oppose the great farming interests of this country. Let me say to the new Members, who are spending time here attacking the interests of the farmers, you had better be doing something else. Did you know that other Members over there used to do that when they first came here. But they either learned better or grew ashamed of it and quit it. [Applause and laughter.] But I suppose that these older and wiser Members are entitled to the amusement furnished by the wisdom and foresight of these courageous new Members.

This new Member from Massachusetts opposed the Government giving aid to the post roads of this country. We pleaded here for the building of a system of public roads in the rural districts, and the gentleman opposed that proposition. Gentlemen on that side, some of them, are constantly opposing propositions that will benefit the farmers of the country. The gentleman from Michigan [Mr. FORDNEY] said that he never heard of anybody complaining, but that the people in his district were always glad to receive these seeds. I have had letters from my district, in which they said, "The seeds you sent me last year were fine. Please add to your list the name of so and so"—some old gentleman or some widow who did not receive any before. And, gentlemen, it costs only $250,000 in all to send these seed, and yet the Seed Trust fights this little distribution of seeds every year. It is fighting it here to-day. It does not want this seed distribution to go on. It interferes with their business, and no trust wants any interference with its business. The Seed Trust wants this seed distribution stopped, and when these gentlemen are speaking against the distribution of seeds among the farmers they are speaking what the Seed Trust wants them to speak.

The little school children of the country receive the flower seeds, and they grow the flowers around the school yards and that encourages them in making flower gardens and in building beautiful parks in the rural regions of the country. Gentlemen, find something else to oppose and speak about. Fight some big proposition and quit haranguing this House about a proposition that benefits the mass of the people in the rural sections of our country. [Applause.]

Mr. WALSH. Mr. Chairman, I yield one minute to the gentleman from Oregon [Mr. MCARTHUR].

Mr. MCARTHUR. Mr. Chairman, like the distinguished gentleman from Alabama [Mr. HEFLIN] who just took his seat, I, too, am opposed to the "Seed Trust." I believe very heartily in the wide distribution of choice and rare seeds. In connection with this seed distribution I have a letter from one of my constituents which I think I should read to this House, although I shall omit the name of the author:

PORTLAND, OREG., February 15, 1916.

Hon. C. N. MCARTHUR, M. C.,
Seed Distributor, Department of Agriculture.

DEAR SIR: I received the seeds which you sent. I will let you know how they grow. I will vote for you on election day.

[Laughter.]

Mr. Chairman, I am for the free distribution of seeds. [Applause and laughter.]

Mr. WALSH. Mr. Chairman, I yield three minutes to the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. JAMES].

Mr. JAMES. Mr. Chairman, practically every man in my district is a workingman—he either works in the mine as miner, trammer, or timberman, or else he is a farmer.

Last June I received a letter to the effect that I had been allotted 25,000 packages of vegetable seed and 5,000 packages of flower seed. Personally I did not believe there was a very strong demand in the twelfth district of Michigan for free seeds. In order to test the matter I had the following advertisement placed in every newspaper in my district, at my expense:

GOVERNMENT PUBLICATIONS, SEEDS, ETC.

HOW TO OBTAIN THEM.

The Government issues bulletins, books, etc., relating to the subjects mentioned below. I desire to send to each person any matter relating to the subjects in which he or she may be interested. The Government also allows me 25,000 packages of vegetable seed and 5,000 packages of flower seed. I do not wish to send seeds to anyone not interested. The Government will also distribute certain kinds of fish for the purpose of stocking or restocking ponds, lakes, etc. Kindly check off the subjects in which you are interested and mail to me.

Name ——— ———,
Street number ——— ———,
Town or city ——— ———.

Cut out and mail to W. FRANK JAMES, House Office Building, Washington, D. C.

The result was that about 1,000 persons asked me for seed. To test the matter still further I mailed a slip worded as above to every person in my district that I could get the name of, by directory and otherwise. In addition, in many cases, where there was no directory, I sent slips to teachers and school superintendents to give to their pupils for the signatures of their parents. Altogether I sent out about 40,000 slips. Out of these slips and newspaper advertising I received 5,000 requests, or about 12½ per cent of the total. You can readily see that the greater proportion of my people, or about 87½ per cent, did not want "free seeds."

The distinguished gentleman from New York [Mr. BENNET] states that this appropriation is about $600 for each congressional district. Figuring, therefore, that the twelfth district of Michigan was entitled to $600 worth of seed, if I had sent out the entire allotment, I would have used 12½ per cent or $72.50 worth of seed to people who wanted and could use the seed, and would have wasted $527.50 worth of seed—and incidentally that much money—in sending seed to people who either could not use the seed or who would not use them in case they had been received. Figuring that other districts are the same as mine, which I believe they are, about $31,250 of this over $250,000 item is justified and the balance of about $218,750 is absolutely wasted.

If you gentlemen will try the experiment that I did, you will not favor the reckless and unwarranted expenditure of money. I shall therefore, Mr. Chairman, vote for this amendment doing away with free seeds.

The only fair and right way is to have each man interested in seeds write direct to the Department of Agriculture for the same, and have this department mail him what they think he should have.

Mr. WALSH. Mr. Chairman, the gentleman from Alabama [Mr. HEFLIN], in referring to some of the newer Members of this House, would have us believe that if we remain here as long as he has remained we would be talking on the other side of the question. I want to say to the gentleman from Alabama that I do not expect to remain in this House long enough to be considered by my constituents as a mere seed distributor nor a Government seed peddler, as, apparently, he prefers to have himself considered after having been here six terms. [Applause.] I believe that the people of my district, and I believe that the people of the country, expect the Members of the House of Representatives of the United States in Congress assembled to be devoting their thoughts and attention to more serious problems than the sending out of Government seeds in order that their constituents may become familiar with their signatures in the upper right-hand corner of the envelope, and that the people believe the Government has other uses for its money than to furnish seeds to keep canneries going for private profit.

Mr. RAGSDALE. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. WALSH. The gentleman from Oklahoma asked the question if the letter read by the gentleman from Ohio was from a farmer, because it was written on a typewriting machine. Why, there is just as much justification for this Government to send a typewriting machine to every farmer in this country for him to write his letters with as there is for you to send them Government seeds every year. Send beans to Tennessee in order that the poor farmers may furnish the canning establishments with beans to be canned and thereby reap a profit. It is said the cost of this is only a quarter of a million dollars. That does not include the additional expense imposed on the Post Office Department and the additional carriage charges. It is noticeable how hungry they are for this free distribution in the States which pay the smaller share of our governmental expenses. Why, if you want to furnish school children, why do not you turn the distribution of seeds over to the boards of education of the various States and let them attend to it? Why is it necessary for Members of Congress to distribute these seeds and have their time taken up in caring for their proper distribution? This is part of the duties of an executive branch, not of the legislative branch.

I say that a more proper way to do this would be, as was suggested in the committee, to increase the appropriation for, as one Member proposed, rare seeds 100 or 200 per cent, and eliminate the congressional distribution of seed altogether, allow the Department of Agriculture to distribute these, and thereby you might benefit the people who are really interested in agriculture. They talk about bringing sunshine into the city tenement districts. Well, this sprouting sunshine would arrive just as promptly if the seeds arrived under the frank of the Department of Agriculture instead of under the congressional frank. Why, gentlemen, free Government seeds do not make farmers any more than pink pills would make physicians. There has been no stimulation of the agricultural industry resulting from this, and one reason is because you are sending out the same kind of seeds year after year—same old varieties and same old seeds. The gentleman from Alabama would have us believe the other day that the farmers of this country were anxious to know what became of the cottonseed products after they are shipped from the producers. Why, they are no more interested to know, after they sell their crop and get their money, what becomes of their product than they are interested in what became of "Charlie Ross" or who struck "Billy Patterson." Their interest ceases when they get their money, and they are even less interested in this seed distribution. [Applause.]

Mr. LEVER. Mr. Chairman, I yield the remainder of my time to the gentleman from Mississippi [Mr. CANDLER]. [Applause.]

Mr. CANDLER of Mississippi. Mr. Chairman, I am very much delighted at this unanimous and vociferous applause accorded to me on this momentous occasion. [Applause.] Of course it is called forth, I know, not so much by anything which I have said in the past or anything which I may say upon this occasion, but by reason of the great importance of the question which we have before us. It was suggested the other day when this provision was reached that there should be very little discussion in reference to it, but because of its importance more time was demanded, which has been usefully expended this morning——

Mr. SIMS. And so profitably used this morning.

Mr. CANDLER of Mississippi. So profitably used this morning, as suggested by the gentleman from Tennessee. I frankly confess to you I did not expect to participate in this discussion at all. The fact is my distinguished and lovable friend from North Carolina [Mr. PAGE], who sits just to my right, reminded me a moment ago that I had intimated I would not speak, and really I did not intend to do so, but having been so unanimously called upon and it being demanded by so many that I say something [applause], of course, being an obliging gentleman, I shall have to comply. I am not surprised that this motion is made by the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. WALSH]. My recollection is that he opposed upon the floor of the House quite recently good roads for the farmer. He was opposed to their having improvements of that character, and hence he is opposed to their having any seed distributed by the Government to help them produce products to haul along these good roads when they obtain them, which I hope will not be at a very distant day. The truth of it is he seems to be opposed to everything that would benefit the country at large and would add to its prosperity and to the pleasure of the people. Hence he moves to strike this provision from this bill and proposes to take away from the farmer the small package of seed which might be sent him by his Member of Congress. The truth of it is the package of seed is the only communication, as I have called attention to before, between the Government of the United States and the individual citizen. It is the only message that he receives from the country which he supports, the only message that comes directly from the Government itself to him, to his wife, and to his children that will furnish them more happiness and will furnish them some profit and some benefit. [Applause.] This being the only message which he receives that comes directly from the Government, let us send him this little token at least once a year to remind him that the flag which he loves still floats above the Capitol of this great Nation in the city of Washington, and that while he toils to support the Government and keep that flag flying, which is the emblem of liberty, he is remembered and appreciated and not forgotten. [Applause.]

Now I am going to submit to you the history of a package of seed in order that you may see the benefits that are derived from this distribution. I hold in my hand a can of "Wofford's Japanese Honey Cane Sirup," made by Charles P. Wofford on his farm at Golden, Miss., and sent to me by him. Mr. Wofford wrote to me about three years ago and asked me to send him some literature in reference to various varieties of cane. I promptly went to the Agricultural Department, as I do always when my constituents write me for anything I can do for them. [Applause.]

I am not like the distinguished gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. WALSH], who says that he does not want to be a Government seed distributor; that that is beneath the dignity of a statesman. I want to render any service I can for my people. [Applause.] Why, the greatest statesmen in all the history of the world and the greatest philosophers in the history of the world distributed seeds, and all really great Members of Congress favor it. [Applause.] Did you know that? [Laughter.] Thomas Jefferson began it and Benjamin Franklin continued it. Patrick Henry, the greatest orator that ever lived in the land, proclaimed it and advocated it. [Applause.]

My friend from Massachusetts [Mr. WALSH] ought to realize the fact that it is not only a great duty but a great privilege to send seeds to the people of this country or to perform any other service for them. [Applause.]

As I said a moment ago, I went over to the Agricultural Department and secured the literature and sent it to Mr. Wofford. He read it and wrote to me that he believed the land which he had would produce Japanese cane probably better than any other variety, and asked me to send him a few seed. I sent them to him. He planted that package of seed that year. It showed by actual demonstration upon his Llewellyn plantation at Golden, Miss., that it would grow, and grow luxuriantly. He saved the seed from the few stalks that that little package produced, and the next year he bought more seed and planted a good crop and made 2,000 gallons of Japanese cane sirup.

Mr. QUIN. How many gallons to the acre?

Mr. CANDLER of Mississippi. From 200 to 300 gallons to the acre. He saved seed then from that crop, and this past year he planted quite a crop in Japanese cane. I went up to his farm myself and saw it. In making the sirup he had a beautiful plant, neatly arranged; had all the woodwork whitewashed perfectly white. The attendants around the plant were dressed in white; had on white caps and clothes. Everything was done by him for cleanliness and beauty. The result was that this year he produced about 25,000 gallons of Japanese cane sirup, and he is the largest individual producer of Japanese cane sirup now in the United States of America. [Applause.] He had advance orders for 11,000 gallons of this splendid and most palatable sirup.

Mr. JOHNSON of Washington. Is all of this down on the Tombigbee?

Mr. CANDLER of Mississippi. Oh, no; not on the Tombigbee. It is in the good county of Tishomingo, from whence I originally came. [Applause and laughter.]

That is the history of one package of seed. If the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. WALSH] will investigate he will find that wealth has been produced all over this country that began from the reception of a little package of seeds. The illustration I have cited is one from actual life; and that gentleman, Mr. Charles P. Wofford, is a practical farmer, having a beautiful farm at Golden, Miss., but he told me that that farm had not paid a dividend until the package of seed came to him from which was produced this sirup that brought eventually the revenue that produced the first actual dividend that came from that farm. [Applause.]

People came from far and near to see the demonstration and the production of this sirup. They came from different communities and counties around about. This is a fair and pointed illustration of the value and the development of new varieties of seed that have been brought into this country by the Department of Agriculture that finally reached the people through this congressional distribution, carrying to them happiness and great benefit.

If there is nothing else in it except the happiness that it brings to the bright-faced little children of this land, it is worth that in itself. Think of the happiness that the gentleman from Minnesota [Mr. ANDERSON] has sent to the children in his district. Think of the happiness depicted in the faces of the children of other districts to whom Members of Congress sent seeds. [Applause.] It is worth the money to make the children happy. God bless the children.

Some Members seem to be troubled about the best way to distribute the seeds and get them to the people. If you have any difficulty at all of that kind send them to me and many other Members who get more requests all the time than they can promptly and conveniently fill. Let us continue to send this brightness to the people and this prosperity to the country. [Great applause.]

The CHAIRMAN. All time has expired. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. WALSH].

The question was taken; and the Chairman announced that the noes seemed to have it.

Mr. WALSH. Division, Mr. Chairman.

The committee divided; and there were—ayes 45, noes 118.

So the amendment was rejected.

Mr. CANDLER of Mississippi. Mr. Chairman, I want to ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the RECORD by incorporating as a part of the same a letter written from the Department of Agriculture to the most excellent and efficient clerk of the Committee on Agriculture, Dr. Murph, setting forth facts as to the distribution of the seed by the department.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

The following is the letter referred to:

DEPARTMENT OF AGRICULTURE,
Washington, April 17, 1916.

DEAR DR. MURPH: Mr. W. A. Taylor, chief of the Bureau of Plant Industry, has furnished the following statement of the number of packages of vegetable and flower seeds and the number of boxes of bulbs distributed on congressional orders and the number of packages of such seeds and bulbs distributed by the department to voluntary crop correspondents of the Bureau of Crop Estimates, to voluntary weather reporters of the Weather Bureau, to the Alaska and Porto Rico Agricultural Experiment Stations, and on miscellaneous requests during the congressional seed distribution for 1914–15, and the same items, as estimated, for the distribution of 1915–16, still in progress:

	Total.	Vegetable.	Flower.	Bulbs.
1914–15.
On congressional orders	14,685,389	11,504,259	3,171,208	9,922
Distributed by department	789,278	579,961	206,532	2,785
Total	15,474,667	12,084,220	3,377,740	12,707
1915–16.
On congressional orders	15,773,078	12,091,514	3,671,016	10,548
Distributed by the department	441,870	369,070	72,400	400
Total	16,214,948	12,460,584	3,743,416	10,948

The quota of each Senator, Member, and Delegate consists of 25,000 packages of vegetable seed, 3,000 packages of flower seed, and 20 boxes of bulbs. The vegetable and flower seed are subject to change, package for package, up to 12,000 packages.

Very truly, yours, F. R. H., Private Secretary.

The Clerk read as follows:

FOREST SERVICE.

Salaries, Forest Service: One Forester, who shall be chief of bureau, $5,000; 1 chief of office of accounts and fiscal agent, $2,500; 7 district fiscal agents, at $2,000 each; 1 forest supervisor, $2,800; 1 forest supervisor, $2,700; 8 forest supervisors, at $2,400 each; 20 forest supervisors, at $2,200 each; 48 forest supervisors, at $2,000 each; 66 forest supervisors, at $1,800 each; 5 forest supervisors, at $1,600 each; 1 deputy forest supervisor, $1,800; 4 deputy forest supervisors, at $1,700 each; 28 deputy forest supervisors, at $1,600 each; 31 deputy forest supervisors, at $1,500 each; 18 deputy forest supervisors, at $1,400 each; 10 forest rangers, at $1,500 each; 22 forest rangers, at $1,400 each; 78 forest rangers, at $1,300 each; 287 forest rangers, at $1,200 each; 650 forest rangers, at $1,100 each; 80 forest guards, at $1,100 each, for periods not exceeding 6 months in the aggregate; 1 clerk, $2,100; 4 clerks, at $2,000 each; 19 clerks, at $1,800 each; 21 clerks, at $1,600 each; 9 clerks, at $1,500 each; 21 clerks, at $1,400 each; 9 clerks, at $1,300 each; 114 clerks, at $1,200 each; 89 clerks, at $1,100 each; 51 clerks, at $1,020 each; 30 clerks, at $960 each; 106 clerks, at $900 each; 2 clerks, at $840 each; 1 clerk or proof reader, $1,400; 1 clerk or translator, $1,400; 1 compiler, $1,800; 1 draftsman, $2,000; 3 draftsmen, at $1,600 each; 1 clerk or compositor, $1,600; 1 draftsman or surveyor, $1,500; 2 draftsmen or surveyors, at $1,400 each; 2 draftsmen, at $1,500 each; 6 draftsmen, at $1,400 each; 4 draftsmen, at $1,300 each; 11 draftsmen, at $1,200 each; 2 draftsmen at $1,100 each; 3 draftsmen, at $1,020 each; 1 draftsman, $1,000; 1 draftsman, $960; 8 draftsmen or map colorists, at $900 each; 1 draftsman or artist, $1,200; 1 draftsman or negative cutter, $1,200; 1 artist, $1,600; 1 artist, $1,000; 1 photographer, $1,600; 1 photographer, $1,400; 1 photographer, $1,200; 1 photographer, $1,100; 1 lithographer, $1,200; 1 lithographer's helper, $780; 1 blue-printer, $720; 1 machinist, $1,260; 2 carpenters, at $1,200 each; 2 carpenters, at $1,000 each; 1 carpenter, $960; 1 electrician, $1,020; 1 laboratory aid and engineer, $1,000; 6 laboratory aids and engineers, at $900 each; 2 laboratory aids and engineers, at $800 each; 1 laboratory helper, $720; 1 laboratory helper, $600; 1 packer, $1,000; 1 packer, $780; 4 watchmen, at $840 each; 1 messenger or laborer, $960; 3 messengers or laborers, at $900 each; 4 messengers or laborers, at $840 each; 3 messengers or laborers, at $780 each; 4 messengers or laborers, at $720 each; 6 messengers or laborers, at $660 each; 5 messengers, messenger boys, or laborers, at $600 each; 2 messengers, messenger boys, or laborers, at $540 each; 3 messengers or messenger boys, at $480 each; 3 messengers or messenger boys, at $420 each; 11 messengers or messenger boys, at $360 each; 1 charwoman, $540; 1 charwoman, $480; 1 charwoman, $300; 11 charwomen, at $240 each; in all, $2,361,320.

Mr. HUMPHREY of Washington. Mr. Chairman, on page 27, line 20, I reserve the point of order against "one forest supervisor, $2,800."

Mr. LEVER. Mr. Chairman, I will say to the gentleman from Washington that there is an increase in the salary of one supervisor of $200. The explanation of the forester is to the effect that this gentleman is in charge of one of the largest of all the forest units in Alaska, and that he has over 20,000,000 acres of land under supervision. Not only that, but he is very remote from headquarters, and therefore his responsibility necessarily is a good deal larger than if he were in close contact with headquarters in Washington. In addition to that, it was pointed out that the cost of living in Alaska was necessarily higher, and that the character of the work was more exacting than it is in the ordinary forests of the country. For that reason we allowed the increase. I might say to my friend that there are only three increases on this entire statutory roll, one for $200, which is the present item; another for $180, for a map colorist, and another, a $200 increase, in the salary of one artist, making a total of $580 in this roll in the way of increase. All the other increases are only apparent and not actual increases. They are increases by way of transfer.

Mr. HUMPHREY of Washington. Mr. Chairman, I have read the hearings in part, and as to the increase of the artist I think that ought to be made.

Mr. LEVER. Undoubtedly.

Mr. HUMPHREY of Washington. And I would not make a point of order against that item. But I do not see what use there is in having a forest supervisor in Alaska at all. There is no more use in having a supervisor up there than there would be in having one at the North Pole.

Mr. LEVER. Of course, the question of having a forest there at all is a question of policy on the part of the Government, but inasmuch as we have a forest there, and inasmuch as we must have some one to take care of it and look after it, it does seem to me that this small promotion is justified. I hope the gentleman will not make a point of order on it.

Mr. HUMPHREY of Washington. It may cost more to live up there; that is true; but I do not think he has anything to do.

Mr. LEVER. I expect he does have something to do, but I have not been up there.

Mr. HUMPHREY of Washington. Since the Government has been constructing the railways up there they get most of their lumber from Seattle. There is no forest up there to preserve. I do not think there is any necessity of having a supervisor in Alaska.

Mr. LEVER. I hope the gentleman will not make a point of order against this item. The gentleman may discuss the policy; but there is a forest there, and we have a man there, and unless the Government changes the policy I think we should give him a living salary.

Mr. HUMPHREY of Washington. I have been a Member of this House for 13 years and never have I made a point of order against a proposed increase of salary. The gentleman is perhaps entitled to it in a way, but I do not think we ought to lend any encouragement to preserving that alleged forest in Alaska.

Mr. JOHNSON of Washington. What forest is it?

Mr. HUMPHREY of Washington. It is the superintendent over the whole.

Mr. LEVER. Tongass and Chugach.

Mr. JOHNSON of Washington. Has not one of these forests been reduced by one-half by Executive order in the last year?

Mr. LEVER. There is no official statement of that, but there is a statement that one man has charge of the Tongass and Chugach area, covering half a million acres. That was the statement made before the committee.

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman from Washington reserve his point of order?

Mr. HUMPHREY of Washington. I think I shall have to insist upon it, not for the purpose of taking away this man's salary, but to show the feeling I have that there ought not to be any forest reserve there.

Mr. LEVER. Mr. Chairman, I do not want to delay the committee at all on the point of order, but I am not sure that the matter is subject to a point of order. If the gentleman makes the point of order, I will argue it briefly.

Mr. HUMPHREY of Washington. I will make it or reserve it, as the gentleman prefers.

Mr. LEVER. I would rather the gentleman would make it.

Mr. HUMPHREY of Washington. I make it, then.

Mr. LEVER. Mr. Chairman, I call the attention of the Chair to the classification in the bill. We start off with "1 forest supervisor, $2,800; 1 forest supervisor, $2,700; 8 forest supervisors, at $2,400 each; 20 forest supervisors, at $2,200 each," and so on. The Chair will notice, there, that there is a classification or arrangement of the salaries of these forest supervisors. Now, as a matter of fact—and that is something that I do not think the Chair has anything to do with—there is an increase in the salary of a particular man, but I think the Committee of the Whole has the right to fix the classification and the salary attached to each class on the statutory roll; and if so, the Chair, disregarding the information that has come to him as to the immediate effect of this classification, may question if the language is subject to a point of order. I doubt very seriously if the increase of salary is subject to a point of order.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair would like to ask the gentleman from South Carolina a question. Is it true or not true that at that particular place the supervisor in Alaska receives in the current law a salary of $2,600?

Mr. LEVER. I think that is true, but the current law does not show that this particular individual does receive this salary of $2,600. We have a forest supervisor at $2,600. This individual is employed under that language. We are creating another class, and the effect is that this man has been put in a class above—that is, in the $2,800 class; and if we have a right to classify at all, we have the right to fix the classification.

I may say to the Chair that the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. RAINEY], who was Chairman of the Committee on the Whole in the consideration of the Post Office appropriation bill, had a question very similar to this brought to his attention. I think the question was raised by the gentleman from Mississippi [Mr. SISSON], and the Chair then held that, having the right to classify, the committee had the right to fix the salary attached to the classification. I think this is a similar proposition. That ruling was made during the present Congress.

The CHAIRMAN. Under the current law, does the position of supervisor of forests in Alaska carry with it the salary at $2,600?

Mr. LEVER. It does not. There is not a line, I will say to the Chair, in this bill which fixes any place for any individual. This man, as a matter of fact, heretofore has been carried as "one forest supervisor at $2,600." It does not say "one supervisor in Alaska at $2,600," nor does it say in this bill "one forest supervisor in Alaska at $2,800." It simply says, "forest supervisor," and the only information that the Chair could have as to where this supervisor is located is the information that has come to his attention in the discussion of this item. It seems to me it is purely a matter of classification, not salary.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair would like to ask this additional question of the gentleman: Is there any class of forest supervisors carrying with it a salary of $2,800?

Mr. LEVER. There is not. This is a new classification that is provided for.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair is constrained, as he sees it, to rule that this is an increase of salary not authorized by law.

Mr. LEVER. Then, Mr. Chairman, I offer the following amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the amendment offered by the gentleman from South Carolina.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amend, page 27, line 20, after the word "each," by inserting "one forest supervisor, $2,600."

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on agreeing to the amendment.

The amendment was agreed to.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will read.

The Clerk read as follows:

General expenses, Forest Service: To enable the Secretary of Agriculture to experiment and to make and continue investigations and report on forestry, national forests, forest fires, and lumbering, but no part of this appropriation shall be used for any experiment or test made outside the jurisdiction of the United States; to advise the owners of woodlands as to the proper care of the same; to investigate and test American timber and timber trees and their uses, and methods for the preservative treatment of timber; to seek, through investigations and the planting of native and foreign species, suitable trees for the treeless regions; to erect necessary buildings: Provided, That the cost of any building erected shall not exceed $650; to pay all expenses necessary to protect, administer, and improve the national forests; to ascertain the natural conditions upon and utilize the national forests; and the Secretary of Agriculture may, in his discretion, permit timber and other forest products cut or removed from the national forests to be exported from the State or Territory in which said forests are respectively situated; to transport and care for fish and game supplied to stock the national forests or the waters therein; to employ agents, clerks, assistants, and other labor required in practical forestry and in the administration of national forests in the city of Washington and elsewhere; to collate, digest, report, and illustrate the results of experiments and investigations made by the Forest Service; to purchase necessary supplies, apparatus, and office fixtures, and technical books and technical journals for officers of the Forest Service stationed outside of Washington, and for medical supplies and services and other assistance necessary for immediate relief of artisans, laborers, and other employees engaged in any hazardous work under the Forest Service; to pay freight, express, telephone, and telegraph charges; for electric light and power, fuel, gas, ice, washing towels, and official traveling and other necessary expenses, including traveling expenses for legal and fiscal officers while performing Forest Service work; and for rent outside of the District of Columbia, as follows:

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word. We appropriate upward of $5,500,000 for the Forestry Service in the United States, and at the present time the cost of lumber in all the centers of distribution is going up very rapidly. I would like to ask the gentleman from South Carolina if he can tell to what extent the Government preservation of forests contributes to the commercial use of lumber? I want to find out how much we get back for our investment, and to what extent we dispose of lumber to the commercial world.

Mr. LEVER. That is what I thought the gentleman was driving at. I have here a summary of the receipts from the national forests for all purposes, including sales of timber, grazing, special leases, and so on. It is as follows:

The aggregate area which has been seeded and planted since the establishment of the national forests amounts to approximately 125,000 acres.

SPECIAL USES.

There were in force on July 1, 1915, permits for miscellaneous uses of the forests aggregating 18,342. These were for something over 70 different purposes, including hotels, pastures, sawmills, stores, fox farms, etc. Of the total number of permits, something over 10,000 were free, and the balance returned to the Treasury $77,819 in occupancy fees.

RECEIPTS.

Summarized, the cash receipts from the national forests during the fiscal year 1915 were $2,481,469.35. This represents an increase of nearly $44,000 over the previous year. During the first half of the current year cash receipts were nearly $200,000 more than during the same period of the previous year. These amounts do not include the value of the timber given away, which amounts to $206,464.13; the revenue foregone through selling a certain amount of timber at cost, the excess of actual value over sale value amounting to $33,000; the revenue foregone through free use of grazing lands, aggregating nearly $80,000; the revenue foregone through closing to grazing certain areas for the protection of municipal water supplies, conserving the elk herds, and for other reasons, amounting to about $60,000 more, or the possible revenue foregone through free permits for a variety of miscellaneous uses of forest lands, which would aggregate about $100,000 if commercial charges were made for these various uses.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. Is the grazing that is referred to there grazing for cattle or sheep?

Mr. LEVER. Grazing for cattle, sheep, and horses.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. I expect to raise a question about sheep later on.

Mr. LEVER. Very well.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. Are the receipts increasing?

Mr. LEVER. There was an increase during the last fiscal year as against the preceding year of $44,000, but during the past six months the receipts from the national forests have increased $200,000 over the receipts for a like period during the last fiscal year.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. I thank the gentleman for that statement.

Mr. LEVER. It was stated by the Forester before the committee this year and last year that it is hoped that receipts from the national forests will increase normally about $250,000 a year.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. Can the gentleman tell how the lumber that goes into commerce is disposed of, and where the principal shipping points are?

Mr. LEVER. I can not tell the gentleman the principal shipping points, but I will say that the timber from the national forests is sold to lumber companies at an agreed stumpage price, and, of course, the lumber itself is sold by the lumber companies.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. I presume the timber is picked out of the forest, and so taken as will not tend to destroy the forest itself?

Mr. LEVER. The forest cruisers make it their business to pick out full-grown trees; that is, ripe forest trees.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. Does the bureau advertise for proposals for the timber that is to be sold?

Mr. LEVER. Oh, yes. Anything beyond $100 worth they advertise, and it is sold to the highest bidder.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. Then the contractor does the cutting.

Mr. LEVER. He does the cutting and cleans up the brush.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. And he does the hauling?

Mr. LEVER. He does the hauling.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. The Government has nothing to do with that?

Mr. LEVER. The Government has nothing to do with that at all, except to cruise the timber and point out such as may be cut under the contract.

Mr. CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. I ask unanimous consent to proceed for five minutes.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Pennsylvania asks unanimous consent that his time be extended five minutes. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. Will the gentleman indicate one or two points from which shipments are made, if he has knowledge on that point?

Mr. LEVER. I can not put my hand on that information, but it was discussed before the committee.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. Are they chiefly western points?

Mr. LEVER. Chiefly western points; yes. Does the gentleman have in mind the eastern forests? If he does, I will say that the receipts so far from the eastern forests amount to only about $7,500.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. There was some arrangement about the Appalachian chain. I do not believe the Government has taken over the forests it intended to take under the legislation passed several years ago, but I wanted to know whether we were cutting off any Government timber in the East and putting it on the market.

Mr. LEVER. Thus far I think there has only been $7,500 of timber taken off of the Appalachian and White Mountain forests. The gentleman understands that these are new forest reserves.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. I understand that. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to introduce a statement from the Philadelphia Ledger as to the present demand for lumber.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Pennsylvania asks unanimous consent to print an article in the RECORD. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

The matter is as follows:

DEMAND FOR LUMBER OUTRUNNING SUPPLY.

White-pine demand in this city is greater than the supply this spring, according to lumbermen who are manifesting interest in the proposed inspection of every white-pine planting in the State by the department of forestry. This is to be done in an effort to prevent the white-pine blister rust from getting a foothold in Pennsylvania.

Years ago there were thousands of acres of fine white pine in Pennsylvania and the State department of forestry is endeavoring to restore the State to its old position as a white-pine producer. Including this year's plantings, the State has set out about 25,000,000 trees on its reservations and the greater part is white pine.

Local trade is heavy in spruce this year, and it is said price records are likely to be broken. Hemlock, too, is advancing while the revival of building is sending laths and shingles up. Gum and poplar are reported to be in much better demand. Oak, both plain and quartered, of course, keeps up in general favor, while the trade says that ash, maple, and basswood are quite as popular and almost as scarce. Yellow pine from the Carolinas is firm in all sizes.

Owing to unsatisfactory shipping conditions, high freights, and a general revival of demand it is generally believed that prices are likely to show abnormal tendencies here and there, and opinion is virtually unanimous that it will be a record year for lumber in and around Philadelphia if supply can keep anything like reasonable pace with demand.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. In connection with this article I desire to say calmly and without intent to criticize anyone who criticized the river and harbor improvements, that this question of lumber raises the question of transportation about as pointedly as any other matter Congress has to deal with, except iron and steel. Some years ago the golden Northwest had about all it could do to keep up with the rise of timber. Forests were cut off, farmers had difficulty in obtaining enough boards to build shacks in which to live. That condition may come in other sections of the country where we have more people to occupy dwellings. I apprehend we shall have to exercise more care with respect to forests and with respect to the avenues of communication by which we may get lumber to the people.

Mr. BOOHER. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. I yield to the gentleman from Missouri.

Mr. BOOHER. I was interested quite a little in the statement the chairman of the committee made that there had been an increase in the receipts in the last fiscal year from lumber. I want to call the gentleman's attention to the fact that they included in that the collections for the last fiscal year of $80,000 received from water power. That does not belong to the Forestry Bureau. If the gentleman will read the hearings he will see that it has been taken out of that and placed in the Interior Department.

Mr. LEVER. It has not become a law yet.

Mr. BOOHER. But it has passed the House. The year before there were no rentals for water power included in the receipts, so that if you take out the $80,000 from the receipts, the additional source of water-power rent, there is an absolute decrease of about $37,000.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. I am seeking light, and I am obliged to the gentleman for his statement, but my time is running.

Mr. LEVER. But I am not satisfied to let the gentleman's statement go unchallenged.

Mr. BOOHER. Now, if the gentleman will pardon me, and I will try and get him more time, if he will look at page 7 of the hearing in the Forest Service, after speaking of the receipts, this question was asked, "What, in a general way, does the miscellaneous item include?" The miscellaneous item was $175,840.40, and this is the answer to the question, "That includes about $80,000 for water-power purposes."

I have failed to find in the hearings of any other year where they said anything about receiving rentals from water-power purposes. This is the first year that any money was received from water power.

Mr. LEVER. The gentleman from Missouri has discovered a mare's-nest, but the truth about the matter is that until last year the Forestry Service did not charge anything whatever for the uses to which the gentleman refers, and therefore it could not make any return. In an item in the appropriation bill for the year before we permitted the department to make charges for the use of this property, and properly so, because there is no reason why we should permit the use of property without charging a reasonable fee. The result is we have put $80,000 into the Treasury during the past year.

Mr. BOOHER. I do not think I have discovered a mare's-nest; I am finding no fault. I was correcting what appeared to me to be an error in the statement about the receipts and expenditures.

Mr. LEVER. The gentleman will understand why it was.

Mr. BOOHER. I say it is a new item in the receipts, and if you take that out and adjust the account according to the items in the receipts of last year and the year before, there is an actual decrease of $37,000.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Pennsylvania has expired.

Mr. BOOHER. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that the time of the gentleman from Pennsylvania be extended five minutes.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. If the gentleman will indulge me, I will proceed with what I had in mind. It is not my purpose to find fault with the Forestry Service. I do not know enough about it to criticize it. I am interested, however, in the gradual depletion of the forests of the country and the increase of the price of lumber to the consumer. When we talk of the improvement of means of transportation by water, perhaps we have in mind as much the obtaining of the products of the soil and of those commodities necessary for the upbuilding of the States as anything else. The great forests of the extreme Northwest are rich in Douglas fir and pine and other lumber that is greatly desired in the East. We can not get it in the East, except through the Panama Canal, and that service has been blocked for some time by reason of the slides. There is plenty of timber standing elsewhere, and yet the price to the consumer in the East is constantly going up. We are interdependent in this country and ought to be able to help each other in this matter of lumber. Such a condition of great forests and high prices would not be permitted to exist in the older countries like Germany, Switzerland, or France. No matter how we view the situation, transportation enters into it. We could get together if our transportation methods were improved.

Along the Atlantic seaboard to-day the prices are rising so that they are almost prohibitive. Builders hesitate about new operations and the consumers of lumber who want to construct homes find themselves in a quandary.

Mr. JOHNSON of Washington. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. Yes.

Mr. JOHNSON of Washington. When the Forest Service advertises for bids and sells timber as low as $1.10 a thousand feet for the best fir, $1.50 for cedar, and 50 cents a thousand for hemlock, far below the commercial prices, and the Government sustains that under a five-year contract, the buyer paying no interest, no taxes, and no fire protection, has not the Government done more than it ought to do to reduce prices and put other people out of business? I am trying to show the gentleman that he has touched on the very nub of the whole conservation problem.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. Very well; I want light on this subject. We also want cheaper lumber, and we ought to have it. There are your great western forests. We have forests along the Atlantic seaboard. The forests of North Carolina and South Carolina and Virginia are at our very doors, and yet, because of transportation conditions, we are unable to get lumber in the eastern market at a reasonable figure. We have to pay almost as much as the lumber in the forest is worth to get it to the city. One reason for that is that the railroads under present war pressure are unable to carry that lumber to satisfy the demands in the great cities. Another reason is that the waterways along the inside of the coast line have not been opened up so that we can have this cheaper transportation.

In Virginia to-day there are more than 9,000,000 acres of arable land awaiting the hand of the tiller, very largely because it is removed from the line of the railroads and there is no other improved avenue of approach. It is so in North and South Carolina to a very large extent. We are dependent all along our coast now chiefly upon timber that comes from these Southern States. There was a chance that we might have relief when the Panama Canal was opened and we hoped we might get a chance to get at the splendid timber that comes from Oregon and Washington, but——

Mr. JOHNSON of Washington. Oh, the gentleman means from British Columbia.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. No; I do not.

Mr. JOHNSON of Washington. How are our coastwise bottoms going to compete with British Columbia in reaching the Philadelphia markets?

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. The gentleman has touched upon another subject which I wish he would deal with in his own time, but I wish to say, as showing the good faith of the people of the East in their desire to deal with the people of the West, that we have recently constructed great piers on rivers like the Hudson in order to receive lumber from Washington and Oregon via the Panama Canal. We are doing our part.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Pennsylvania has expired.

Mr. LEVER. Mr. Chairman, this is the general-expense item of the bill, and we have not reached any definite appropriation yet, and I would like very much to get along.

Mr. MANN. Oh, it is under this item that the general subject is up for discussion. Several of us want to be heard upon this.

Mr. LEVER. What I have in mind is that we have specific items further on in the bill which deal with fire protection and classification of lands and all those various things, and I thought probably we could save time by getting to those. It does not make any difference, however, although I would like if possible to close debate.

Mr. MANN. I suggest to the gentleman that he let it run along for a while.

Mr. CULLOP. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word. I desire to ask the chairman of the committee something about the income from the forest reserves. The chief of the bureau, I understand, is Mr. Henry S. Graves.

Mr. LEVER. Yes.

Mr. CULLOP. On page 70 of the hearings I notice he says the cash receipts during the past fiscal year have been $2,481,479.35. That is from the sale of timber, from pasturage, and other items.

Mr. LEVER. Does the gentleman want that in detail?

Mr. CULLOP. I want to ask the gentleman some questions about the details. I notice on page 728 concerning this income some very valuable information, in my judgment:

Mr. POTTER. The average price for cattle is at present 54 cents. The average price for sheep is 13½ cents per annum.

Does the chairman of the committee consider that a fair remuneration for pasturage per head for 12 months?

Mr. LEVER. If the gentleman will read just a little further——

Mr. CULLOP. I am going to.

Mr. LEVER. He will find a very practical western man on the committee—Mr. STEELE—regards that as rather high; but he will also notice that the chairman of the committee said that it is rather low; so I think the gentleman has the information before him as to my attitude.

Mr. CULLOP. Let me read a little further:

Mr. HAWLEY. How many months would that be for?

Mr. POTTER. That is for the entire year. Where the stock are only grazed a portion of the year, if it is for a period of less than a year and more than four months, we charge on the basis of one-tenth of the annual rate per month. If it is for less than four months, we charge on the basis of one-ninth of the annual rate per month.

The CHAIRMAN. You charge 54 cents for cattle per year?

Mr. POTTER. Yes, sir.

The CHAIRMAN. That is very cheap.

Mr. STEELE. That is not very cheap. You want to go into the cattle business.

The CHAIRMAN. They used to charge a dollar a head a month in my country.

Mr. Chairman, it does seem to me that 54 cents a year per head charged for grazing cattle is entirely inadequate and most unreasonable to the public. There are very large appropriations made every year for the keeping up of these forest reserves, and it seems to me that where they are rented out good business conduct at least would require a larger charge for rental than 54 cents a year per head for cattle and 13½ cents a head for sheep. It does seem to me that in fairness to the public the Government ought to realize a larger sum for rentals per head for either cattle or sheep than is being realized, according to the hearings.

Mr. HUMPHREY of Washington. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. CULLOP. Yes.

Mr. HUMPHREY of Washington. I was going to ask the gentleman from Indiana if he could imagine any good reason why these sheep pastures should be in a forest reserve anyhow? There are no trees on it, never have been and never will be.

Mr. CULLOP. No; I can not. I am not posted upon the forest-reserve business as I desire, and that is why I am here trying to get some information.

Mr. HUMPHREY of Washington. Will the gentleman yield again?

Mr. CULLOP. Certainly.

Mr. HUMPHREY of Washington. In round numbers there is over one-third of all the land in the forest reserves that has not a merchantable tree on it and never has had and never will have.

Mr. CULLOP. The gentleman is very familiar and well informed on this subject. How many acres are contained in the forest reserves out in the West, say, west of the Rocky Mountains?

Mr. HUMPHREY of Washington. I can tell in general terms, but taking it in my State we have 23,000 square miles—12,000,000 acres.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. CULLOP. I will ask unanimous consent to proceed for five minutes, although I may not use all of that time, for the purpose of securing further information on this matter.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Indiana? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

Mr. LEVER. As the gentleman from Indiana wants informatiton, we have 138,000,000 acres in the forest reserves at this time in our country.

Mr. CULLOP. How many of those 138,000,000 acres have timber growing upon it?

Mr. HUMPHREY of Washington. A little over half.

Mr. CULLOP. Then the other half can not be classified as a forest reserve, and would be more properly classified as a prairie or desert reserve?

Mr. HUMPHREY of Washington. As desert would state it better.

Mr. CULLOP. Desert, perhaps, would be the proper term.

Mr. LEVER. Then the gentleman certainly would not have them charge 54 cents a head for cattle grazing on desert; that would be too much, would it not?

Mr. CULLOP. That is where the stock graze at times, as they are as a rule not altogether barren.

Mr. LEVER. On the desert?

Mr. CULLOP. There are a number of places, I have no doubt, that are not altogether barren; but if an acre of land is worth anything, it is certainly worth more than 54 cents an acre, and it certainly would not be a very wise stockman who would rent barren desert land for the purpose of pasturage of his stock under any consideration.

Mr. HUMPHREY of Washington. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. CULLOP. Certainly.

Mr. HUMPHREY of Washington. I would say for the gentleman's information and to give some illustration about this grazing land that the Forest Service made an exchange down in Arizona, and they got 1,200,000 acres of land, as I recall it, estimated to be worth 15 to 25 cents an acre. They exchanged that for scrip, and that scrip was used and some of the best timberland in the United States, acre for acre, was secured. Now, this 15 to 25 cents an acre land is covered by sagebrush and inhabited by jack rabbits and coyotes, and it takes 100 acres to feed a sheep.

Mr. CULLOP. Well, it does not matter how many acres it takes to feed a sheep. If the sheep is fed it is worth more than 13½ cents a year. That is the proposition I want to put up in this matter. If it took 1,000 acres to feed a sheep and still they were fed, it was worth more than 13½ cents a year, and if it took 100 or 500 acres to feed a steer a year, if the steer was fed, it was still worth more than 54 cents to the public for rental of land for use for that purpose. If it furnished the nourishment to feed and fatten the cattle, it was worth more than 54 cents per head per year, and the management of this department should see that the people get more for it.

Mr. JOHNSON of Washington. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. CULLOP. I do.

Mr. JOHNSON of Washington. Out in the southwestern Washington district I can show the gentleman where three agents of the Government pursued one man the best part of this last summer only because one cow, in a country where there was neither railroad nor wagon roads, got over an imaginary line, and after three months' work on the part of those agents they fined the man a little less than 54 cents, and have not collected it and never can collect it. That is governmental policy and activity.

Mr. CULLOP. Has the gentleman from Washington informed the chief of this bureau of that fact?

Mr. JOHNSON of Washington. I have done so.

Mr. CULLOP. Has the gentleman informed the power higher up that he might remove the chief of bureau who would be so careless in the discharge of his duty? From this report and the testimony given here it seems to me that on this chief would be a good place to use the ax and deprive him of his position, and, further, to give opportunity for better returns in the way of rental, and better things connected with his department might be the result.

Mr. HUMPHREY of Washington. Will the gentleman yield?

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has again expired.

Mr. CULLOP. I regret very much my time has expired, as I would be pleased to yield to the genial gentleman from Washington [Mr. HUMPHREY].

Mr. TAGUE. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the RECORD.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Massachusetts? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

Mr. FOCHT. Mr. Chairman, I would like to ask the chairman whether under the stimulus of this appropriation which we have had for some years there has been an increase in the amount of standing timber or whether it has been decreasing. Upon the theory that appropriations are made with the idea of protecting our forests the same as we do in Pennsylvania, which was the pioneer State in reforestation—under the leadership of John Birkenbine and Dr. Rothrock we have increased the quantity of standing timber there, notwithstanding the fact that great quantities are annually cut away, and for which the State receives a revenue.

Mr. LEVER. Mr. Chairman, I would say to the gentleman from Pennsylvania that the policy of the department in reference to the forests of this country is undoubtedly conserving the forests and conserving the timber supply of this country.

That is due not only to a more scientific way of cutting the timber, but it is due largely to the fact that the forests are now protected against very destructive fires, which in the past have swept out very large bodies of timber. My recollection is—and I will put the exact figures in the RECORD—that in 1910 in one of the big forest fires in the West something like $15,000,000 worth of standing timber was destroyed. My recollection, too, is that during the past year the value of timber destroyed by forest fires is something like $280,000. In other words, a better protection of the forest from time to time is largely reducing the damage to the forest both by way of fires and by way of overgrazing, and like of that, on forests which are really grazing land.

Mr. FOCHT. You feel, then, that the great result desired is being accomplished by the use of this appropriation?

Mr. LEVER. I may state to the gentleman another recollection of the figures, that during the last 10 years there has been an increase in the number of sheep and cattle upon the forest reservations grazing preserves of something like 50 per cent.

Mr. FOCHT. I would like to ask another question. Most of the Members of this House, like myself, have been in constant receipt of circular letters from the gentleman named Gifford Pinchot, in which certain officials are characterized and the popular mind is led to believe that there is great corruption in the direction and management of the national forests and water powers of this country. What is your opinion and what is your answer to him?

Mr. LEVER. I will say to the gentleman from Pennsylvania that I have never myself received any such circular, and I am greatly surprised and greatly regret to know that Mr. Pinchot, for whom I have a very high personal regard, would make such a statement. It has never come to the attention of the committee and never has been investigated by the committee.

Mr. FOCHT. I never heard it here, but have elsewhere. He made such deliverance in the Lewisburg courthouse and in public declarations elsewhere as well as in these letters, and if they are to be believed, then there have been great abuses.

Mr. LEVER. I can say in a general way that I regard Mr. Graves, the head of this service, as one of the most competent, honest, and honorable officials with whom I have ever come in contact.

Mr. FOCHT. Then Mr. Pinchot's statements, you believe, are unwarranted if they are a reflection upon any official in any capacity?

Mr. LEVER. I say that unhesitatingly.

Mr. HUMPHREY of Washington. What was the statement that you said Pinchot had made?

Mr. FOCHT. Frequently that the great reserves of this country are being wasted, and the conservation idea, both as to timber and water power, of this country has been dissipated and fallen into the hands of corrupt corporations and trusts.

Mr. HUMPHREY of Washington. He ought to know, because the public domain of this country was looted more when Pinchot was at the head of the Forest Service than in all the rest of the days of the Republic put together.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Pennsylvania has expired.

Mr. LEVER. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that he may proceed for five minutes more.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

Mr. FOCHT. The gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. MOORE] is a strong advocate of waterways, and we are in hearty accord with his advanced ideas with respect to the cheap transportation of freight, lumber, or whatever it may be, but the point that seems to have been missed in his observations was the question of the reduction of the tariff on lumber in the last revenue bill—I believe from $2.50 to $1.25 per thousand feet. I would like to have the gentleman state to the committee whether in his opinion the increased cost in the lumber is due to the fact that the tariff has been reduced or not.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. Mr. Chairman, I would say to the gentleman that the reduction of the duty on lumber very seriously affected the lumber industry of the United States, and that as we took the duty off of lumber the price was protected in Canada, so that Canada reaped the benefit which the United States yielded up.

Mr. FOCHT. Then the reduction of the tariff on lumber has not been beneficial?

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. It has not helped the industry or the consumer in the United States at all.

Mr. JOHNSON of Washington. I would like to state for the gentleman's information that here is a report from the consul general of British Columbia, Mansfield, dated March 25, this year, 1916, in which he says:

> Lumber exports from British Columbia to the United States last year were the largest in the history of the industry, amounting in the aggregate to 77,641,320 feet, or about 13 per cent of the total output.

This consular report, only a month old, also shows that the industries of that Province have fallen off 50 per cent, and they have been driven to keep alive by shoving over lumber and logs into the United States.

Mr. FOCHT. Then, the reduction of the tariff, so far as protecting the producer or reducing the cost to the consumer is concerned, has been a failure? That is the idea, is it?

Mr. JOHNSON of Washington. Absolutely so.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. The consumer in the United States has derived no benefit whatever. The price has gone up to the consumer constantly, and Canada has participated in the proceeds.

Mr. HUMPHREY of Washington. Right along the line of the question asked by the gentleman from Pennsylvania, I wish to call attention to the fact that while the mills in British Columbia have been increasing their output this has not been true on this side. I hold in my hand a statement that I think ought to be accepted on the other side of the aisle. It is from the Secretary of Agriculture, Mr. Houston, under date of February 24, 1916. I am sorry that the Democratic leader is not on the floor of the House, so that he could not accuse me of citing partisan authorities. Secretary Houston says:

> The mill capacity of the northwest coast is easily 30 per cent in excess of the output. The slightest upward movement of the lumber market results in some mills running double shifts and the construction of other mills, in order to take advantage of the opportunity afforded to liquidate their lumber holdings. A number of concerns have already been forced into bankruptcy, and others have been saved only through various forms of reorganization, bringing in additional capital or falling back heavily upon the banks. The buying of timber is at a standstill.

Now, that is the condition on this side, where the tariff was taken off, as compared with the condition on the other side, in British Columbia.

My distinguished friend from Pennsylvania [Mr. MOORE] spoke awhile ago about the Panama Canal. At the time that we commenced to agitate the question of the repeal of the Panama Canal tolls act I had a list of 56 vessels that had been constructed or were being constructed for the purpose of running through the Panama Canal. As soon as we repealed that act that stopped all that prospective trade. No foreign ships can come into our ports in the coastwise trade to carry cargo around to the Atlantic coast, but they can go across British Columbia and do that. As long as we had a free canal, making a difference of $1.50 a thousand, we could reach the market on the Atlantic coast. This is the trouble with the market on the Atlantic coast to-day.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. What was the condition of the American lumber market for the first six months after the passage of the low-tariff law?

Mr. HUMPHREY of Washington. Well, the lumber market was affected considerably, but not so much as the shingle market. Sixty-three per cent of the shingle mills closed in 60 days after the Underwood bill was placed on the statute books.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. The condition I spoke of a little while ago, resulting in the increase of prices, has all been since the European war broke out. When there was no war in Europe, when we were operating under the law that had been passed, there was stagnation in the lumber market in this country.

Mr. HUMPHREY of Washington. Yes. When we had a tariff, and when we had the prospect of going through the Panama Canal without the payment of tolls, there was a chance for our lumber. I have read to you a statement of the conditions made by the Secretary of the Interior to Senator MYERS. I am glad to bear out the statement made in regard to it.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Chairman, I would like to make an inquiry about one or two things in the paragraph. Under the authority to erect necessary buildings that we carry every year, does the gentleman know how many buildings we have erected?

Mr. LEVER. Since the establishment of the Forest Service, I will say to the gentleman from Illinois, we have erected 2,000.

Mr. MANN. Does the gentleman know how many were established in the last fiscal year?

Mr. LEVER. I can not tell how many offhand.

Mr. MANN. The gentleman does not recall even indefinitely as to the number?

Mr. LEVER. We have been controlling the forests about 15 years, and during that time we have constructed 2,000.

Mr. MANN. I wanted to know if we were going at it full tilt or not.

Mr. LEVER. No; we are not going at it full tilt.

Mr. MANN. This item in regard to employees engaged in hazardous service under the Forest Service makes no reference to the law. But is the expenditure confined to that law?

Mr. LEVER. It is; yes.

Mr. MANN. I am not at all sure that it would be under the language of this bill.

Mr. LEVER. I understand that is the practice, at least. I do not think they have had many of these cases.

Mr. MANN. They have had quite a number of them.

Mr. LEVER. Not in this fiscal year.

Mr. MANN. I think so.

Mr. LEVER. The gentleman's recollection is no doubt better than mine.

Mr. MANN. My recollection is neither good nor definite, but I read the report and I had that impression.

Mr. LEVER. My impression is there were comparatively few.

Mr. MANN. Under the language of the bill, which makes no reference to the law, I am not at all sure that there would be a limitation, and I am not at all sure it would be done through the Department of Labor, where the law places it. But if they do not intend to go outside of the law, I have no objection, although I do not think the Forest Service itself should inaugurate any policy of its own in reference to the payment of these claims.

Mr. LEVER. Nothing has come to the attention of the committee along that line that would justify us in having any concern about it.

Mr. MANN. Does the gentleman know how much we receive for permits for water-power development in the Forest Service?

Mr. LEVER. I can give that to the gentleman; yes. I thought I had the exact facts here, but I have not. But the statement was made before the committee that about $80,000 had been received for water-power privileges.

Mr. MANN. I should have supposed it would be larger. Mr. Chairman, the Secretary in his annual report makes this statement:

> The national forests contain approximately one-half of the water power of the West. The department for nearly a decade has been issuing permits for its development. Unfortunately, the present law does not authorize the granting of permits for fixed periods. It should be amended, and recommendations to this end have been made repeatedly by the department. While authority to grant term permits undoubtedly would aid water-power utilization, the fact remains that development, practically to the extent of the market, actually is now taking place on the forests.

Then he makes the further statement:

> In the Western States power development has advanced proportionately very much more rapidly than in the East, where land is privately owned.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Illinois has expired.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent for five minutes more.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the gentleman's request?

There was no objection.

Mr. MANN. He goes on:

> The amount of water power used in the generation of electricity by public-utilities corporations, street railway companies, and municipalities has in the last decade increased 440 per cent in the West, or more than twice as fast as in the remainder of the country. There, in proportion to population, four and one-half times as much water power is used as in the remainder of the United States and nearly three times as much as in the Eastern States.

Again he makes this statement:

> Of the existing 1,800,000 water horsepower in the Western States, 50 per cent is in plants constructed in whole or in part on the forests and operated under permit from the department. Plants under construction will develop about 200,000 additional horsepower, while over 1,000,000 more is under permit for future construction.

It has been the habit of the Department of Agriculture for some years to make the statement that is made by everybody else—and it may be true; I do not say that it is not—that the law ought to be amended so as to give the permit for a fixed period. Yet, when we find that half of the water-power development in the West is on the national forests, and that amounts to about 900,000 horsepower—the half—and 200,000 horsepower more is under construction, and permits for 1,000,000 more horsepower have been issued, it does not look as though the development had entirely ceased. In one part of the report of the Secretary, made, I suppose, copying the reports of the Secretaries for several years, and copying the popular supposition on the subject, you read that water-power development had ceased on the national forests because they could not get a permit for a fixed period. Then, in another place we find that they have issued permits now for 1,000,000 horsepower, which is more than half of the entire water power developed in the West, and 200,000 horsepower in addition under construction. I know we have been regaled and entertained and instructed frequently by the gentleman from Washington and others, about how all of the development out there was held up because they could not possibly afford to develop the water power, and when we passed the Adamson bill in the House we were told that they could not afford to develop the water power unless they had a permit for a fixed period; and we are told now by the gentlemen who are lobbying throughout the country for the Shields water power or dam bill that it is impossible for men to obtain capital to develop water power unless they get a fixed period and liberal terms. Yet, here it is, in the Forest Service, where the permit is revocable at any minute, that they are developing more water power now than ever was being developed in the history of the country. Certainly, notwithstanding all that they say, they are not being unduly burdened by the Government in the way of charges if they have only been charged for the last fiscal year less than $80,000 for 900,000 water horsepower under operation. I do not know whether we will have to revise our ideas on the subject or not. I do know that there is a very powerful movement being inaugurated by the people now controlling the water powers of the country in favor of hamstringing the Government in connection with the development of future water powers over which the Government has control. A very powerful—I use the term respectfully—lobby has been inaugurated all over the United States for the purpose of controlling or influencing the action of Congress in connection with the dam bill, which will, I suppose, before the session expires, come before this House for action.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has again expired.

Mr. McLAUGHLIN. Mr. Chairman, in the book called "Program of Work of the Department for the Fiscal Year 1916," in the part devoted to the Forest Service and under the head of water powers, we read something of the results of the work of that service, as follows:

> On July 1, 1914, 184 permits were, in effect, for water-power projects, including transmission lines, and 103 separate permits for transmission lines. The total power capacity of projects under permit was 1,067,621 horsepower, an increase of 284,021 horsepower, or 36 per cent, for the fiscal year. The total number of approved easements now in force upon the national forests is approximately 800.

That is the statement as to the work the department has been and is doing in connection with the water powers.

Mr. JOHNSON of Washington. Mr. Chairman, I have the honor to represent a district that has an enormous amount of water power in it and three great forest reserves. I have always regretted that the handling of the forest-reserve problem, and these forest-reserve appropriations, amounting to about one-quarter of the total sum appropriated in the name of agriculture, should be carried in this Agricultural bill. Most Congressmen are interested in agriculture, few in forestry. The hearings before the committee run to all phases of agriculture. A great many of the Members of this House, as the distinguished gentleman from Indiana [Mr. CULLOP] stated a few moments ago, know little about the forest-reserve proposition and are concerned less. It is to the credit of these gentlemen that they remain on the floor, listen to the debate, and take part in it. Our hope of relief is in agitation.

Before much headway is made in the attempt to solve the problem of the forests up pops the water-power proposition. The most of the unharnessed Federal water power is in the far West, and its management, control, and operation is to be fixed for the people out there by the Representatives of the people of the East, just as this forest reserve conservation scheme was thrust upon the West in years gone by, with the idea that if it might turn out to be a good thing for future generations then the present generation would have to grin and bear its evils and its ills.

My belief is that the people in the real forest-reserve States, where there are real forests, much potential water power, and other resources still in Government control, are not anxious to break down the so-called idea of conservation, or to forfeit management by the Government; but they realize that it is only a question of time until Congress must solve the problem of private ownership against Government ownership. This problem has made much trouble for the great lumber business of the Northwest, and the trouble becomes worse instead of better. I do not want to take up too much time, and yet it is a large problem, and of the greatest moment to my district certainly, and probably to my State. If I can get a little time, I should like to read to Members who are interested enough to stay here this afternoon the advertisements of the Forestry Bureau, which it puts out to solicit business, to beg for sums to help bolster up this service so that they can come to Congress and make some kind of a showing of progress, in accord with past promises.

Mr. LEVER. Will the gentleman indicate how much time he wants?

Mr. JOHNSON of Washington. I am going to be as brief and concise as I can.

Mr. LEVER. I am doing this in the interest of the gentleman, so that he can make a connected statement.

Mr. JOHNSON of Washington. I want to make the statement good and plain. I have remained in my seat the best part of the time since this session began, and beyond a 10-minute speech on the Indian appropriation bill, 10 minutes on the immigration bill, and 10 or 15 minutes on another bill, I have occupied no time of this Congress; and I shall not desire to go back to my district and say that on account of a belated Democratic effort to speed up at this late date I could not get a little time for so great a problem.

Mr. LEVER. I do not want to take the gentleman off his feet at all.

Mr. JOHNSON of Washington. In the general debate on this bill no Member said a word about the Forest Service.

Mr. LEVER. I want to give the gentleman 15 or 20 minutes' consecutive time.

Mr. JOHNSON of Washington. I have made no preparation for that, but I know I have some information that this Congress should have, and I will try and be as brief as I can.

To begin with, let me say the problem that has come up, as brought out by questions by the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. MOORE] and others, why has the low cost of logs, and a lumber business out West, which for the past three years had a struggle for its very existence, resulted in a high price right now of the manufactured product in the East? Next, we must pay some heed to the cry in every forest-reserve locality for more money to help develop and build roads and do something to develop these great conserved blocks of area that obstruct progress in every Western State. I desire to show what has happened to counties who have been told, year after year, ever since conservation became the magic word for dreamers and theorists to conjure with, that some of these counties would receive something substantial in lieu of the taxes they have lost. What have the forest-reserve counties received in the far West? I will show one county in the State of Washington that has been led to believe that it would receive great sums which received last year the great sum of 34 cents. Thirty-four cents for road building and schools! Is anything the matter with the system?

Mr. HUMPHREY of Washington. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. JOHNSON of Washington. Yes.

Mr. HUMPHREY of Washington. Does not the gentleman himself think that something is the matter with the Forestry Service, which has $2,000,000,000 worth of property and can not pay expenses, when you take it in our own State, which has 12,000,000 acres, and according to a statement transmitted by the department a few days ago to one Senator the State of Washington has made $60,000,000 out of it, while the Forestry Service, with 12,000,000 acres, is always behind?

Mr. JOHNSON of Washington. Just so. The holdings of the Forestry Bureau comprise a vast principality. I am inclined to regret that the gentleman from Washington, my colleague, made the point of order this morning against the salary of a forester up in Alaska, who is in effect king of 20,000,000 acres of land. He is master of all he surveys, and he should have a prince's salary.

Now, to get back to the problem brought out by the gentleman from Pennsylvania. Here is something about the sale of timber this year in Washington:

CARLSBORG CO. MAKES BIG BUY IN OLYMPIC FOREST—DISTRICT FORESTER APPROVES PURCHASE OF 28,660,000 FEET OF TIMBER ON DUSEWALLIPS RIVER.

PORTLAND, OREG., January 19, 1916.

The district forester has approved the sale of 28,660,000 feet of timber on the Olympic National Forest to the Carlsborg Mill & Timber Co., of Seattle.

The timber is situated on the Dusewallips River, in township 26 north, range 3 west, on the Olympic National Forest, and consists of 23,490,000 feet of Douglas fir, 2,840,000 feet of cedar, 2,000,000 feet of hemlock, and 330,000 feet of grand fir.

The prices paid are $1.10 per thousand feet for the fir, $1.50 for the cedar, and 50 cents per thousand for the hemlock and grand fir. The company will have until March 1, 1919, in which to remove the timber.

Those are the prices that the Government gets in its sales of timber, and the buyer pays neither taxes, interest, or fire protection. Private timber out there pays as high as 90 cents a thousand taxes. Where does the private owner get off?

Mr. SMITH of Michigan. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. JOHNSON of Washington. Yes.

Mr. SMITH of Michigan. What are the prices paid for private timber on the stump, under the same conditions that this timber is sold by the Government?

Mr. JOHNSON of Washington. Well, the prices have gone all to pieces out there in the last few years. The man who sends me this clipping says:

It seems to be a great shame that the Government should sell timber at such small prices when citizens are lugging along timber year after year, through hard times, free competition with Canada, no free tolls through the Panama Canal, and paying enormous taxes.

The Government has gone into the timber business, you see. The Government pays no taxes, it exacts no interest from those who buy its timber, and a generous Congress makes up the deficit. My correspondent writes:

Of course, it is child's play for the Government, but now, when times are beginning to pick up, it seems a cruel blow.

Now, then, these contracts run for years, subject to a reappraisal of value every five years. These contracts are made at a reduced price to parties who pay nothing for taxation until their timber is down and ready to move.

Mr. LEE. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. JOHNSON of Washington. Yes.

Mr. LEE. How far is this timber that the gentleman speaks of from ports of transportation?

Mr. JOHNSON of Washington. Well, this particular tract is on the Dusewallips River, and maybe is 20 or 30 miles from tidewater.

Mr. LEVER. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. JOHNSON of Washington. Certainly.

Mr. LEVER. How does the stumpage price charged by the Forestry Service differ from that charged by individuals?

Mr. JOHNSON of Washington. I take it the forest reserve managers have no desire to ruin prices or destroy business, but to make any sales at all they must get just under the market price, making allowance for the fact that a Government sale carries no overhead charges, while the private sale carries all of the overhead charges that any other big business deal does. The probabilities are that when the contracts are made they are 10 per cent or more below contracts at private sale. In other words, if I go to a man who owns private timber to buy so many million feet, to be cut within the next five years, I must lay down cash or its equivalent. If I buy from the Government, I pay only part cash and no interest. So, if the Government figures seem a little higher, they are really a little lower.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Washington has expired.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that the time of the gentleman from Washington may be extended five minutes.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Pennsylvania?

There was no objection.

Mr. JOHNSON of Washington. I have tried to answer the chairman of the committee.

Mr. LEVER. I ask the gentleman if he knows that the average stumpage price charged by the Forestry Service is $2.48 a thousand? How does that compare with the ordinary price of stumpage charged by private parties?

Mr. JOHNSON of Washington. I see those figures stated in the hearings before the Federal State Commission. I notice, too, that the average price is largely built up on California prices.

Now, here is another thing: The United States is building the Alaska railroad. It was the hope of the people of the Northwest, and particularly the people of the section where I live, that they would supply some of the lumber needed; that it would be cut from our own United States forest reserves for the Alaskan railroad. But I have a report which says that the contract has been let, and I have been informed that it is sublet to a British Columbia concern. That is a fine thing to help bring prosperity to this side of the line, is it not?

Mr. HUMPHREY of Washington. The contract was given to a British Columbia firm; they were the lowest bidders.

Mr. JOHNSON of Washington. One thing more: This report of the consul general at Vancouver, British Columbia, says that one of the greatest complaints that British Columbia has had, outside of its troubles on account of the war, is that the Panama Canal is blocked so that they can not do a lumber business such as they began to build up when this Democratic administration kindly gave them free tolls.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. While that condition prevails on the western coast an export tax has been put on lumber on the eastern coast.

Mr. JOHNSON of Washington. When the United States adopted the Underwood tariff as a law, and made lumber, logs, and shingles free, British Columbia promptly put an export duty on logs to force our capital to come over there, but when British Columbia recently got very hard up on account of the war they lifted their export tax on logs so that they could float some logs down Puget Sound and cut in on an already demoralized market. That is where we got double-crossed, to use a street expression.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. Does the gentleman know to what extent the East obtains this splendid lumber that originates in his country?

Mr. JOHNSON of Washington. I understand that the mill men of my own home town, Hoquiam, helped to establish great yards at Poughkeepsie, expecting to send 22-foot draft vessels, lumber laden, through the canal, up the Atlantic, into the river at Poughkeepsie and supply a great eastern market that British Columbia promptly went after.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. I am glad the gentleman has referred to that, because I know splendid piers have been built at Poughkeepsie, 100 miles or thereabouts from the sea, with the expectation that we might participate in some of this Panama Canal trade.

Mr. JOHNSON of Washington. And I will say to the gentleman that while we are trying to do that, build ships and reach an eastern market, we are accused of being in a conspiracy to stifle industry on account of politics, and we are accused of being prosperous when we try to keep the mills going and to keep labor even partially employed, as we have had to do the past three years.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. One reason for deepening the Hudson River was that we might encourage this western trade.

Mr. JOHNSON of Washington. I am glad to know that.

Mr. SMITH of Michigan. Mr. Chairman, I have listened with a good deal of interest to the condition of the lumber market as it has been explained by the gentleman whose localities it affects, and I have had in mind the interest of the consumer, and while we are told that the tariff has been removed for the ostensible purpose of reducing the cost, we find that the consumer pays the same price under free trade, that there has been no reduction, and that he has received no benefit. I know that at one time not very many years ago the price of forest timberlands was high, upon the theory that it was feared they might become exhausted. They were purchased in large holdings and bonds were floated upon those timber holdings. Soon after that the lumber market fell off by reason of the reduction in the tariff, permitting free lumber to come into this country, so that a great many of the bonds became depreciated in value, and a good many of the timber companies were obliged to suspend business because they lost their markets. Removing the duty greatly affected the lumber market, and resulted in the loss of the lumber market. When the tariff was removed the Canadian Government put on an equal embargo, the American lumberman lost his market and the consumer paid the same prices for his lumber.

Much the same thing applies to this water-power proposition. It occurs to me that a water-power site ought to be carefully preserved and not disposed of at a trifling cost by the Government until there is some demand for the use of the power. I can cite not only one but other large water-power dams that have been constructed, upon which bonds have been floated, and upon which interest has been defaulted and payment of principal not made. It is unfair to the people thus to grant these water privileges and power for the purpose of exploitation, the mere issuing of bonds and the disposition of them to the investing public, when there is no demand for the power, and without hope or expectation other than simply exploiting the bonds. As a good business proposition I would think that before such bonds are authorized or disposed of we should see to it that there is a demand for the power after it is developed, and the dam constructed in good faith as a commercial enterprise.

Mr. FESS. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. SMITH of Michigan. Certainly.

Mr. FESS. The State in which the gentleman lives has gone into the water-power development, has it not?

Mr. SMITH of Michigan. Not the Federal Government. We have no Federal Government powers there. They are all owned by the State or rather by private concerns.

Mr. FESS. There are a good many private concerns?

Mr. SMITH of Michigan. Yes; and as a general thing they are all a success, and there has been no defaulting on the bonds nor mulcting of the public by these water-power companies in our State.

Mr. FESS. I happen to know of one man who developed for cities the electric light plants through water power, and it seems to have been a very great success.

Mr. SMITH of Michigan. Yes. These water dams are all in successful operation and furnish much power for manufacturing and lighting in Michigan.

Mr. FESS. The question is whether the State ought to do that or whether the individual should be permitted to do it.

Mr. SMITH of Michigan. It does not make any difference whether the State or the individual does that, providing there is a demand for the product; but when you go out into these western countries and construct large water-power sites with the avowed purpose of issuing bonds against them and selling those bonds to an innocent public, when they do not know the necessity for the power or whether the project will be successful, it seems to me we should consider the matter carefully before disposing of it.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Michigan has expired.

Mr. FESS. Is the Great Northern Power Co. a private power or a State power?

Mr. SMITH of Michigan. I can not say. I do not recollect any such company in Michigan.

Mr. McLAUGHLIN. Mr. Chairman, the matter spoken of by the gentleman from Washington [Mr. JOHNSON], the price at which the Forest Service sells timber, and how that price compares with the prices paid for private timber, was brought up at a hearing before the Committee on Agriculture. A member of the committee asked:

I believe the Forest Service, so it is said anyway, has a way of fixing prices on sales of timber at less than or different from prices obtained by private interests. Is that true, and if it is what is the reason for it?

And the forester answers that question, and his statement is clearly to the effect that prices are not less, everything proper being taken into consideration.

Mr. HUMPHREY of Washington. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. McLAUGHLIN. In just a moment. On page 76 there is another question and answer, and that question was asked after the forester and his assistant had made more or less detailed statements of their methods of arriving at value, and fixing prices at which standing timber will be sold.

What do you find finally, as a matter of fact, by comparing your prices with prices paid for property belonging to private interests?

And the concluding statement of the gentleman who answered that question is:

The price of Government timber tends to be a little above the price of corresponding private timber.

Mr. JOHNSON of Washington. State that again.

Mr. McLAUGHLIN. "The price of Government timber tends to be a little above the price of corresponding private timber." Now, that is the statement of a very competent assistant in the Forestry Service, Mr. Greeley, who very favorably impressed the committee.

Mr. JOHNSON of Washington. It should be more.

Mr. McLAUGHLIN. I thought the complaint was that the Government was sacrificing its timber and was selling it at lower prices than private interests were able to sell their timber and was thereby interfering with the business of private interests and demoralizing the market.

Mr. JOHNSON of Washington. I do not admit for a moment that the Government price in this particular northwestern territory is higher, but I contend it should be higher as a matter of equality, for the man who buys from the Government has neither taxes or interest to pay. That is one reason of itself that it should be higher, or it is not an equal bargain.

Mr. McLAUGHLIN. Here is a further question:

It seems to me I have heard that the Government is selling its timber cheaper than private interests sell theirs.

And here is the answer of Mr. Greeley, to whom I have referred to above:

I am very sure that that statement is not true as applied to timber that is of the same quality and accessibility.

Mr. MANN. Will the gentleman yield for a question?

Mr. McLAUGHLIN. Yes.

Mr. MANN. Is it not almost inevitably certain that whether it be Government timber or privately owned timber the timber is the same and the bidder is not likely to pay very much more either one way or the other?

Mr. McLAUGHLIN. Why, I suppose an intelligent bidder would bid about the same for private timber as for Government timber.

Mr. MANN. He is bidding, I take it, for the timber—not for the ownership.

Mr. JOHNSON of Washington. And the Government fixes the minimum price; that is the sale basis always.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. LEVER. Mr. Chairman, I want to see if we can not arrange to get along a little bit.

Mr. JOHNSON of Washington. Mr. Chairman, I want to put in a brief statement at this point.

Mr. LEVER. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that all debate on this paragraph and all amendments thereto close in 15 minutes.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from South Carolina asks unanimous consent that all debate on this paragraph and all amendments thereto close in 15 minutes. Is there objection. [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

Mr. HUMPHREY of Washington. Mr. Chairman, I have just listened with a great deal of interest to the statement made by the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. MCLAUGHLIN]—and I hope I may have his attention for a moment—in which he seeks to show that the Forest Service sells its timber for a little bit more than a private party. Now, if that statement is true, I wonder what has become of all this argument we have heard so often that these great forest reserves were established in order to keep the timber barons of the West from robbing the people. What is the trouble with the forest reserve, has it gone into combination with Weyerhauser and the other great timber owners of our western country? I thought the very purpose of the Forest Reserve was to let the people have cheaper lumber, cheaper timber, and now not only the gentleman from Michigan says, but the Forest Service comes here and boasts of the fact, that they charge more, so instead of helping the people against the monopoly they have claimed exists in the West, but which never did exist except in their imagination, they now are in combination with them. Now, the truth about it is that for a great many years we heard the argument on the floor of this House that the purpose of establishing these forest reserves was to keep private owners from monopolizing the timber lands of the great West; that they were making millions of dollars in the way of fortunes.

Mr. CULLOP. Will the gentleman yield there?

Mr. HUMPHREY of Washington. Certainly.

Mr. CULLOP. If I understood the gentleman correctly when I had the floor some time ago, they were exchanging with private owners timberlands for desert lands and calling them forest reserves. Now, does not the name of "forest reserve" mean something? Does it mean "forest" or "desert"?

Mr. HUMPHREY of Washington. It does not mean anything so far as the name "forest" is concerned, because, as I called to the attention of the gentleman awhile ago and on the floor of the House on two or three other occasions, I pointed out where the Forestry Service exchanged not only thousands but millions of acres of treeless land and took that into the forest reserves and took out of the public lands and gave to the railroads timberlands, and so far as I know, during the time that illustrious reformer was at the head of the Forestry Service or had anything to do with it, there never was an exchange of land whereby the forest land was gotten into the forest reserves and barren land taken out of forest reserves.

Mr. LEVER. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. HUMPHREY of Washington. I do.

Mr. LEVER. Has any such thing as that happened within the last four years, to the gentleman's knowledge?

Mr. HUMPHREY of Washington. No; I do not think so. So far as I know, since that illustrious gentleman who was decorated with a medal last night got out of the Forestry Service, there has been no more of these transactions; but that great reformer having been in there long enough to assist the railroads—or at least without any protest from him—to get 1,200,000 acres of land, it stopped when he went out; at least there has not been any since then.

Mr. CULLOP and Mr. FORDNEY rose.

The CHAIRMAN. To whom does the gentleman yield?

Mr. HUMPHREY of Washington. I yield to the gentleman from Michigan.

Mr. FORDNEY. I will say to the gentleman that prior to the time the gentleman from Washington speaks of in the San Francisco Mountain Reserve there was a million and a quarter acres of land that had nothing but sagebrush on it, taken by the Government, and land scrip or blanks which were called forest-reserve scrip given to the owners of that land, and that scrip located in the State of Washington and took the choicest timberland that the Government owned.

Mr. HUMPHREY of Washington. Yes; and I will say to the distinguished gentleman that I have in my possession two letters from a gentleman who went with that distinguished reformer, to whom we have referred, Gifford Pinchot, to the President, and suggested that change be made. I wish I had them here so I might put them in the RECORD.

I have referred to that transaction a good many times, and I think there have been some gentlemen on the floor of the House that sought to show that Mr. Pinchot did not know anything about it. I did not know whether he did or not, but I have these two letters from men who went with him, who state that he did.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. CULLOP. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that the gentleman's time be extended for two minutes.

The CHAIRMAN. The time has been fixed by the committee.

Mr. MCLAUGHLIN. Mr. Chairman, the gentleman from Washington [Mr. HUMPHREY] says that the Forest Service and those who supported it led the people to believe that the main object to be reached was the sale of timber to the people at a lower price. He puts words into the mouths of the gentlemen connected with the Forest Service. I do not believe they have advocated or promised anything of the kind. One object of the Forest Service is and has been to keep prices reasonable by keeping the timber out of the hands of private interests, who, by monopolizing it, could put prices just where they pleased. Now, that has evidently been the result of the Forest Service. Why, everybody knows what the experience was in other States. We in Michigan know to our sorrow what the policy pursued or total lack of policy there led to. Immense areas of timberland were picked up by private interests, lands carrying beautiful timber—hardwood and the lighter woods—the State retained hardly an acre of timberland. Every dollar realized from that timber has been gathered in by private interests to make great fortunes, which do nobody any good, and a large part of the land, after the timber was removed, went back to the State for nonpayment of taxes.

Mr. SMITH of Michigan. Will the gentleman yield for a question?

Mr. MCLAUGHLIN. Yes.

Mr. SMITH of Michigan. Was the purpose of the forest reserve accomplished in keeping down the prices? Has it had that effect?

Mr. MCLAUGHLIN. No one can tell, but the price has not been high; and, as far as the charge that the Government is interfering with private business by charging lower prices, the fact appears, and the testimony proves it, that the average price charged by the Government is often higher than is paid for privately owned timber.

Now, as to these exchanges of fine timberland owned by the Government for the waste lands, this is the first time in the House that I have heard it charged that the Forest Service or the friends of the Forest Service were responsible for that law or the disagreeable and unprofitable results of it—unprofitable for the Government. I think if the gentleman from Washington, who perhaps knows as much as anyone as to how that deal was framed and how the provision under which that kind of work was done was put in the bill, will refresh his memory, he will not charge the vicious features of the law or its unfortunate results to officials of the Forest Service. A bill was pending in Congress here some 12 years ago—I do not remember just how long ago, but it was some time before I came and I have been here 10 years—and a law was passed which was called the "lieu law," that the Government might exchange with individuals, or with "persons," as the law used the word—might exchange land with persons—with the idea of making an equitable, proper exchange in the interest of both individual and the Government. That law was amended, as I am informed, on the floor of the House in such a way as to make it possible for "persons" to exchange land, and to enable railroad companies, or anyone owning large tracts of land, to exchange those tracts—waste lands and sagebrush, and so forth, and such stuff as that, as has been spoken about—for fine timberland. After the law was passed and railroads wished to make exchanges, it was objected by the department that railroad companies did not have the privilege of that law, because the law said only "persons" should have that privilege, but the construction put upon it by those whose duty it was to construe it was that that word "person" meant natural and artificial persons, and the railroad companies availed themselves, as did other corporations, of the privilege of exchanging their worthless land, taking the finest timberland that the Government owned, not with the consent or connivance of officials of the Forest Service—not with their knowledge or belief that when the law was passed it would be so used. The framing of the law as far as it included the feature referred to, was the work of private institutions, and corporations, and railroad companies. And when it was discovered that that construction had been put on the law, and that use was being made of it, the law was repealed. And it seems to me it is not becoming now for the gentleman from Washington to charge the trouble to the Forest Service.

Mr. FORDNEY. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word.

I am sorry to differ with my colleague. In the first place, until 1889, the public lands of this country were disposed of largely by cash entry. Outside of the granted limits of a railroad lands were sold by the Government at $1.25 per acre, and double minimum, or $2.50, inside of granted limits. In 1889 the cash-entry law was repealed by Congress and no lands have been sold by the Government at cash entry since 1889. In 1896 the forest-exchange law was adopted, which gave, when our forest reserves were established, the right to individuals owning lands within fixed forest-reserve limits to exchange with the Government lands within those forest reserves for lands outside of the forest reserve, selected from public lands unappropriated in any State in the Union. Many of the lands granted to railroad companies, both within the granted limits and within indemnity limits, were thrown into forest reserves. I never knew of any railroad company exchanging a single acre of land with the Government for lands outside of a forest reserve, but the laws permitted it. But this has been the custom and is the custom to-day. Individuals have purchased lands from the railroad companies within the limits of a forest reserve where they could purchase valueless or cheap lands, took that right and went to some other State or some Territory and selected valuable lands from the Government, then deeded their valueless lands to the Government—a one-sided deal absolutely, the Government having absolutely nothing to say about that exchange.

As an illustration, gentlemen, I am going to be personal. In 1898 I wanted to purchase 40 acres of Government land adjoining some land that I owned in the district represented by the gentleman from Washington [Mr. JOHNSON]. There was no law by which I could obtain title to that 40 acres of land, except to purchase some kind of land scrip, namely, forest-reserve scrip, so called. I went to a banker and asked him to procure for me 40 acres of forest-reserve scrip, which he did, and for which I paid him $193, or a little less than $5 an acre.

I conveyed that land described in the deed (so-called scrip) to the Government and went to the land office at Olympia, Wash., laid down my quitclaim deed to the Government, with an abstract of title showing that the title was perfect in me, and selected these 40 acres of land that I wanted, which I sold shortly afterwards for $3,200. The land I gave to the Government was not worth 32 cents. I did not know the lands I was buying when I purchased that strip, but when I obtained the blank deed I discovered I had purchased 40 acres of cut-over lands. I then filled my name in that deed; I then knew the land I was getting. It was cut-over land within the district of the gentleman from Washington [Mr. JOHNSON] in township 21 north, range 9 west, on the Humptulips River; burned over, with nothing but stumps left upon it.

I later went to the Commissioner of the General Land Office here in Washington and pointed out the fault of that law and related the same story to him that I am giving to you, and he was astounded. I went to the then Secretary of the Interior, Mr. Hitchcock, and called his attention to the defects in that law and asked him if he would sanction a bill which I would introduce which should provide that the exchange of lands of that character should be of lands of approximately the same value. Both the Commissioner of the General Land Office and the Secretary of the Interior agreed to do that; I introduced the bill; but when I brought it before the Committee on the Public Lands of the House, of which I was a member, I got my own vote for the bill. All the rest voted against it. [Applause.]

Mr. WALSH. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks on the paragraph.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the gentleman's request?

There was no objection.

The CHAIRMAN. All debate on the paragraph and amendments thereto has expired by agreement. All the pro forma amendments will be withdrawn, without objection, and the Clerk will read.

The Clerk read as follows:

Absaroka National Forest, Mont., $7,425.

Mr. HUMPHREY of Washington. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Washington moves to strike out the last word.

Mr. HUMPHREY of Washington. Mr. Chairman, the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. MCLAUGHLIN] seems to be astonished that I have made the statements that I have on the floor of the House. I do not see why he should be astonished unless he was not here when the bill was under discussion each time for many years past. He is in error when he says that that law was amended so as to take in railroads. That is not the fact.

Mr. McLAUGHLIN. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. HUMPHREY of Washington. Yes.

Mr. McLAUGHLIN. I was speaking about the law being amended, and the construction was put upon the word "person" in such a way as to include railroads.

Mr. HUMPHREY of Washington. Now, the gentleman is right.

Mr. McLAUGHLIN. That is the meaning I intended to convey.

Mr. HUMPHREY of Washington. That construction was made by the Secretary of the Interior to include the railroads, but even with that construction there was no compulsion upon the department to make these changes—none whatever. You can search those records in vain—and I went through many hundreds of pages of that record—you can search those records in vain to find where any man connected with the Forest Service ever protested against that exchange. The only man who ever protested against that exchange and called attention to the fact that it would be a fraud and steal on the Government was Binger Hermann, and I have often thought that that was the reason why he was afterwards prosecuted and persecuted, because he had called attention to the fact that that would be a fraud on the Government.

Mr. FORDNEY. Binger Hermann was the Commissioner of the General Land Office in the case I related.

Mr. HUMPHREY of Washington. And it is in the record that Binger Hermann called the attention of the Secretary of the Interior to the fact that to make these exchanges would be a fraud on the Government; and when they insisted upon it he finally said the exchange ought to be made on the ground of value, and not upon the ground of acre per acre, because it was afterwards demonstrated that some of this land, worth 15 cents an acre, was exchanged, by the methods which the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. FORDNEY] has described, for land worth $200 an acre.

I challenge anybody to show where Mr. Gifford Pinchot ever raised his voice from the beginning to the end of this transaction, and as I stated to the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. MCLAUGHLIN] a few moments ago, I have in my hand two letters, written by reputable gentlemen, who told me that Gifford Pinchot went with them to the President and urged that this transaction be consummated. But you do not have to depend upon letters for proof of that.

Mr. CULLOP. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield there?

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman from Washington yield to the gentleman from Indiana?

Mr. HUMPHREY of Washington. In one moment. I want to answer the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. MCLAUGHLIN] first. A company in Santa Barbara, Cal., owned 48,000 acres of land, and they had seen these transactions take place with the Santa Fe Railroad, and it occurred to them it would be a good thing to have the Government take their 48,000 acres of land, valued at 25 cents an acre, and let them take scrip and go out and select land somewhere else. There was a protest against that transaction, and I remember that protest came from Binger Hermann. But soon after that protest was made Mr. Gifford Pinchot turned up, out in California, and he wrote a letter which I have placed in the RECORD—you can find it if you want to see it—suggesting that this exchange be made.

Tell me that he did not know anything about it! I will tell you other transactions that he knew about in the Forest Service after he became Chief Forester. When this bill that the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. FORDNEY] was talking about, for the purpose of amending the law, was in here to stop these transactions in the West, and it was urged by the men in the West, because if the obnoxious law were not repealed it would take everything they had in that country and give it to the railroads—while that bill was pending in this House there were 240,000 acres in Montana belonging to the Northern Pacific Railroad, and they wanted to get the same thing and do the same thing that the Santa Fe had done, and——

Mr. LONGWORTH. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman from Washington yield to the gentleman from Ohio?

Mr. HUMPHREY of Washington. In a moment. And while that was pending a distinguished Member of this House went to Gifford Pinchot, then the Chief Forester, and urged upon him not to permit this thing to be consummated until this bill could be passed to stop it, and Mr. Pinchot replied that he did not propose to brush aside a great policy because a railroad was going to make something out of it. As a result that deal was consummated with his active assistance, and the Northern Pacific Railroad got 240,000 acres of the best timber land in the West for lands that were practically worthless. Now, there is a transaction, and if the distinguished gentleman from Michigan [Mr. MCLAUGHLIN] does not think that is true, let him ask Gifford Pinchot.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Washington has expired.

Mr. BOOHER. Mr. Chairman, I have listened very attentively to the discussion of the lumber situation in the West, trying to learn something about the conditions out there. The gentlemen from that section of the country do not agree. I could not understand the logic of the gentleman from Washington [Mr. JOHNSON]. He complains because the Government is selling its standing timber so cheaply that it destroys the business of the private owners of timber. A year ago a speech was made in this House by the gentleman from Oregon [Mr. HAWLEY], in which he took exactly the contrary position, and said that the Government was selling its timber for the highest price of any stumpage owner in this country. I want to read just what he said. I want to show that the lumber industry of the West is not injured at all by the tariff. If putting it on the free list or doing anything else with it would make lumber cheaper to the farmers of the West, I would be one in this House who would vote to make it cheaper. I think the Lumber Trust of this country has robbed the people of this country long enough, and it is time to call a halt.

Mr. FORDNEY. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BOOHER. Yes.

Mr. FORDNEY. The gentleman speaks of the Lumber Trust. Now, what does the gentleman know about any Lumber Trust? Does he know that there is any such thing?

Mr. BOOHER. Oh, yes; and so does everybody else.

Mr. FORDNEY. Wait a minute. Does not the gentleman know that it has been determined by the Government after careful investigation that there is no such thing?

Mr. BOOHER. Oh, no; I do not know that.

Mr. FORDNEY. Why does the gentleman use that word?

Mr. BOOHER. I will use it again——

Mr. FORDNEY. The gentleman is wrong about that.

Mr. BOOHER. And I will say that the Lumber Trust has made money enough out of the people, whether it made it when there was a high tariff on lumber or when there was no tariff.

Now, let us see what the gentleman from Oregon [Mr. HAWLEY] said. It was in a discussion along this same line, when this section of the bill was pending. It does not appear in the RECORD as the gentleman made it, but I have got from the Printing Office the original notes of what the gentleman from Oregon [Mr. HAWLEY] said on that occasion. It was during a running debate between the gentleman and myself. Here is what he said:

> If we are going to put the Forest Service on a paying basis and make it a source of revenue, we must authorize large sales, and if legislation is necessary enact the necessary legislation so that the sales can be made in large enough bodies to pay the operators a reasonable return. Now, for instance—

This is what I want to call attention to—

> on the Siuslaw River, in Oregon, there are about 13,000,000 feet of lumber. The people on that river are putting up $317,000 for the improvement of the river in order to get their lumber, when it is sawed, out on the bay and on the ocean. They have 13,000,000 feet of timber, and when they get ready to market that timber they will make money on it, and no one will buy timber on a national forest and pay the Government price—and they usually get the highest price in the market around them.

The gentleman from Washington [Mr. JOHNSON] says they are selling it too cheaply; that they are destroying private business. A year ago the gentleman from Oregon [Mr. HAWLEY] said that they were selling it too high; that the Government got the highest price for its timber stumpage. Now, is there any trouble with the lumber situation? Has lumber gone down? Lumber is higher than it was before the passage of the Underwood bill. Everything that is made out of timber is higher than it was before the passage of that bill. Then putting lumber on the free list has not destroyed the lumber industry anywhere. If it has, I do not know where it is. Build a barn or build a house, and you will find out what the price of lumber is.

Mr. JOHNSON of Washington. Will the gentleman yield for a question?

Mr. BOOHER. Yes.

Mr. JOHNSON of Washington. If the great war in Europe has increased the price of everything else, is it not a little bit astonishing that lumber is about a year and a half behind everything else in reaching a fair price? Does the gentleman begrudge lumber picking up a little bit in price?

Mr. BOOHER. Mr. Chairman, the gentleman is using the same argument that they used for the panic of 1893.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Missouri has expired.

Mr. BOOHER. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that I may proceed for five minutes more.

Mr. LEVER. Pending that, I ask unanimous consent that all debate on this paragraph, which is just one line, may close in 10 minutes.

Mr. FORDNEY. I would like five minutes.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from South Carolina asks unanimous consent that all debate on this paragraph and amendments thereto close in 10 minutes. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. BOOHER. The gentleman is using the same argument that was used about the panic of 1893. Our Republican brethren say that the panic of 1893 was caused by the Wilson Act, which was enacted and went into effect in September, 1894. That has been the argument from the time of that panic down to the present time. The great Senator from Iowa, Mr. Dolliver, when the Payne bill was pending, said he thought his party had used that argument about long enough; that he had told that story to the people of the country until he had become ashamed of it, and he was not going to tell it any more; that he could not understand how the tariff act of 1894 caused the panic of 1893.

The gentleman from Washington says if it had not been for the war in Europe there would not have been any sale for lumber, that there would have been no increase in the price of lumber. Well, I am sorry that the war increased the price of lumber, because lumber ought to be free to the people of this country. It ought to be just as cheap as it can be to build homes for the people of this country. It would be better for the people of this country if every man with a family owned a little cabin that covered his family, and it would be better if lumber were cheap enough so that every man could afford to buy it; but lumber has gone up because there is a war in Europe. Did hides go up after they were put on the free list because there was a war in Europe? Did wool go up after it was put on the free list on account of the war in Europe? Is that a fact now? Are those things true? Let us argue these propositions from a logical standpoint. Why, the gentleman from Washington [Mr. JOHNSON] said you could not compete with the Government lumber, that it was sold so cheaply by the Government that it put the private lumber dealers out of business. A year ago the gentleman from Oregon [Mr. HAWLEY] said it was sold higher than the people outside sold their stumpage, and consequently the Government could not sell it and make the Forest Service a paying institution. We discussed that question thoroughly, and that was his reason for it. Gentlemen seem to think there is some trouble with the lumber industry somewhere. They say that the Forestry Service are selling lumber too cheap, because they are selling it on the stump for more than a dollar a thousand, but the lumberman sells that same lumber to the people of this country for $40 a thousand. Now, do they want anything more; are they entitled to anything more?

Mr. JOHNSON of Washington. The people of Missouri do not get a saw log at a dollar a thousand, do they?

Mr. BOOHER. Get what?

Mr. JOHNSON of Washington. They get manufactured lumber at the commercial price and freight.

Mr. BOOHER. It costs them $7.50 or $8 to put lumber in a sawed condition and put it on the cars to ship. Your lumbermen get out of that lumber $40 a thousand when the man comes to buy it to put into his home.

Mr. JOHNSON of Washington. The gentleman does not forget the transportation.

Mr. BOOHER. No; that is in it, of course; say that is half the cost.

Mr. JOHNSON of Washington. We have been selling lumber at the mill for $6 to $7.50 a thousand; yes, and putting it on the train at $6.

Mr. BOOHER. I am not talking of what it costs at the mill, I am talking of what it costs the consumer.

Mr. JOHNSON of Washington. Well, then, talk about that, and do not jump on the lumber industry.

Mr. BOOHER. I am talking about it when it gets to the man that uses it. I have had men engaged in the business tell me that a child 12 years old could buy lumber just as well as an experienced buyer. It is all sold to the retailer at the same price, and yet it is said there is no Lumber Trust.

Mr. FORDNEY. Mr. Chairman, the gentleman's statement is so full of error that he ought to strike it from the RECORD.

Mr. BOOHER. I shall not do it.

Mr. FORDNEY. I know the gentleman will not. He is full of error himself, or he would not make such a statement. He has stated that lumber can be produced for $8 at the mill and sells at $40 to the consumer. When the gentleman from Washington asked him what it costs to produce lumber in Washington he did not know. I know he does not know, because he would not make such a statement if he did know, if he is an honest man, and I believe he is honest. I know him, but he is misguided in his judgment.

I am in the lumber business, and I happen to know what I am talking about. I am in the business in the district of the gentleman from Washington.

Mr. BOOHER. If the gentleman is in the business, will not he tell us what it costs to manufacture lumber?

Mr. FORDNEY. Yes; I will tell you. Lumber sold last year at the mills in Mr. JOHNSON's (of Washington) district for $5.50 per thousand, low grades. Average grades of lumber sold for $9 at the sawmills in his district. The freight on that lumber to New York State and New England is 80 cents per 100 pounds. Fir lumber, the predominating lumber produced on the Pacific coast in Washington and Oregon, weighs 3,200 pounds to the thousand feet, rough lumber. Multiply 32 by 80 and you get the amount of freight, or $25.60, in round numbers, from the State of Washington to New York; 60 cents per hundred to the Mississippi River and the Missouri River. Add the freight to the mill cost and you will find that the profit to the mill man is very small. Why do you make such statements?

The average cost of production of lumber in the Southern States, where 40 per cent of all the lumber is produced in the United States, is about $9.50, not including the value of the stumpage.

Mr. WINGO. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. FORDNEY. Yes.

Mr. WINGO. Is the gentleman speaking of ordinary boards?

Mr. FORDNEY. I am speaking of the average product of the entire tree. It does not cost any more to manufacture a board of high grade than it does a board of low grade, but you get less for the low grade. I have given the gentleman the average cost of the entire tree.

Mr. WINGO. To what extent is it manufactured, rough board or finished sides or flooring?

Mr. FORDNEY. I gave you the price of rough lumber. When put into ceilings, sidings, wainscoting, or car siding you must add the difference in cost of putting the lumber through dry kiln, through the planing mill, into the drying shed, and onto the car, and add that to the price of the rough lumber.

Mr. WINGO. Will the gentleman yield again?

Mr. FORDNEY. Yes.

Mr. WINGO. Do I understand the gentleman to say that the cost of manufacturing southern pine in the rough boards, going through the process he has mentioned, is over $9 a thousand?

Mr. FORDNEY. Yes.

Mr. WINGO. What is the Kansas City price?

Mr. FORDNEY. I am not in the retail business and do not know.

Mr. WINGO. The price at wholesale at the mill?

Mr. FORDNEY. At the mill? In March, 1913, southern lumber was selling from $16 to $18 straight manufactured, dressed, rough, and all grades. In 1915 those prices were around $12. At the present time the prices on lumber are higher than six months ago, materially so.

Mr. WINGO. What is the price at the mill on the cars of ordinary southern pine boards?

Mr. FORDNEY. If the gentleman will pick out some grade, I can tell him, but I give you an average. It is not correct to give prices of a single grade. For instance, from 40 to 60 per cent of the lumber from the southern pine tree is a low grade and only about 10 per cent high grade, and one should take the average of the entire product in order to obtain a correct idea of values.

The Clerk read as follows:

Alamo National Forest, N. Mex., $4,222.

Mr. FORDNEY. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word.

Mr. WINGO. Will the gentleman yield further?

Mr. FORDNEY. Yes.

Mr. WINGO. Take an ordinary 1-inch board in the clear. What is the present price of that on the cars?

Mr. FORDNEY. That would depend on the width and length of the board. If you are selling from 6 feet up, which is a merchantable board, that is one thing. If it is 16 or 18 or 20 feet in length, a board 1 inch thick and 12 inches wide, it would bring a much higher price. The same grade 6 inches wide and 10 or 12 feet long of average high-grade lumber in Southern States would sell to-day from $20 to $30 per thousand. But there is only 5 to 10 per cent of your tree that makes that class of lumber and 40 to 60 per cent of the low grade, and much of the low grade is sold below cost of production.

Now, the gentleman says the industry has not been injured by free trade on lumber, and he speaks about the panic of 1893 being caused by the Democratic tariff of 1894. He says it was so stated by the Republicans. It is true. The anticipation of a free-trade law the minute that your party was elected in 1892 brought distress to the country. Every man with capital invested knew what your policy was; you had declared for free trade. They knew that the House and the Senate and the President of the United States were controlled by the Democratic Party, and you were going to lower the rate of duty, and immediately business depression came over the country. I was in business, and I know that if the panic had lasted a year longer, and I had had anything I would have been busted. Most men that had anything went into bankruptcy. There were $2,000,000,000 worth of railroad property in the hands of receivers when your party went out of power.

Eight hundred thousand men are employed this minute in sawmills and planing mills of the United States, supporting a population of men, women, and children of 4,000,000. And yet, my friend, you would put upon the free list the products of that labor, while everything that is consumed by these people and the people by whom they are employed pays some sort of duty. Is it fair and just to single them out? I say no.

Mr. DAVIS of Texas. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman tell what brought on the panic of 1873? There was no Democratic election then.

Mr. FORDNEY. There was a shortage of gold in the United States with which to pay foreign debts, and the largest firm of importers in the land, in New York, failed because they could not get gold to pay their foreign debts, and immediately a panic began. [Applause on the Republican side.]

Mr. McLAUGHLIN. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. FORDNEY. Yes.

Mr. McLAUGHLIN. The gentleman speaks about the influence of the tariff. Does the gentleman know anything about contracts being made for the purchase of lumber in Canada and the tariff added to the price?

Mr. FORDNEY. I do. I saw a contract made with a Canadian manufacturer for the sale of lumber to a Pittsburgh firm when the Underwood tariff law was being discussed by the Ways and Means Committee, and there was a provision in that contract which provided that if lumber went on the free list before that lumber was shipped to the United States the Canadian should get just that much more for his lumber. I saw that contract.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Michigan has expired.

The Clerk read as follows:

Chugach National Forest, Alaska, $9,418.

Mr. BOOHER. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word. The gentleman from Michigan [Mr. FORDNEY] I am satisfied knows all about the price of lumber, but he did not tell this House what it was. He did not answer the question of the gentleman from Arkansas [Mr. WINGO], and he did not intend to answer it—just like all these other gentlemen who know, but who refuse to give the information that they have.

Mr. FORDNEY. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BOOHER. Yes.

Mr. FORDNEY. What question was it that the gentleman asked that I did not answer?

Mr. BOOHER. He asked the gentleman time and time again to tell what the price of lumber at the mill was and the gentleman did not tell it, nor did he tell the cost of manufacturing lumber per 1,000 feet.

Mr. FORDNEY. I will tell it just as soon as the gentleman gets through.

Mr. BOOHER. Mr. Chairman, I desire to read to the gentleman something about the panic of 1893, and I am going to read it from a Republican journal, and then I am going to put in some remarks of several eminent Republicans in this country when Mr. Cleveland called Congress together in 1893 to repeal the Sherman silver bill. August 20, 1893, this article appeared in the Chicago Inter Ocean under the title "Reaping the whirlwind":

THE NEW YORK BANKS.

When the future historian tells the world of the great financial panic of 1893, he will say: "In the winter and spring months of that year the New York bankers and financiers sowed the wind and during the summer months reaped the whirlwind." We know no arrangement of words that will more graphically describe the action of New York financiers and the results of that action than to quote the words of Col. Ingersoll "that early in the season of disturbance properly called this 'a bankers' panic.'" Nor are the New York bankers alone to blame. Those of Boston and Philadelphia came in for their share. They were only excelled by the New Yorkers because of the greater importance and opportunity of the latter.

And yet it was the Wilson bill that was passed a year later!

There was, perhaps, no organized conspiracy against the West in the great financial centers of the East, but there was a general understanding all along the line that the West should be forced into line to help the East accomplish what it had long desired. Early in the winter a bank president, conversing with a Chicago man of business, said to him: "Mr. Jones, we are going to make the West pay up for this summer." "But why should you press your western creditors this summer?" asked Mr. Jones. The reply was, "Well, we think it would make you a little more thoughtful about currency matters and drive you from your foolish ideas about silver." It is unnecessary to repeat the conversation that followed. The initial question and answer are only given to indicate the intention and object the eastern financiers had in view.

The Boston bank president was not making an idle remark, suggested merely by his own thoughts. Both the matter and the manner of the remark indicated that it was the result of a consultation, and that it meant concerted action all along the eastern shore. Politics and finance were combined in the scheme.

I would like now to have the opportunity to read what Mr. Thomas B. Reed said to the House at the special session of Congress called by Mr. Cleveland in 1893. It is very interesting reading now. Oh, there was no thought about the Democrats having come into power and having a low tariff bill in view; they never referred to that; but it was Republican legislation, passed by a Republican Congress and signed by a Republican President, that these men laid the panic to.

Mr. FORDNEY. During the Democratic administration?

Mr. BOOHER. Oh, no; it had been passed long before any Democratic administration. The gentleman well knows that. On August 26, 1893, in this House, Mr. Reed, of Maine, said:

Crises like the present are not uncommon in the history of the world; indeed they seem to be essential to human progress and to arise out of the characteristics of human nature itself. Probably if wise men, now alive, had been consulted in the formation of mankind there would not have been these fluctuations which now disturb us and which disfigure the history of the time. If we could have had that perfection of wisdom which is exhibited, so far as I have ever known, only in a greenback oration [laughter], we should have the human race proceeding on the upward grade steadily, without faltering, and without relapse.

But, unfortunately, human nature was not framed in that way. Instead of a continuous upward movement, always rising, always going forward, the movement of the human race seems to be a series of upward starts and falls of almost proportionate length. The general progress has always been onward, but there have been many times when the movement has seemed to be to the rear.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Missouri has expired.

Mr. BOOHER. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to proceed for five minutes more.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. LEVER. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that debate on this paragraph and all amendments thereto close in 10 minutes.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. BOOHER. It is a pity the Republicans of to-day did not live then, Mr. Chairman. He continues:

In the history of civilized nations these alternations have not been infrequent. The great rises and the great falls have extended over long periods of time. At intervals there have been minor falls as well as minor upliftings. We seem now to be at the beginning of one of those declines, the like of which happens after a long period. Unless all indications fail, we are in a situation very much like that which afflicted England in 1793 and in 1825, and which began to afflict us in the year 1873.

I reckon one of the minor falls was in 1907, when you had the President and every department of the Government. That was the time when the more money a man had in the bank the less he could get out, and the fellow who did not have any money in the bank was more fortunate than the man who had. Who was in power when the great falls in this country began? Who gave the whole country the smallpox on the financial question? You did in 1873, according to Mr. Reed. Here is something that Mr. Ryan, of Kansas, said at the same time, on August 21, 1893, and he was a prominent Republican from that State in his day. He said this at the same session of Congress:

I am satisfied that the passage of the bill offered by the gentleman from West Virginia [Mr. Wilson]—to repeal Sherman law—will help to restore public confidence in the financial policy of the Government, and notwithstanding all that has been said in derision of "confidence" during this debate by gentlemen who hold the opposite view on the pending measure, there is nothing that is of more importance, either to the individual or the Government.

Let us, as was so generously said on the 4th of March last by the distinguished leader of the Republican side of the Chamber, "place patriotism above partisanship, and whether we were sent here as Democrats, Republicans, or Populists, accept equal responsibility for the present deplorable situation, join hands to repair the present and avert impending disaster to our common country, and show that we regard the whole of it as of greater importance than any part of it, all its people more than any portion.

Here is what another distinguished Republican said at that same session, Mr. Charles W. Stone, of Pennsylvania:

The Sherman law, whether originally so or not, is now undoubtedly a factor in the business depression.

Mr. Covert, of New York, another Republican, said:

This enactment as it stands is more and very much more than a cowardly makeshift; it is absolutely wrong as a matter of principle. It has been demonstrated by the saddest experience that it is disastrous as a matter of policy.

August 23, 1893, the House being in Committee of the Whole for the consideration of the bill to repeal the purchasing clause of the Sherman Act, the gentleman from Pennsylvania, Mr. Dalzell, said:

The act was passed on the 14th of July and went into operation on the 13th of August. And what has been the result? I have here a statement from the Treasury Department showing the amounts of gold and silver coin and certificates, United States notes, and national-bank notes in circulation August 1, 1893. How many of our obligations are payable in gold? These: First, gold certificates, amounting to $87,704,739; second, Treasury notes under act of July 14, 1890, amounting to $148,286,348; third, United States notes, amounting to $346,681,016. In other words, there is now payable in gold by the United States $582,672,103. These are our gold obligations; and how much gold have we to pay them with? Only $100,000,000 in gold.

Why, my friends, if you put aside the immense resources and the credit of the American people, the National Treasury is to-day, according to legal definition, bankrupt. Such being the state of our accounts, what does it mean to continue this policy? It means simply to widen the breach between our liabilities and our assets, and the time must ultimately come when our gold reserve, in proportion to the burden it has to bear, will be simply an insignificant bagatelle. Do we want to continue that policy indefinitely? Do we want to continue to buy 54,000,000 ounces of silver each year without limit as to time and pay for them in gold?

How long do you suppose that even the imperial resources of our magnificent domain, the energy and enterprise, the honesty and purpose of the American people, will persuade the world of our ultimate solvency measured in the world's standard of value gold? It is not the monthly addition for a few months of silver purchases under the act of 1890 that has shaken confidence; so far as the money question has anything to do with the existing depression, its influence is derived from the dreary prospect of the indefinite continuance of such violation of the laws of sound finance.

So, Mr. Chairman, when we want to know about the panic of 1893 we ought to go back and take the words of men who were then on the stage of action and who were great actors in that great drama. They told the people of the country what was the trouble then, what they believed was wrong, and Mr. Reed said it began in this country in 1873; that it began in England in 1793, and that they were growing and constantly growing.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Missouri has again expired.

Mr. BOOHER. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the RECORD by inserting other extracts.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. BOOHER. Mr. Chairman, under leave to print, I insert the following remarks of Senator Dolliver, of Iowa, made on June 10, 1909, in the Sixty-first Congress, to be found in the RECORD of that Congress, first session, at page 2995:

Not only have I succeeded in acquiring some little knowledge about these matters since the Dingley tariff law was framed, but I have also acquired a rather more generous interpretation of the industrial and commercial situation of 1897 than I was accustomed those days to put into my speeches either in the House of Representatives or upon the stump.

If I were called upon now in the calm light of 12 years' reflection, to say that putting wool on the free list resulted in closing factories and destroying the flocks of the country and ruining the business of the country, I should hesitate to do it. It is a very wise man who can tell what was the cause of the industrial depression which burst in a panic upon the United States in all departments of its affairs in 1893. I have become satisfied that we, as Republican partisans, finding the argument too convenient, have exaggerated the relation of the tariff controversy to that great industrial crisis. It always was a little difficult to connect the panic of 1893 with the tariff act of 1894, in view of the fact that the event seemed to precede the cause in such a way as to put almost any ordinary man upon suspicion So I am not going to discuss that question except to say that we have already had two or three mistakes made in this bill by misrepresenting the industrial conditions of 1894, 1896, and 1897.

My honored friend from Idaho Mr. Heyburn, the other day brought tears to my eyes when he was making his magnificent plea for putting a duty on certain mineral ores, because he said under certain tariffs the mines were shut. We ought to know that the mines were shut, not because of certain particular tariffs, but because the business of the country and of the world was long prostrate in the midst of financial disaster up to that time unapproached in our commercial history. While all these things entered into it, I do not think that it was necessary to attribute all of it to the tariff, and certainly not all the trouble that happened to lead and paint and the consumption of such merchandise to the little change that had been effected in tariff schedules some years before. And so the closing of these factories and the falling off in the demand for sheep and a thousand things entered into it.

He is not a wise man in the interpretation of statistics or commercial and industrial history who attributes to one thing a result of world-wide significance, to the production of which a thousand causes, some of them too obscure even to observe, operated over a long period of time.

Mr. FORDNEY. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word. The gentleman from Missouri [Mr. BOOHER] goes back to the demonetization of silver, away back in 1873. Did you ever in all your life hear tell of a child catching the whooping cough in 1873 and not whooping until 1916? [Applause on the Republican side.] That is old, my friends; that is forgotten long ago. The gentleman called attention to Col. Bob Ingersoll's statement. He was a lecturer, supposed to be a sort of preacher, who declared that there was no hell or heaven, and that he did not believe in God. If his judgment was no better on a business proposition than on those things his opinion is not worth very much. I would like to believe there is no hell, but I can not believe it. [Laughter.]

Mr. BOOHER. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. FORDNEY. I do.

Mr. BOOHER. But he was a good Republican, was he not?

Mr. FORDNEY. I do not know. I think he was misguided, and I hope the poor fellow is in heaven. If there are no lumbermen in heaven I do not want to go there. My friends, your President, a Democratic President, Grover Cleveland, a brave man, a grand man, and much more appreciated after having been President than he was before or during his term of office, declined to sign a Democratic tariff bill, and it became a law without his signature, and you abuse that law because it brought on a panic——

Mr. REILLY. Why did he decline to sign it?

Mr. FORDNEY. He said it was not low enough.

Mr. REILLY. He said that the Senate had destroyed its democracy.

Mr. FORDNEY. He accused his party of perfidy, of agreeing to do one thing and doing another, and I never knew them to do anything else. [Laughter on Republican side.] The gentleman assails the 1873 money question; but who gave our monetary system the smallpox in 1896? William Jennings Bryan; and you backed him up then, too. That failed. If his policy had prevailed, this country undoubtedly would have suffered the greatest panic of any country in the world. But, whether you are right or wrong in your tariff policy, you know we did have a panic after you adopted your free-trade policy, so called, in the Wilson tariff law. You do know that the Republican Party, in 1896, was returned to power upon the policy of protection. You do know, my friends, before the Republican Party could get a tariff law upon the statute books—which was afterwards called the Dingley law—the foreign importers filled our warehouses to the roof with goods brought into this country before the Republican tariff law could be enacted. You do know it was 1 year and 18 months after the adoption of that law before these foreign products could be disposed of in this country. You do know, my friends, that immediately upon the disposal of these goods—or the consumption of them in this country—our industries began to thrive, prosper, and grow rapidly. You do know that during the life of that law we had greater prosperity in this country than ever before. You do know that the country was prosperous under the Payne tariff law; but you succeeded in making the people believe that it was not a tariff revision downward, even though it actually was a severe one. You do know, my friends, you came back into power and adopted a free-trade policy. You know that under your tariff law to-day the ad valorem rates on imports are below 10 per cent ad valorem. You do know that right now, with the war in Europe, such a war as was never heard of before, the imports are greater than at any time in the history of the country.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired, and, without objection, the pro forma amendment will be considered as withdrawn.

There was no objection.

Mr. MANN rose.

The CHAIRMAN. The committee limited the debate on this item to 10 minutes.

Mr. MANN. I did not hear the committee limit it.

The Clerk read as follows:

Apache National Forest, Ariz., $9,279.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word. Mr. Chairman, I regret very much, indeed, that the gentleman from Texas [Mr. DAVIS] and the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. BOOHER], in the consideration of a forest item in the Agricultural bill, should endeavor to provoke a tariff debate, which would be interesting only to those who have been dead and gone for years. It is characteristic, however, that those two gentlemen should go back to 1873. [Laughter on the Republican side.] It seems to me that we ought to forego a discussion of tariff at this time and get down to business. [Applause.] While the speeches of the two gentlemen were very entertaining, the gentleman from Michigan making an entertaining speech and the gentleman from Missouri reading entertaining speeches of former Republicans, which he probably would not have listened to if he had been here at the time, I think we ought to speed up and pass along these items in the agricultural appropriation bill.

Mr. BOOHER. Will the gentleman yield for a question?

Mr. MANN. Certainly.

Mr. BOOHER. Does not the gentleman think he is a little unkind to charge this side of the House with starting a tariff discussion when three gentlemen on that side of the House held a private debate over there on the tariff?

Mr. MANN. The gentleman from Missouri is wide of the mark. Gentlemen on this side had been discussing this bill and the condition of the forest reserve at this time and the condition of the lumber business at this time, especially in the Northwest. The gentleman from Missouri, in a prepared speech, which he had prepared in advance to put upon the House at this time, rose and read a speech about the panic of 1873. [Laughter on the Republican side.] And it takes a good deal of forbearance, in view of all he said, for this side of the House to insist that we confine ourselves to the business before the committee, which is the agricultural appropriation bill, and let the panic of 1873 look out for itself. It is dead and gone.

Mr. LEVER. Mr. Chairman, I hope the suggestion of the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MANN] may be carried out, both on this side of the House and on the other side of the House. We are not so much concerned as to who started this tariff discussion—certainly no member of the Committee on Agriculture started it—as we are in the passage of this legislation.

It has always been the custom of the Committee of the Whole to refrain from political discussion on the Agricultural appropriation bill. I hope we may not to-day depart from that very old and very wholesome custom. I may say, however, Mr. Chairman, that I am trusting to have the full support of the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MANN] from now on in speeding up the consideration of this bill.

Mr. MANN. Why does the gentleman say "from now on"?

Mr. LEVER. We spent an hour and a half discussing seeds that we might have very properly spent in discussing the bigger problems in this bill.

Mr. MANN. I did not use any of that time.

Mr. LEVER. I confess that. But I am trying to get the gentleman now to lock arms with me and let us march along with the consideration of this bill this afternoon.

Mr. MANN. I am sure the gentleman is not trying to get me to lock horns with him. [Laughter.]

Mr. LEVER I do not want the gentleman to lock horns with me. [Laughter.] I said "lock arms."

Mr. JOHNSON of Washington. If these were 11 items in the rivers and harbors bill, I would be expected to get on this floor and talk at great length about them, explaining that each one was a very meritorious project. In regard to the 11 forest-reserve items in the State of Washington, I am going to talk a little about them; and I regret exceedingly that the debate has ranged from the crime of 1873 to the European war, with a few amens from the "amen corner" over there. [Laughter.] And I am going to take a little time on the forest-reserve proposition if I can get it.

Mr. LEVER. The gentleman will find I am not going to press too strongly a proposition to close debate when there is debate on the bill; but I do feel that gentlemen ought not to inject into this debate a discussion of the tariff, and I hope this side of the House, at least, will join forces with me and press this bill forward and confine the debate to the matter at issue, which is the bill itself.

The Clerk read as follows:

Arapahoe National Forest, Colo., $5,736.

Mr. BOOHER. Mr. Chairman, in order that history may stay straight and the facts may appear in the RECORD as to who started this thing [laughter], I want to call the attention of my good friend from Illinois to the fact that the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. FOCHT], the gentleman from Washington [Mr. JOHNSON]——

Mr. JOHNSON of Washington. I am glad I started it.

Mr. BOOHER (continuing). And the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. MOORE] held a very animated private conversation over there for five minutes on the effect of the tariff on lumber [applause on the Democratic side], and agreed thoroughly with one another, and agreed that the Underwood bill called for the low price of lumber and the Wilson bill caused the panic of 1893. They did not allow anybody on this side to ask a question. I do not blame the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MANN] or any other gentleman on that side for being a little sore about the panics in this country.

Mr. MANN. If the gentleman wants us to discuss the tariff, we will spend the next two weeks doing it.

Mr. BOOHER. Oh, no.

Mr. HARRISON. Mr. Chairman, I make the point of order the gentlemen are not discussing the amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Mississippi makes the point of order that the debate is not in order, and the Chair sustains the point of order.

Mr. BOOHER. It is always regrettable to talk about things that happened in the dim past, because that brings up memories that sometimes we try to forget, and we do forget them when it is to our interest. It is hardly to our interest to strike out the last word, according to my amendment, but I think I set the House straight as to who started this thing, and I am ready to quit. [Laughter and applause.]

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will read.

The Clerk read as follows:

Arkansas National Forest, Ark., $11,930.

Mr. WINGO. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out line 22 and substitute the following language.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Arkansas offers an amendment, which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

Mr. WINGO moves to amend by inserting, in lieu of line 22, the following:

"That the Executive orders and proclamations setting forth and reserving certain lands in the State of Arkansas, known and designated as the Ozark National Forest and the Arkansas National Forest, as forest reserves be, and they are hereby, suspended, set aside, vacated, and held for naught as to all public lands now included in said reserves lying and being situated within the State of Arkansas, and that all public lands therein be, and they are hereby, excluded from said forest reserves and are hereby restored to the public domain, the same as though said orders and proclamations had not been issued."

Mr. LEVER. I reserve a point of order on that, Mr. Chairman. I wonder if I may not make arrangements with the gentleman to close debate? How much time does the gentleman desire on this paragraph?

Mr. WINGO. I think five minutes will be all I desire.

Mr. LEVER. I ask unanimous consent that all debate on this paragraph and amendments thereto close in five minutes.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from South Carolina asks unanimous consent that debate on this paragraph and all amendments thereto close in five minutes. Is there objection?

Mr. WINGO. Reserving the right to object, I want to offer another amendment, and possibly we had better make it 10 minutes.

Mr. LEVER. I will make it 10 minutes.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from South Carolina [Mr. LEVER] modifies the request, making it 10 minutes.

Mr. MANN. I object. We want to know what it is.

Mr. LEVER. The gentleman from Arkansas informed me he had another amendment.

Mr. MANN. I understand; but I want to discuss this amendment. I heard the amendment and I know what it is. I may want to discuss it.

Mr. LEVER. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that all debate close in 15 minutes.

Mr. MANN. I do not know how much time will be required. Let the gentleman proceed.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MANN] objects.

[Mr. WINGO addressed the committee. See Appendix.]

Mr. LEVER. I do not care to take the time of the Chair in arguing the point of order. It seems clearly that it is subject to the point of order. If I read the amendment aright it seems to me that it provides affirmative legislation, which is contrary to the rule, and the Holman rule does not apply.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair is of the opinion that the point of order is well taken. Not only does it seek to strike out, but it changes existing law, not only affecting this item but other items. The Chair sustains the point of order.

Mr. WINGO. I desire to offer another amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Arkansas offers an amendment, which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

Mr. WINGO moves to amend by inserting as a new paragraph after line 22, the following:

"Provided, That all funds arising from the sale of timber in the Arkansas National Forest shall be used in aiding in the survey and construction of permanent roads in the counties in which said timber is cut."

Mr. LEVER. I reserve a point of order on that, for the purpose of allowing the gentleman from Arkansas to discuss it for five minutes.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from South Carolina reserves the point of order, and the gentleman from Arkansas is recognized for five minutes.

[Mr. WINGO addressed the committee. See Appendix.]

Mr. JOHNSON of Washington. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word. I am glad the gentleman from Arkansas has brought up one phase of the forest-reserve problem. There is no doubt that roads are needed in counties that lie within the forest reserves. The problem comes to this: Either these sums appropriated for each reserve for road management, trail building, range stations, and certain little work they want to do are too much because less would accomplish the purpose, or else they are far too little for the real development of the counties. In the meantime the Federal Government receives for itself 65 per cent of all the income of all the forest reserves. I know of one great county, which is denied both population and advancement on account of the reserve, that gets from the forest reserve the magnificent sum of $4,006, to be divided for schools and roads. There is pressure on the local forest officer all the time to make some improvements, and to secure the money for improvements he must make more sales. It makes no difference whether the Government sale of stumpage is a few cents higher or lower than the prevailing price. As a matter of fact, the price depends on the distance from transportation where the sale is made.

I believe in Oregon this past summer the forest reserve sales of timber have been higher than the commercial sales. I think that in part of the Olympic Peninsula they have been considerably lower. Congress some day must face the problem of who shall make the improvements in the Federal domain. We talk here about appropriating $25,000,000 for good roads, to be paid for by licking stamp taxes, and we let the great public domain, amounting to one-half of all of the territory of the 11 Western States, go begging, go hang. We pass these little appropriations for $10,000, for $15,000, or, maybe, $25,000 for forest upkeep, fire protection, rangers, and trails, and let those great reserves lie as huge black clouds on the prosperity and development of the Western States. If the United States is going to keep locked up these great reserves, keep them out of population and cultivation, and sell the timber piecemeal, at any price it pleases, then it is up to the United States not to put 65 per cent of that return into the Federal Treasury, but to let it go where it originated, where it belongs, and where it is sorely needed.

The Clerk read as follows:

Boise National Forest, Idaho, $5,247.

Mr. JOHNSON of Washington. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word. A great deal of this problem as to what should be handed to these one hundred and sixty-odd forest reserves and the income derived therefrom lies, as the debate has here shown, around the selling price of lumber. I desire to refer to the figures that were presented to the Federal Trade Commission during its hearings last summer in regard to the lumber industry, as compiled by that commission. These hearings show that the average selling price per thousand in 1910 was $14.30; in 1911, $12.35; in 1912, $13.21; in 1913, $13.64; in 1914, $11.18; and the six months of 1915, $10.90. That has been about the base price for rough lumber—$11 per thousand feet—although a year ago it went away below that. Now, then, based on the figures of the Federal Trade Commission for the total manufacturing and logging cost amounts to $10.19 a thousand on a commodity that is sold for $10.90 or $11. No charge has been figured for taxation. That will answer the inquiry of the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. BOOHER] a short time ago as to the cost of manufacturing the lumber and the price at which it was selling at the mills in the Far West.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word. What has become of the Bonneville National Forest, Wyo.?

Mr. LEVER. I assume, although I do not know it offhand, that it has been combined with one of the other forests. Several forests have been combined.

Mr. MANN. What is it combined with?

Mr. LEVER. It has been consolidated with Bridger and Washakie Forests.

Mr. MANN. Can the gentleman give data as to the expense and receipts from any one of these forests?

Mr. LEVER. I regret to say that we have not the receipts. We have the disbursements but not the receipts by forest units. We do have the receipts by States, and I can give it to the gentleman by States.

Mr. MANN. Of course that is absolutely valueless.

Mr. LEVER. I appreciate that, and I am sorry that I have not the figures by forests. I was looking it up a moment ago, and this is the best that I can do.

Mr. BENNET. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last two words for the purpose of asking the chairman of the committee whether we have reached the stage in connection with these national forests where we are treating them as, one might say, a crop? For the last 8 or 10 years, in connection with this forestry matter, we have been reading that the proper way to treat forests is as a crop.

Mr. LEVER. If the gentleman means to make inquiry as to the method of controlling——

Mr. BENNET. No.

Mr. LEVER. I will say that all of the cutting of the forests, the reseeding, and the reforestation, and all that, are done under scientific methods; and to that extent will be treated as a crop.

Mr. BENNET. The only time I ever came through northern Germany I came through some miles of German forests where there were what you might call successive layers of forests, indicating, evidently, that the trees were all about the same age.

Mr. LEVER. The gentleman is inquiring whether or not we have reached a point where we cut certain trees and let certain trees grow—take off a yearly crop?

Mr. BENNET. Yes.

Mr. LEVER. I hardly think we have reached that point, although our ambition is to get that kind of management so that we will have an annual crop; but, of course, our forests are so large and the development has been so slow that we have not yet reached a state of efficiency such as they have in the German forests. That is the ambition.

Mr. BENNET. I understood the gentleman to say that he could give the aggregate amount of receipts from the sale of timber from forests?

Mr. LEVER. Yes; I did. I put that in the RECORD a moment ago, and I can give it to the gentleman again if he desires.

Mr. HAUGEN. For the gentleman's information I will state that the receipts from timber were $1,175,000; from grazing, $1,130,000; and from miscellaneous, $175,000; making a total of $2,944,000.

Mr. BENNET. And the expense in connection with that?

Mr. HAUGEN. Nearly $5,000,000. We have a deficit of $2,500,000.

Mr. BENNET. So that it is not on what you might call a commercial footing?

Mr. HAUGEN. Not quite. It is short two million and a half, and I want to state in addition to that that we were given to understand a number of years ago that this service would be made self-supporting.

We are now two and a half million dollars short. We increased the receipts two years ago by $40,000, and last year by $59,000, and it is estimated that the increase will be made self-supporting in six years. How those figures are arrived at, I am unable to comprehend. How can you increase the receipts to $2,500,000 in six years with an increase of forty or fifty thousand dollars a year? I know the Forester estimates a $250,000 increase, but that increase in six years is only a million and a half, and we have to have two and a half million dollars in order to play even.

Mr. LEVER. Mr. Chairman, in response to the suggestion of my friend from Iowa, the statement of the Forester is that there is a debit balance on the running current expenses of the Forest Service of about $1,650,000.

Mr. HAUGEN. Yes; but the gentleman must add to that the 10 per cent and the 25 per cent, and if he will add the two items he will have $2,500,000.

Mr. LEVER. Of course I am giving the statement of the Forester himself and taking his bookkeeping for it. Now, the statement also is that it is the belief we can increase the forest receipts at the rate of $250,000 a year, although for the past few years they have not been that——

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. BENNET. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that my time be extended five minutes.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from New York? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

Mr. HAUGEN. I am giving the figures of the Forester, but the gentleman from South Carolina has omitted the 10 per cent and the 25 per cent. The 10 per cent paid to the States for roads and trails is $244,319, and the 25 per cent for schools and roads is $610,797.75. The two items added to the $1,646,020 makes a total of $2,501,136.75.

Mr. LEVER. But the gentleman seems to be failing to credit the Forestry Service with the 10 per cent and the 25 per cent provisions.

Mr. HAUGEN. That is in the cash receipts.

Mr. LEVER. Well, it comes into the Treasury as receipts from Forestry Service and then goes out for certain specific purposes.

Mr. HAUGEN. If the gentleman will turn to page 745 he will find Mr. Graves, the Forester, stated that the cash receipts from timber were $1,175,133.95, for the grazing privileges $1,130,000, and for miscellaneous items $175,000. Then the value of the timber given away was $260,000, and for special privileges $79,000; all told, $2,944,000.

Mr. LEVER. That is correct.

Mr. McLAUGHLIN. Mr. Chairman, the gentleman may be particularly interested in knowing that there is considerable expense connected with the taking care of the forests of which he possibly loses sight. Now, in 1914 the expense of fighting fires was about $700,000, and there is a considerable expense attending the getting into shape to take care of the forests. There are new propositions involved. There are now 22,000 miles of trails and 2,500 miles of roads and 20,000 miles of telephone lines. The cost of taking care of fires will likely be large each year, although the facilities with which the service has supplied itself and the methods that are being perfected naturally will decrease the loss from fires and lessen the expense of the work of preventing fires. As an example, whereas the expenditure for taking care of fires in 1914 was $700,000, the expenditure in 1915 was only $207,000, and it is believed that with the building of roads, trails, telephone lines, and improvements of that kind the forests can be taken care of and fires can be prevented, or where they occur the loss of timber will be smaller and smaller as the years go by; but a large part of this expenditure had to be incurred in the first instance.

Mr. BENNET. Mr. Chairman, this particular matter is one which is of great interest, through analogy, to my State. I presume because New York is an Eastern State it is assumed that we have no timber, but in the Adirondack Mountains we have great quantities of timber, and there is one point where there is an unbroken forest stretching 150 miles in our Eastern State. It is also one of our great problems, because in the constitution of 1894 there was a provision put in that we can not even remove from the timber on State lands the dead and down timber, that we can not cut even a burnt tree, and that we must let the forest simply rot whether it is sound timber or unsound timber.

Mr. LEVER. I will say to the gentleman that is a very unsound policy, according to the teachings we have.

Mr. COX. Why did you put that provision in your constitution?

Mr. BENNET. Along in 1894 the science of forestry was not at all advanced anywhere in the United States, and the thing we did at that time was a very advanced thing. We provided wherever any of this mountain timber came under the control of the State through tax sales that it should not thereafter be sold.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has again expired.

Mr. BENNET. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to proceed for three minutes.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from New York asks unanimous consent to proceed for three minutes. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

Mr. BENNET. That nothing should be done with it. We had the rudiments of a right idea, that at any rate the forest should be preserved. Now, it is not difficult to amend the constitution of our States, and for the last 8 or 10 years I have been gaining all the information I can as a citizen of New York State to the end, possibly, that sometime I could help others utilize it in connection with our State. And it seems to me we might have reached the position in connection with the national forests where we have had, I assume, the finest kind of scientific assistance, and where what has been done in the national forests would be of some benefit to us in the State of New York, by way of example. We import trees——

Mr. LEVER. I am certain if the gentleman will take this matter up with the Forestry Service he will find he may get a great deal of very useful information, and I am satisfied the forest policy of this country is now being predicated upon the very best information available in the world and that we are following the best policy. Of course, we have not developed so far as Germany and many of the older countries have.

Mr. BENNET. And the mere fact that we are not making a profit does not discourage the gentleman from South Carolina at all?

Mr. LEVER. Absolutely not. If we change the policy of the Forestry Service we could make a profit, but the question is whether we should make a profit at the expense of efficiency, and we do not feel at this time that we ought to do it. We feel that we should make a profit and retain efficient service likewise.

Mr. BENNET. And in the meantime is the timber crop being wasted or conserved?

Mr. LEVER. The timber crop is being more and more conserved each year. Doubtless in an area covering 138,000,000 acres some is being wasted, but more and more is being conserved.

Mr. BENNET. And the gentleman has no vital suggestions as to change?

Mr. LEVER. I do not know, except to let us grow instead of rushing us.

Mr. GODWIN of North Carolina. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the RECORD by printing a statement showing the progress of farm-demonstration work in my State.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from North Carolina asks unanimous consent to extend his remarks in the RECORD by printing a statement showing the progress of farm-demonstration work in his State. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

The Clerk read as follows:

Bridger National Forest, Wyo., $2,779.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word. I understood the gentleman from South Carolina to say that the Bonneville National Forest has been consolidated with the Bridger National Forest and with the Washakie National Forest. Is that correct?

Mr. LEVER. The gentleman asked about the Bonneville National Forest. That has been combined with the Bridger and the Washakie National Forests.

Mr. MANN. For what reason are these forests consolidated?

Mr. LEVER. For better administrative purposes.

Mr. MANN. And to be more economical?

Mr. LEVER. More economical; yes, sir.

Mr. MANN. I have heard often of reforms, and I have no doubt this is a reform, and I have nearly always found them somewhat expensive.

Now, my distinguished friend from South Carolina—and there is no man in this House for whom I have a higher or more affectionate regard—says that the Bonneville National Forest, Wyo., has been consolidated with the Bridger National Forest and the Washakie National Forest, Wyo., for efficiency and economy. Last year we made an appropriation for the Bonneville National Forest of $6,755, for the Bridger National Forest of $1,988, and for the Washakie National Forest of $2,096, the total of the three forests being $10,839, barring a mistake, which might easily occur, but it would not be very much. That was $10,839 before they had this streak of economy.

Mr. LEVER. If the gentleman will yield for a statement on that.

Mr. MANN. Let me put this all together and then I will yield. Now, in carrying the appropriation for the Bridger National Forest of $2,779, and the Washakie National Forest of $11,725, it makes a total of $14,504, and in order to effect this economy we make an appropriation of nearly $4,000 more than we did last year. Now, I yield.

Mr. LEVER. I was just about to say to the gentleman from Illinois that the figures he is reading do not give the situation, for this reason: Mr. Graves, before the committee, made this general statement in reference to all these individual forest acts, namely, that the changes in the appropriation represented the changes of work within the forest. For instance, in one forest it might be developed that they had a timber sale, which they did not have the year before. It might require, therefore, a few more timber cruisers to be put in there, and they have estimated for that. On the other hand, it might be found that in one forest the activities of the forester were somewhat reduced. Timber cruisers would be sent from that forest to another forest. That was the general statement of the proposition.

Mr. MANN. There might have been one thousand and one things. Everybody in the forest might have dropped dead suddenly, or the timber might have been blown up by the roots. There may be special cases. I asked awhile ago if there was any information as to how much the receipts were from these forests, so that we might know there was special work going on in the forest, and that information has not been furnished to the committee. Now then, whatever else is true, this is true, namely, that last year for these three forests we appropriated $10,839. Then, having effected economy in administration through a consolidation, we now propose to appropriate $14,504.

Mr. LEVER. Now, let me read the statement of the Forester on the subject.

Mr. MANN. I have no doubt they will have a good excuse.

Mr. LEVER. They say this:

The increase of $9,629 for this Washakie Forest is due to the transfer of the area formerly comprised in the Bonneville Forest to the Washakie administration, and the increased timber-sale business results in this increased appropriation.

They say it is due to the increase in the timber-sale business.

Mr. MANN. We ought to have that information. They give as the reason for the increase the fact that the other forest is consolidated with that. Now, the gentleman will not misunderstand me. I have a great deal of confidence in the Forest Service. I think Mr. Graves is a gentleman of great ability and absolute integrity. I do not criticize the theory upon which they take care of the forests. I have always defended them, and do now, but I have often noticed—and I think it is proper to call attention to it once in a while—that when people make a change on the ground of economy they usually add to the expense in order to effect the economy.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Illinois has expired. Without objection, the pro forma amendment will be withdrawn and the Clerk will read.

The Clerk read as follows:

Columbia National Forest, Wash., $8,758.

Mr. JOHNSON of Washington. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Washington [Mr. JOHNSON] moves to strike out the last word.

Mr. JOHNSON of Washington. Here is one of the forest reserves, the Columbia Forest Reserve, in the State of Washington, located largely in Skamania County. The amount for expenditure is $8,758, a considerable portion of which will go, I have no doubt, toward the maintenance of a tree nursery and for the maintenance of a trail or sort of mountain road up the Wind River.

This particular forest reserve will not have any great timber sales—although it has as fine a body of standing timber on it as there is in the United States—until roads of some kind are built into it. The forester will not build many wagon roads at $8,758 a year, the amount that is carried in this bill.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman from Washington yield to the gentleman from Pennsylvania?

Mr. JOHNSON of Washington. Yes.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. Why will this timber not be available for commercial purposes? Is it too remote?

Mr. JOHNSON of Washington. Much of it will not be available because of lack of transportation facilities. The timber is on the mountain sides. Some is sold under contract now and then, solicitations being made to people to come and buy it.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. Are there no roads approaching this forest?

Mr. JOHNSON of Washington. Yes. The people of this sparsely settled county are bonding themselves to the extent of $200,000 to try to build roads to a portion of this forest reserve in order to get a chance to go to and from the post offices.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. The timber in this forest reserve is, as a rule, tall timber?

Mr. JOHNSON of Washington. Yes.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. And the trunks are extremely large in circumference?

Mr. JOHNSON of Washington. Yes. They rarely cut a tree there unless it is 2½ or 3 feet through.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. If the ripe timber is advertised for sale, how would the purchaser or contractor get at it?

Mr. JOHNSON of Washington. He would make a contract for enough timber to warrant him in taking in a donkey engine and logging outfit.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. On the mountainside?

Mr. JOHNSON of Washington. Yes; to bring it down to tidewater.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. Then he would not attempt to get the timber out unless he had water transportation to get it out on?

Mr. JOHNSON of Washington. Oh, this is just north of the Columbia River and not far from two or three transcontinental railroads.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. Is this timber Oregon pine or Douglas fir that the gentleman refers to?

Mr. JOHNSON of Washington. Douglas fir, principally.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. That is a tremendously large tree, as we look at it in the East.

Mr. JOHNSON of Washington. Yes.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. What railroad train would carry that kind of lumber?

Mr. JOHNSON of Washington. Oh, after it is cut up it can be conveyed on the railroads.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. Where will it be cut up?

Mr. JOHNSON of Washington. In the forest.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. Do you mean to say that the contractor would set up his sawmill in the forest and cut his lumber there?

Mr. JOHNSON of Washington. No; the sawmill is not in the forest. The logging camp is in the forest, and the logs are cut up in lengths.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. Then the timber is skidded down to the water to be transported?

Mr. JOHNSON of Washington. Yes. The cost of this logging, to get it to the mill, is a little more than $5 a thousand feet. The logs might be loaded upon a train and sold at $8 to $10 a thousand feet.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. As to the forest the gentleman is now discussing, is there any railroad within reach available for the purpose of conveying the timber, either in the rough or cut up?

Mr. JOHNSON of Washington. Not in the forest reserve.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Washington has expired.

Mr. JOHNSON of Washington. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to proceed for five minutes more.

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield further?

Mr. JOHNSON of Washington. Yes.

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. My friend from Pennsylvania [Mr. MOORE] seems to think that a railroad would not be able to properly move this timber. Is there not some way by which he can get a branch of his Intercoastal Canal up there and get it into the river and harbor bill? [Laughter.]

Mr. JOHNSON of Washington. I will say to the gentleman that between the rainfall out our way and water in the Columbia River we will furnish him with all the water he will ever need, and all the power he will ever need, and with all the lumber as well.

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. That is a great deal better than some of the projects in the river and harbor bill, because you have the water, and they did not have the water.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. JOHNSON of Washington. Yes.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. The gentleman knows the value of waterways as a means of getting this lumber out.

Mr. JOHNSON of Washington. I certainly do. I appreciate everything that will make the wheels go around. Big business makes little business.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. Oregon and Washington certainly use every stream that is available for the purpose of getting the timber to the export point.

Mr. JOHNSON of Washington. Yes; another county in my district is without a railroad in it yet and is dependent entirely on water transportation.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. Does not the gentleman think that if the distinguished gentleman from Iowa [Mr. GREEN], who has this little hitch in his mind about rivers and harbors, were to visit the coast once in a while and take himself away from his benighted interior he would learn a little more about the great country in which he lives?

Mr. JOHNSON of Washington. While the gentleman from Pennsylvania is impressing the gentleman from Iowa with the value of waterways, I am trying to impress all Members who are patient enough to stay here with the absolute necessity of looking deeply into the forest-reserve problem.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. Does the gentleman think that if the freight charges and the price of lumber keep on going up there will be a surplus in the profits of the farmers of Iowa sufficient to enable them to build homes in the near future?

Mr. JOHNSON of Washington. My experience is that when an Iowa farmer builds a barn about once in a lifetime, and pays about $20 a thousand for the rough lumber out of which to build it, he howls about it for the remainder of his natural life. [Laughter.]

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. Of course he does; and he fights the appropriation for the free seeds we give him because we appreciate the value of the products which he raises from those seeds. [Laughter.]

Mr. FESS. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. JOHNSON of Washington. Yes.

Mr. FESS. How many of these forests that the gentleman knows about have timber in them like the timber in the national forest reserve there at Mount Rainier?

Mr. JOHNSON of Washington. I presume the Mount Rainier stand of forest would rank among the very finest on this continent. We call it Mount Tacoma, however. All of the reserves in western Washington are like it. All the reserves in Washington, Oregon, and California have these great stands of timber.

Mr. MONDELL. Not all in California.

Mr. JOHNSON of Washington. All in northern California, I would say.

Mr. FESS. If we have large national-forest possessions equal to that at Mount Rainier, the country is much richer in this particular than the general membership of the House would believe, I think. Certainly I never had such an eye opener—having lived in the woods much of my life—as when I had an opportunity to go through a portion of that wonderful forest, and I wondered how many of the national forests that are spoken of here are of a similar character.

Mr. JOHNSON of Washington. The gentleman must have seen some in Arizona——

Mr. FESS. Not quite as good as that.

Mr. JOHNSON of Washington. With no trees on them at all. Now, if the gentleman from Ohio went up into the Rainier National Forest, no doubt he congratulated himself that that great wealth of timber belongs to the Government of the United States, including all the people in his district, and he never stopped to think that it is a great checkerboard arrangement, with every other section in large parts of it belonging to the holders of scrip who have laid up that wonderful property of timber where neither moth, rust, nor taxes can get at it. That is an investment for you. In the meantime the people owning timber outside of the forest reserve are taxed to the utmost limit, to the point where they have actually got to cut their timber inside of a few years or never receive the value for it that they pay in taxes alone. Further than all that, the Forest Service, under the public prod and the prod of Congress, is trying to increase its sales of timber, and selling its stumpage at $1.10 a thousand or less, which gives no adequate return for the upbuilding of the forest-reserve counties. That is the situation that I am trying to bring to the attention of Congress.

Mr. McLAUGHLIN and Mr. BENNET rose.

Mr. LEVER. I ask unanimous consent that all debate on this paragraph and amendments thereto close in five minutes. The gentleman from New York [Mr. BENNET] can get in on the next line.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from South Carolina asks unanimous consent that all debate on this paragraph and amendments thereto close in five minutes. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. McLAUGHLIN. Mr. Chairman, the gentleman from Washington [Mr. JOHNSON] is complaining of the amount of money that States and local communities are receiving out of the forest receipts, and complaining that the local communities there are not getting money enough to enable them to build roads. Several bills are now pending—some of them before the Committee on Agriculture—to provide that a larger portion of the receipts from the sales of timber and other forest products be paid to the States, or be used in cooperation with the States, for the construction of highways. Some of these bills are very liberal. If they are passed, it seems to me they will furnish a lot of money and will meet the demands made by the gentleman from Washington [Mr. JOHNSON].

I am sure the committee will give these bills very careful attention, and I trust the need the gentleman points out will be fully met. With that statement of what is going on, I hope the gentleman will not continue his complaint, taking five minutes after reading each item, each one being only a line and a half, and further, unnecessarily, it seems to me, delaying the consideration of this bill. We are going to take up those road measures and consider them at length; and that is the only way the question involved in them can properly be considered, for it can not now be considered here. Those measures will very likely be duly reported to the House. Then there will be opportunity for consideration of them and of all the matters upon which the gentleman is now speaking so frequently and at such length.

Mr. JOHNSON of Washington. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. McLAUGHLIN. Yes.

Mr. JOHNSON of Washington. Before any bill of that kind can be considered to any reasonable extent and brought in with the hope of passage there will have to be a public opinion developed that the forest reserves are not supposed in a reasonable time to bring a profit to the Federal Treasury.

Mr. McLAUGHLIN. The bills are before the committee, a subcommittee has been appointed to consider them, and when this bill is out of the way hearings will be held and the distinguished gentleman from Washington will have an opportunity to appear before the committee and make his argument. I am sure if he appeals as eloquently there as he has here and if he offers facts and figures, which he says are available, they will certainly have weight with the committee.

The CHAIRMAN. The pro forma amendment is withdrawn, and the Clerk will read.

The Clerk read as follows:

Colville National Forest, Wash., $6,883.

Mr. BENNET. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word for the purpose of having the attention of the gentleman from Washington. I say very frankly that I did not understand exactly what his complaint was in relation to the Columbia National Park.

Mr. JOHNSON of Washington. It is a large reserve in a large but lightly populated county. This forest reserve is a bar to population. The county desires to take its place in the march of progress and help to build a great trunk road and the necessary feeders. The forest reserve gives back to each county that has area in it 25 per cent of the sales, to be divided for schools, road fund, and so forth. This county last year got $4,000. For several years there has been given an additional sum of 10 per cent to be spent by the forest-reserve people as they please, and of that the county has had $1,051. Now, $1,051 for road building in the mountains will not go a great ways. I presume that it costs $10,000 to $15,000 a mile to build a good wagon road in that country. There is a trail built by the forest-reserve people for their own use to reach the nursery up there. That trail connects up with nothing. The commissioners of this county have sent in a petition to me to get enough money out of the 10 per cent fund or the 25 per cent fund to enable them to go on with the State road building proposition. How can I do it? The people out there fail to realize that all the money that the State of Washington got out of its 11 great reserves last year amounted to only $48,000, and when you spread it around among the counties which contain the 11,600,000 acres of land, you have not much per county.

Mr. BENNET. What is the area of the State?

Mr. JOHNSON of Washington. It is two-thirds more than there are of the forest reserves; that is, the forest reserves occupy about one-third of the State, and the State is 69,000 square miles. The forest-reserve part pays no taxes; pays no allegiance to the governor or the legislature of that State. Congress is where one-third of my State is governed as to matters of administration and revenue, and yet I am begrudged a few minutes to talk about the great inequalities that conservation has thrust upon that State when this bill comes up. Hidden somewhere in this bill is an item appropriating $5,000 for demonstrations in stump pulling. That is our little sop, $5,000 to conduct experiments in stump pulling. That makes us feel fine. [Laughter.] Some day we want to see the Government stump puller out where we have the stumps.

Mr. HAWLEY. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BENNET. I will.

Mr. HAWLEY. In answering the question, which the gentleman asked of the gentleman from Washington, with reference to Oregon, I will say that there are over 13,000,000 acres in the forest reserves. They have on them, it is estimated, 160,000,000,000 feet of timber. Estimating on a basis of 50 cents per thousand for assessment purposes, the value of that would be $80,000,000 for purposes of taxation. At a tax rate of one cent and a quarter on each dollar of assessed valuation, which is a very low rate and much lower than the real rate, it would bring in $1,000,000 in taxes per year. From the 13,000,000 acres, which is over one-fifth of the State of Oregon, with 160,000,000,000 feet of timber on it, the Forest Service received not quite $200,000 from it during the past fiscal year, or about a cent and a half an acre, and since there is returned only one-fourth of the receipts we received less than three-eighths of a cent per acre in lieu of taxation. Twenty-five per cent is returned to the State from the receipts from forests within the State, which is distributed to the forest-reserve counties, or about $50,000 in place of a million dollars taxation. In addition, 10 per cent of receipts are used by the Forest Service for roads and trails in the forests.

Mr. BENNET. I understood the gentleman correctly, did I not, that that $50,000 goes to the State?

Mr. HAWLEY. It goes to the State, and it is distributed among the counties in which the forest reserves are for roads and schools.

Mr. BENNET. Whereas the taxable value of that property, if it were not for the Federal ownership, would have an annual tax value of $1,000,000?

Mr. HAWLEY. At least that. That is basing it on 50 cents per thousand feet, and a cent and a quarter tax rate on each dollar of assessed valuation.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from New York has expired. The Clerk will read.

The Clerk read as follows:

Coronado National Forest, Ariz., $6,486.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word. I am very glad the gentleman from Oregon [Mr. HAWLEY] has taken a hand in this discussion, for he knows a great deal about forestry. In answer to the gentleman from New York [Mr. BENNET] he made some reference to the manner in which the funds raised from these forests were distributed. I want to ask him if my understanding is correct, that we dispose of the timber—that is to say, cut the ripe trees in the forest and sell them—and that the fund goes into the National Treasury?

Mr. HAWLEY. The money is paid into the Treasury of the United States and annually 25 per cent of it is distributed among the States from which it was received and that is distributed to the forest-reserve counties for roads and schools.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. The Federal Government gain or loss there is in this only, that the State, if in control of the forest, would derive some taxes from it.

Mr. HAWLEY. Yes; in the case of the State of Oregon, at the valuation I gave of 50 cents per thousand and at a very low tax rate of a cent and a quarter on the dollar of assessed valuation, we would get $1,000,000 a year taxes in place of $50,000 or less that we do get.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. Let us take this Coronado National Forest, which is in Arizona, for which the Government makes an appropriation of $6,486. If any of that timber is cut off and sold under contract the proceeds will be turned into the Federal Treasury and then 25 per cent of it would be returned to the State of Arizona. Is that correct?

Mr. HAWLEY. Twenty-five per cent of it would be returned to the State for distribution among the counties in which the forest reserves are.

Mr. MOORE of Pensylvania. Will the gentleman explain the reason for that?

Mr. HAWLEY. The reason is that it is a small return to the State in lieu of taxes lost.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. In that connection I wish to say as bearing upon the question of the East and the West, which I would like to have understand each other better, that in a State like Pennsylvania, which is an old State comparatively, the forest is maintained by the State. The older States contribute to the general expenses of the Government, and in this instance they contribute to the maintenance of a forest in Arizona, to the extent that the State of Arizona will get 25 per cent of the proceeds of Federal timber sold.

Mr. HAWLEY. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. Yes.

Mr. HAWLEY. The State of Pennsylvania has the advantage for taxation purposes of all of its superficial area. Taking just the opposite statement, if the forest reserves in every State that are now held in every State were the properties of the State, or could become the property of the citizens of the State, then there would be no call upon the State of Pennsylvania or anyone else to contribute any money for the maintenance of those forests. They would be maintained without expense to the public, and to the great profit of the citizens of the States in which they are located.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. We are using our forests, of course, to the very best advantage.

Mr. FESS. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. Yes.

Mr. FESS. The difference, too, between Pennsylvania and the West, especially these timber tracts, is that Pennsylvania has reclaimed about a million acres that are to be reforested. There is not much timber on them that can be used now.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Pennsylvania has expired.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent for two minutes in order to answer the question raised by the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. FESS].

Mr. LEVER. Mr. Chairman, I was going to make a request that gentlemen let us finish these individual forests. We are discussing theoretical questions here and can do it indefinitely. The chairman of the committee is absolutely helpless to close debate.

Mr. HAUGEN. Mr. Chairman, at this point if I can secure a couple of minutes I would like to make this statement.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Iowa? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

Mr. HAUGEN. Mr. Chairman, the situation is this: The Government turns over 160,000,000 acres of land, gives the Forester authority to sell and make the best bargain he can. In addition to that it puts up $1,600,000 in cash besides the use of the land, grazing privileges, and timber on the land, and in addition to that it turns over to the States some $800,000, and the Government is out some two million and a half dollars. Now, it seems to me that Uncle Sam has been exceedingly liberal with the people of the Western States or in the forests. I would like to ask the gentleman to point out a single enterprise that gives up 35 per cent of its gross receipts for taxes. Here, Uncle Sam out of every dollar collected turns over 35 cents.

Mr. HAWLEY. Did you never know of an enterprise being taxed upon its gross receipts?

Mr. HAUGEN. Railroads have been taxed on their gross receipts, and there are a number of things.

Mr. HAWLEY. And upon property value, also.

Mr. HAUGEN. And many would be glad to pay taxes on their gross receipts.

Mr. HAWLEY. And taxed on the property value also.

Mr. HAUGEN. Certainly; some of them are.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. HAUGEN. I will.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. Following the line of thought suggested by the gentleman from Iowa, I would say that Pennsylvania—and I am not using this as an argument against any western State at all, but in the line of the gentleman's suggestion—Pennsylvania appropriates as much as $300,000 a year to the increase of its forest reserve, and it has now more than a million acres in that reserve. Whatever the proceeds from the sale of timber, of course, inures to the State; it is turned over to the school fund for the education of the children of the Commonwealth. I mention this merely because the gentleman has raised a question which has been discussed by some of us, and I thought it fair to mention it.

Mr. HAUGEN. My State, in order to encourage the planting of trees and the growing of trees, has allowed $100 for a number of years. We have taken money from the treasury to encourage it; but these reserves were turned over and the land was turned over to grazing privilege and the forest reserve; not only that, but $1,600,000 in addition. Now, I have no quarrel with the Forester. I believe he is a most excellent and capable gentleman. I have no quarrel with Mr. Pinchot, his predecessor; but I confess we were told a number of years ago that if we would turn over the forests, in a short time they would be made at least self-sustaining.

Mr. LEVER. That was stated by Mr. Pinchot.

Mr. HAUGEN. Yes. Of the present Forester I have no criticism to offer, but I confess I am disappointed in the results. We were told this great department, or this great division of the department, would be made self-sustaining, and after all these years, after we have advertised and endeavored to get people to buy this lumber, to try to make the best bargains possible, here we are appropriating two and a half million dollars every year out of the Public Treasury.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. BENNET. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last three words.

Mr. LEVER. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that all debate on this paragraph and amendments thereto close in five minutes, and in the meantime——

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from South Carolina asks unanimous consent that all debate on this paragraph and all amendments thereto close in five minutes. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

Mr. BENNET. Mr. Chairman, if I can have the attention of the chairman of the committee, I do not think he really appreciates the interest that there is in this subject in the distances from these western countries.

The 15-cent magazines still circulate in the city of New York. And for years when the gentleman was a member of the Committee on Agriculture, although it was under a Republican House, those of us who used to vote with that committee and incidentally vote with the gentleman from South Carolina [Mr. LEVER], whose views were the same as the views of the then chairman, as I now recall them, used to subject ourselves to a good deal of political danger in doing so. And when you subject yourself to more or less political danger in order to stand by a committee of the House you do get more or less of interest in the subject. And I want to say to the gentleman, in addition to that, that this is really one of our great national problems. And in connection with that I wish to say that as this House progresses one of the great benefits is the educational value that comes from discussion just as we are having it. Ten years ago the gentleman from Wyoming [Mr. MONDELL] and the gentleman from Washington, Mr. Cushman, and other gentlemen from the Western States prophesied—and I want to say this particularly in justice to the memory of our friend Cushman—a condition would come around, just as has come around, according to the statements now of the gentleman from Washington and the gentleman from Oregon. I am a conservationist. I am a friend of Mr. Graves, the Forester, and I am a friend of Mr. Pinchot, although I am frank to say that that statement will not add to my popularity in the House. But I like him. And therefore, it seems to me, the gentleman from South Carolina [Mr. LEVER] ought to allow a reasonable latitude for discussion. I will say another thing to him——

Mr. LEVER. Let me call my friend's attention to this fact, that the "gentleman from South Carolina" has been exceedingly liberal on this bill. We have been running on the forestry item since half past 12 o'clock. It is now 5 o'clock—three hours and a half or more. We have debated the wherefores and the whereases of forestry from Germany to this Coronado National Forest, in Arizona. And I want to suggest to the gentleman another thing, that during all that time and under all this discussion there have been only two amendments proposed to any of these paragraphs, both of which were subject to a point of order, and not in order under the rules of the House on this bill. There has not been a suggestion from any of the complainants in this case either to add to or substract from a single, solitary item in this bill on this subject, even to the dotting of an "i" or the crossing of a "t." So I think the gentleman, who is an exceedingly practical man, and lovable with it all, will agree with me, who is practical if not lovable——

Mr. BENNET. Both.

Mr. LEVER (continuing). That this discussion is purely theoretical, and has been so all day; and that if it continues in the strain in which it has gone, it will continue to-morrow and next day, and on indefinitely. Here we have 155 different forest items and 8 district items, making a total of 163 one-line paragraphs in this bill. If the gentlemen want to kill time, I know they can do it under the rules of the House, but I do not believe that the country wants them to do it, and I do not believe that the gentlemen on that side want them to do it. I believe we want to leave here at a reasonable time this year, and I believe we can do it. Certainly I hope, at least, we can go on with this bill this afternoon until we can reach something where we can begin talking about things that really have some value.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from New York has expired.

Mr. LEVER. I trust, Mr. Chairman, that we may read a while now.

The CHAIRMAN. Without objection, the pro forma amendment will be withdrawn, and the Clerk will read.

The Clerk read as follows:

Crater National Forest, Oreg. and Cal., $14,893.

Mr. BENNET. Mr. Chairman, the gentleman from South Carolina took all of my last five minutes and prevented me from saying that the great affection the House has for him is the reason that we are progressing so rapidly under this forest proposition. And I say that knowing that his recollection is as good as mine, and that he and I can recall six or seven years ago when we used to strike these forest items we simply prepared to take two or three days of time on them. Now, of course, there will be nothing like that, and there is no disposition to unduly delay things. But I just desire to reiterate that in the East, as well as in the West, there is still a tremendous interest in this problem. I used to vote with the committee, although, as I say, I was a great friend of Gifford Pinchot.

Mr. HARRISON. Mr. Chairman——

The CHAIRMAN. Will the gentleman from New York yield to the gentleman from Mississippi?

Mr. BENNET. Certainly.

Mr. HARRISON. I make the point of order that the gentleman's speech is dilatory, and I will ask the gentleman from New York if that is not true?

Mr. BENNET. It is not.

Mr. HARRISON. Is not the gentleman just trying to delay the proceedings?

Mr. BENNET. The gentleman is not.

Mr. HARRISON. And the gentleman is really in good faith in presenting this?

Mr. BENNET. If the gentleman talked more than 15 minutes, he would be dilatory.

Mr. HARRISON. It seems to me the gentleman has talked longer than that.

Mr. BENNET. It may seem that way, but the clock will not bear it out. I will say to the gentleman from Mississippi, who was not here when I said it before, that the timber crop—if I can have the attention of the gentleman from Mississippi——

Mr. HARRISON. I am listening.

Mr. BENNET. That the timber crop of the State of New York is one of the most important crops in our State. This whole subject is full of interest to us in the State of New York.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman from New York yield?

Mr. BENNET. I will yield to the gentleman for a short question.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. Does the gentleman think it fair that a Representative of the State of New York, which is taking care of its own forests, should not have the right to discuss the expenditure of public money in nearly every other State in the Union for the preservation of forests located there? And does the gentleman think that a gag should be placed upon him in attempting to carry on such a discussion?

Mr. BENNET. I am not being gagged.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. Well, I noticed the gentleman from Mississippi [Mr. HARRISON], who is a member of the Committee on Rules, sat down ominously when the gentleman from South Carolina interrupted the gentleman from New York.

Mr. BENNET. The gentleman from Mississippi always rises in order. [Laughter.]

Mr. LEVER. The gentleman from Mississippi will not attempt to deny to any gentleman a privilege that belongs to him.

Mr. HARRISON. I remember hearing the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MANN], the minority leader on that side, a little while ago say that we ought to speed up on this matter and that we ought to confine our remarks to this bill. It seems that the gentlemen on that side are not following their leader.

Mr. BENNET. Well, Mr. Chairman, we are not taking instructions on this side. [Laughter.] We are still representing constituencies, and we are responsible to our individual constituencies and to our individual consciences.

As I was about to say, this is the first time in 10 years that I really appreciated that there was merit in the contention of the gentlemen from the far Western States. I know what it is to represent a constituency, and I know what a favorable suggestion is put upon discussions made in behalf of one's constituencies. I do not do these gentlemen any injustice when I state that I used to think their views were somewhat colored by the interests of their constituencies; but I will give an instance that happened in my experience in a recent Congress that caused me to change my opinion, when the gentleman from Louisiana [Mr. WATKINS], a valuable Member of this House, secured my assistance to have a bill put through that Congress to quiet title to a forest in Louisiana on the Red River, which covered a square league. At that time he brought to my attention something that I have never forgotten, and that was that the taking out of the taxable value of that league of land was, to a certain extent, disturbing to their county arrangements. We got the bill through, and the gentleman from Louisiana was very grateful; and a year or two afterwards he said to me that the restoration of that tract of taxable area had really assisted in the development of that section.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from New York has expired. The pro forma amendment will be withdrawn, and the Clerk will read.

The Clerk read as follows:

Deschutes National Forest, Oreg., $8,259.

Mr. JOHNSON of Washington. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Washington moves to strike out the last word.

Mr. JOHNSON of Washington. Mr. Chairman, in commenting on these forest-reserve appropriation items I must be careful to pick out forest reserves that have real forests on them. This one, the Deschutes National Forest, in Oregon, has. Take any of these forests that has timber on it and you will find somewhere in the vicinity advertisements of the Forestry Bureau, reading exactly in these words:

You can get good stumpage at the right price within the national forests, and you pay for it when you cut it.
No need to make a big investment in timber and carry heavy overhead charges during the life of your operation.

That is a Forestry Bureau advertisement. That is competition for the lumber industry, and adds to the troubles of that industry. I am not one of those who charge all the evils that the great lumber industry in the Northwest has endured recently to the Underwood Tariff Act. But I take it that the striking off of the small tariff that we had prior to the enactment of the Underwood bill was pretty near the finishing touch to an industry that has been more viciously assaulted, and with less cause, by the magazines, the heads of great Government bureaus, and muck-raking individuals than any other industry.

Now, go right over into British Columbia and you find that Government advertising the same kind of timber. Their advertisement reads this way:

British Columbia has a wood for every use. British Columbia forest products are unequalled. It will pay you to buy home products. Write to the Forest Branch, Victoria, British Columbia, for official pamphlets or other information concerning structural timber, interior finish, flooring, doors, shingles, siding, car stock, poles, etc. Buy lumber grown and manufactured in Canada.

There you have it. The Government of British Columbia works hand in hand with its timber industry, and helps to sell the product of that industry, and is well pleased if the sales go into the United States, as they now do, while our own Government invites people with money to come out West to buy our timber from the national forests, to pay no interest and no taxes, and compete with the men who have pioneered there and tried to make our State a prosperous Commonwealth. Should not the United States be fair in the actual trial of Government ownership versus private ownership? In my opinion it will be no time at all until we hear a bill read on this floor to provide for the building of a railroad on one of these forest reserves, so that the Government can sell the timber that is now a white elephant on the hands of the forest management.

Mr. Chairman, I have no criticism of the Chief Forester. I think he is laboring with the greatest problem that was ever left on anyone's hands. I would offer amendments to every one of these paragraphs to give back 65 per cent, the whole amount that goes into the National Treasury from these sales, to be used for local improvements in the country from which the money comes if I did not know such amendments would be ruled out under points of order. The great Bureau of Forestry has this thing in its own hands. The best it can do is to make provision for the future. About all the resources of many of these western counties lie in the forest reserves. The timber is tied up; the water power and minerals are being tied up; the lands are not permitted to be opened for settlement and agricultural development. The people who went into these counties in good faith years ago are there yet, taxing themselves to the breaking point, and waiting for the conservationists to keep their promises of prosperity and plenty. Congress wants to help, no doubt, but it has not got time. And when we get some more Government-owned projects on our hands—steamships, telegraph, telephone, 200-pound parcels express, railroads, and goodness knows what all—we will have still less time.

The CHAIRMAN. Without objection, the pro forma amendment will be withdrawn, and the Clerk will read.

The Clerk read as follows:

Durango National Forest, Colo., $6,873.

Mr. MONDELL. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word. Time was when I discussed forestry items at length, but during the last few years I have taken very little of the time of the House in the discussion of this subject. The principal reason for that changed attitude on my part is the fact that there has been a great improvement in the administration of the Forest Service in the past few years, also we have become accustomed to the reserves. This problem of the forest reserves is a great problem. It was not undertaken at the request of the people of the Western States. It was undertaken largely at the suggestion of men who believed that the remaining vast timber resources of the country would be better cared for and conserved if placed under the Federal Government. Personally, I never criticized the establishment of a forest reserve that contained timber. Formerly we were called upon to criticize the establishment of forest reserves that contained scarcely enough timber to put a fence around them. Finally the policy changed, and the Government ceased to include vast untimbered areas in the reserves.

So far as the mountain States are concerned, we have now reached a time and condition when I think the people, in the main, believe that the reasonable establishment of reserves, that is, the establishment of reserves within reasonable boundaries, properly and wisely administered, are a good thing for that country and for the country as a whole. Of course we have the same problem that the people of the Pacific West have, in that vast areas of our territory within the reserves are withheld from private ownership, and hence withheld from taxation. The problem is not as acute with us as it is with the coast States, partly because the percentage of our area within reserves is not so great as theirs, partly because the lands within reserves in the intermountain country are not so valuable as the lands within the reserves on the Pacific coast. Out on the Pacific coast it is a very great hardship to have these vast and valuable areas withheld from private ownership, and hence from taxation.

The very small sum that the States now receive, 25 per cent of the income from the reserves, is a mere bagatelle, a mere drop in the bucket, a negligible quantity, as the gentleman from Oregon [Mr. HAWLEY] has so clearly stated, compared with the amount that those areas would yield in taxes were they in private ownership and assessed and taxed even at a low rate. I do not see how we are going to cure that situation in the immediate future. It seems to me those folks will have to grin and bear it for a time, because the country has entered upon this policy and will adhere to it, in my opinion. Eventually the reserves will bring large returns, and, in my opinion, the time will come when under public ownership these areas in the Pacific West will yield sufficient income from the 25 per cent, or such other proper percentage of the income as may be fixed, to pay the States as well as they would be if the lands were in private ownership and under taxation.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. MONDELL. Mr. Chairman, I ask for five minutes more.

Mr. LEVER. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that all debate on this paragraph and amendments thereto close in five minutes.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from South Carolina?

There was no objection.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Wyoming asks that his time be extended five minutes. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. MONDELL. Mr. Chairman, under these conditions it is hardly fair for my friend from Pennsylvania to suggest that his great State and other Eastern States are contributing to these Western States for support of forest reserves as though it was something the Western States had asked for, and as though the condition that had been established was established at their suggestion, or as though as a matter of fact they were receiving anything like the returns from these areas which they are entitled to receive. I believe that it is good public policy to retain these great western timber areas in forest reserves. I believe that we can improve the management of these reserves in the future as it has been improved in the past. I believe that eventually the people of these States will feel that the establishment of the reserves over forested areas was a good thing. In the meantime the condition is exceedingly trying, and especially trying when the management is not wise, just, and reasonable.

Some gentlemen have thought it strange that one Member would rise and protest against the forestry officials charging too much for stumpage on a reserve, and then the complaint from another district would be that they were not charging enough. The probability is that both gentlemen were right, and had reason for the complaint they made. Because if in a region where the forest reserve is the only timber resource that the people have, the stumpage price should be low in order that the people may have lumber at a reasonable price.

If on the other hand the forest reserve is surrounded by great private holdings and there are many areas from which timber can be obtained and lumber secured, the forestry stumpage price should not be so low as to practically confiscate the values of the private owner. It follows that at one and the same time, and possibly in the same reserve, or in the same State, there may be a perfectly legitimate complaint that in one place the price of stumpage is too high and at another place it is too low. It is a matter of management. I think they do much better in my part of the country than they were doing years ago, and I am hopeful of improvement in the service in the future.

The official at the head of the service is a good man and has good men around him. I do not agree with them in all things by any means, but I do believe they are doing their best, and they are certainly improving conditions of administration. It is a trying situation for the Pacific Coast States. It is a trying situation that is created by the withholding of vast areas from taxation; it is particularly trying in those States where large areas of valuable land and timber are so held, and they are not only entitled to liberal treatment in expenditures for improvements but to the utmost consideration in administration.

The Clerk read as follows:

Fishlake National Forest, Utah, $4,060.

Mr. BENNET. Mr. Chairman, if I can have the attention of the chairman of the committee, there was a statement made this afternoon that seems to me can not possibly be correct, and I would like to have the chairman of the committee say whether it is or not. Either the gentleman from Washington [Mr. JOHNSON] or the gentleman from Oregon [Mr. HAWLEY] gave me the impression that over the superficial area of every national forest neither the State nor any municipality had any jurisdiction whatever. That is to say, if a man committed a crime in some portion of the State of Washington and fled into a national forest, he could only be taken out of that forest by the action of some Federal authority. I do not know whether he intended to make that statement as broadly as I have made it, but I would like to ask the chairman whether there is a lack of all jurisdiction over the forest reserves within a State.

Mr. LEVER. I will say to the gentleman from New York that my opinion is that the forest reserve has complete jurisdiction as to the control and administration of the reserve, but, of course, the Federal Government would not have jurisdiction in a case such as the gentleman states. I happen to know that we can not set up a game preserve in one of these forests without special legislation.

Mr. HAWLEY. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BENNET. I will.

Mr. HAWLEY. The State's process runs through all the national-forest lands. The municipal jurisdiction extends over them. The game and fish laws extend over them. The fish in the streams and the game belong to the State and are taken only under State license.

Mr. JOHNSON of Washington. How is it about the establishment of national parks and monuments?

Mr. HAWLEY. The State process runs over them.

Mr. JOHNSON of Washington. I doubt very much if it does.

Mr. BENNET. Then the gentleman from Washington [Mr. JOHNSON] was a little too broad in his statement that neither the governor nor any of the executive officials had any power in the national forests?

Mr. LEVER. That is my opinion; yes.

Mr. BENNET. I am very glad to get it, because it seemed to me entirely out of accordance with our institutions and our processes of the enforcement of law that a third of a State should be a refuge for criminals.

Mr. HAWLEY. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. LEVER. I do not think the gentleman's statement went that far.

Mr. BENNET. He said that neither the governor nor any of the officials of the State had any power over the forests.

Mr. JOHNSON of Washington. What I meant to say was that the State of Washington is two-thirds State and one-third Province, and you can not get away from it.

Mr. BENNET. That is another one of those general statements that I shall have to get particulars about.

Mr. HAWLEY. The National Forest Service exercises jurisdiction over the forests in this way: They have charge of the timber. They protect it from fire. No one can cut any timber or have any use of it without their consent or agreement. If anyone goes into the forest for camping purposes—they have the privilege of going through the forest—they must observe the regulations made by the Forest Service to protect the timber from destruction by fire or wanton waste.

Mr. BENNET. But the State and its subordinate municipalities retain the ordinary control over the passer-by or even the sojourner.

Mr. HAWLEY. Yes. The gentleman understands what I mean when I say that the process of the State runs all through it.

Mr. BENNET. Absolutely.

The CHAIRMAN. Without objection, the pro forma amendment will be withdrawn and the Clerk will read.

The Clerk read as follows:

Hayden National Forest, Wyo. and Colo, $7,358.

Mr. MONDELL. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word. I would like to ask the gentleman from South Carolina how long he expects to continue? I think this would be a very good place to stop.

Mr. LEVER. Mr. Chairman, we have about five pages remaining of the various units, and they can be read easily in 10 minutes.

Mr. MONDELL. Oh, we can hardly do that.

Mr. LEVER. And the general discussion which we have had this afternoon has not applied to these particular items. It can be readily taken up to-morrow morning on some proposition that really is involved in the discussion, and I was hoping that we might finish these individual items and then I will be glad to rise.

Mr. MONDELL. We could not agree to that, because there are a number of items with regard to which gentlemen desire to express some views. I think this is a good place to stop.

Mr. LEVER. If the gentleman had been following the proceedings very closely this afternoon he would agree with me that we have not been discussing these items very closely. I hope the gentleman will let us run along and finish this.

Mr. MONDELL. I think it is about time to adjourn, and I shall have to make the point of no quorum if the committee does not rise soon.

Mr. LEVER. I hope the gentleman will not press that point. I would hate very much to have to bring Members here. We have made no progress here to-day.

Mr. MONDELL. I think the gentleman has made excellent progress.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will read.

The Clerk read as follows:

Idaho National Forest, Idaho, $7,450.

Mr. MONDELL. Mr. Chairman, I do not want to make the point of no quorum, I will say to my friend, but I shall have to make it if we continue without a quorum.

Mr. LEVER. I hope the gentleman will not make it.

Mr. MONDELL. I feel that the committee has done its duty for to-day.

Mr. FOSTER. It seems to me very strange that after spending all the afternoon on a very few items the gentleman should now want to make the point of order, and I am in favor of letting him make it if nothing else will stop him.

Mr. LEVER. I hope the gentleman will let the Clerk read.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman from Wyoming [Mr. MONDELL] yield to me for a moment?

Mr. MONDELL. Yes.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. I want to ask the gentleman from South Carolina, with the consent of the gentleman from Wyoming, as to the extent sheep are raised in the forest reserves?

Mr. LEVER. The number of sheep? Oh, there are quite a number of sheep in the forest reserves, which I can give the gentleman in a moment; but these are matters that come more properly under a different item in the bill, when I will be glad to discuss it.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. Can the gentleman give the approximate number in the forests?

Mr. LEVER. There are 3,600,000 head of sheep and goats in the national forests.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. Does the Government have any interest in them?

Mr. LEVER. Oh, none whatever. We have—I think I know what the gentleman desires—a herd of sheep in the State of Wyoming which we imported from Australia, Corriedale sheep, which we are using for experimental purposes.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. I want to get some information before we pass to other paragraphs. Under what terms are these 3,600,000 sheep, to which the gentleman referred, permitted to graze in the forest reserves?

Mr. LEVER. At a charge of 13½ cents each per annum.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. They are owned by private parties?

Mr. LEVER. Undoubtedly.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. Who are granted permission——

Mr. LEVER. Under a permit issued by the Forestry Service to graze at a stipulated price of 13½ cents a head per annum.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. Most of them graze in what States?

Mr. LEVER. I do not know that I could tell the gentleman; that great western country is so great——

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. Wyoming, Montana——

Mr. LEVER. Yes; Idaho, Arkansas.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. I will not press the gentleman further this afternoon. I am very much obliged to him.

The Clerk read as follows:

Minam National Forest, Oreg., $6,476.

Mr. JOHNSON of Washington. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word. I desire to incorporate, in connection with my remarks to-day, a statement in regard to the actual financial returns of the Olympic National Forest, which are as follows: The Forester states that the receipts from the Olympic Reserve, which are negligible save for timber sales, have been as follows, and I am running back five years: Nineteen hundred and twelve, $948.88; 1913, $2,064.98; 1914, $11,673.17; and 1915, $17,978.98. Those are the returns from the heaviest timbered reserve of all, and extending over four counties, each of which has about one-half its area, broadly speaking, in the forest reserve. These counties got back last year from this $17,948 sale about $4,000 out of a total return of $48,000, which went to the entire State of Washington, with its twenty-odd forest-reserve counties. These people have been told every single year since this policy went into effect that soon they would have something grand in lieu of taxes.

The same statement the distinguished gentleman from Wyoming [Mr. MONDELL] has made here on the floor to-day has been made to them year after year, and now we hear it again. In this one reserve is an area of 1,600,000 acres, and that is some land when you consider it, mostly all good timber. The chief forester says that, though the last annual sales amounted to $17,900, he expects the sales will increase to from $35,000 to $40,000 by 1917, and then remain at such figures indefinitely. That is the best we may hope from the sale of timber in a district where every tree that is cut down is 2 feet or more through, and where the trees are so thick that the sun rarely reaches the ground. What hope has the present generation of these four great counties? They do not want their lands taken out of the forest reserves, except the agricultural bottoms, but they do want some returns from the sale of their resources to be used for road building. They will have it, and Congress will be importuned until they get it.

The Clerk read as follows:

Montezuma National Forest, Colo., $4,670.

Mr. MONDELL. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word. I think we ought to have a quorum here to discuss this bill. I make the point that there is no quorum present.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman makes the point that there is no quorum present.

Mr. LEVER. Mr. Chairman, I am sorry to have to postpone further consideration of this important bill to-day, but I move that the committee do now rise.

Mr. MONDELL. Mr. Speaker, I withdraw the point of no quorum.

The motion that the committee do now rise was agreed to.

Accordingly the committee rose; and the Speaker having resumed the chair, Mr. HAMLIN, Chairman of the Committee of the whole House on the state of the Union, reported that that committee had had under consideration the bill H. R. 12717, the Agricultural appropriation bill, and had come to no resolution thereon.

SENATE BILL AND RESOLUTIONS REFERRED.

Under clause 2 of Rule XXIV, Senate bill and resolutions of the following titles were taken from the Speaker's table and referred to their appropriate committees, as indicated below:

S. 5310. An act to authorize the county commissioners of Walla Walla and Franklin Counties, Wash., to construct a bridge across the Snake River between Pasco and Burbank; to the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce;

S. J. Res. 119. Joint resolution to permit the issuance of medical and other supplies to the American National Red Cross for a temporary period; to the Committee on Military Affairs;

S. J. Res. 98. Joint resolution to print as a public document the final report and testimony submitted to Congress by the United States Commission on Industrial Relations; to the Committee on Printing; and

S. Con. Res. 19. Concurrent resolution directing the Attorney General to investigate whether the phenomenal increase in the price of gasoline is a result of any violation of the laws of the United States; to the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce.

WITHDRAWAL OF PAPERS.

Mr. KALANIANAOLE, by unanimous consent, was granted leave to withdraw from the files of the House, without leaving copies, the papers in the case of House bill 7958, first session, Sixty-third Congress, no adverse report having been made thereon.

LEAVE OF ABSENCE.

By unanimous consent leave of absence was granted as follows:

To Mr. DECKER, indefinitely, on account of serious illness of his father.

To Mr. MOONEY, indefinitely, on account of death in family.

To Mr. TAGUE, indefinitely, on account of illness in his family.

To Mr. SIEGEL, for 10 days, on account of important business.

HOUR OF MEETING TO-MORROW.

Mr. LEVER. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that when the House adjourns to-day it adjourn to meet at 11 o'clock a. m. tomorrow.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from South Carolina asks unanimous consent that when the House adjourns to-day it adjourn to meet at 11 o'clock a. m. to-morrow.

Mr. MONDELL. Reserving the right to object, does not the gentleman think we are getting along with this bill very well and that we could very properly adjourn until 12 o'clock?

Mr. LEVER. The progress made to-day was not at all satisfactory, and we have been meeting from time to time on this bill at 11 o'clock anyhow.

Mr. HAWLEY. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. LEVER. I yield.

Mr. HAWLEY. Is it the intention to dispense with Calendar Wednesday to-morrow?

Mr. LEVER. That has already been done by unanimous consent.

Mr. MONDELL. So I understood.

Mr. LEVER. And we meet at 12 o'clock on Thursday for Calendar Wednesday.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

COMMUNICATION FROM THE PRESIDENT.

Mr. KITCHIN. Mr. Speaker, I send to the desk the resolution the adoption of which I move.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the resolution.

The Clerk read as follows:

House concurrent resolution 30.

Resolved by the House of Representatives (the Senate concurring), That the two Houses of Congress assemble in the Hall of the House of Representatives on Wednesday the 19th day of April, 1916, at 1 o'clock in the afternoon, for the purpose of receiving such communication as the President of the United States shall be pleased to make to them.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the consideration of the resolution?

Mr. MONDELL. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, is the gentleman anxious to consider this resolution this evening?

Mr. KITCHIN. It ought to be considered at once. The President has a very important message to deliver to the Congress in person to-morrow, and the Senate, I understand, is waiting for us to pass this resolution and send it right over.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

The question is on agreeing to the resolution.

The resolution was agreed to.

EXTENSION OF REMARKS.

Mr. McKELLAR. Mr. Speaker——

The SPEAKER. For what purpose does the gentleman from Tennessee rise?

Mr. McKELLAR. For the purpose of asking unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the RECORD by having printed a speech of W. J. Harris, a member of the Federal Trade Commission, on the subject of the powers and duties of that commission.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Tennessee asks unanimous consent to extend his remarks in the RECORD by printing a speech of Mr. W. J. Harris, a member of the Federal Trade Commission. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

Mr. JOHNSON of Washington. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the RECORD on the subject of forest reserves.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Washington asks unanimous consent to extend his remarks in the RECORD on the subject of the forest reserves. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. BENNET. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the RECORD in relation to the expatriation of citizens by including a communication and an opinion of Judge Hough, of New York City.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from New York asks unanimous consent to extend his remarks on the subject of the expatriation of American citizens. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

CHANGE OF REFERENCE.

Mr. CROSSER. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that the bill (H. R. 11329) to authorize the Secretary of Labor to cooperate with other departments of the Government in fostering, promoting, and developing the welfare of the wage earners of the United States, by creating new opportunities for permanent and profitable employment, and for other purposes, which was referred to the Committee on Public Lands, be referred to the Committee on Labor.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Ohio asks unanimous consent that the bill H. R. 11329, which was referred to the Committee on Public Lands, be referred to the Committee on Labor. And the Chair will state that this bill might be referred to any one of six or eight different committees with propriety. Is there objection?

Mr. MONDELL. Reserving the right to object, is this a private bill?

The SPEAKER. No; it is not a private bill. It is a bill that does all sorts of things.

Mr. MONDELL. May it properly go to the Committee on Labor?

The SPEAKER. Well, the Chair thinks it could; yes. We studied it pretty closely. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

ADJOURNMENT.

Mr. KITCHIN. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House do now adjourn.

The motion was agreed to; accordingly (at 5 o'clock and 40 minutes p. m.) the House, under its previous order, adjourned until to-morrow, Wednesday, April 19, 1916, at 11 o'clock a. m.

EXECUTIVE COMMUNICATIONS, ETC.

Under clause 2 of Rule XXIV, executive communications were taken from the Speaker's table and referred as follows:

SENATE.

WEDNESDAY, April 19, 1916.

The Chaplain, Rev. Forrest J. Prettyman, D. D., offered the following prayer:

Almighty God, we are the possessors of the experience and the achievements and faith of all the generations. Thou hast brought us into a rich and noble inheritance. We are not bound by the narrow ideals or traditions of any blood. Out of all people Thou hast gathered us together and given to us a great commission, that we may stand for the rights of humanity, that we may help the onward march of perfected humanity.

We pray Thy blessing upon us this day. Lay Thy hand upon Thy people. Grant to give to us the wisdom which cometh from on high, that we may wisely counsel and safely direct and order the steps of this national life, that we may make no fatal mistakes. May we give glory ever to God, for the good of the people whom we serve, and we pray for that larger circle of humanity to whose interests we have committed ourselves. We pray Thee to lead us to the accomplishment of the divine purpose in us. For Christ's sake. Amen.

The Journal of the proceedings of the legislative day of Monday, April 17, 1916, was read and approved.

INCREASE OF CADETS AT MILITARY ACADEMY.

The VICE PRESIDENT laid before the Senate the amendments of the House of Representatives to the bill (S. 4876) to provide for an increase in the number of cadets at the United States Military Academy.

Mr. CHAMBERLAIN. I move that the Senate disagree to the amendments of the House and request a conference with the House on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses thereon, the conferees on the part of the Senate to be appointed by the Chair.

The motion was agreed to; and the Vice President appointed Mr. CHAMBERLAIN, Mr. HITCHCOCK, and Mr. DU PONT conferees on the part of the Senate.

THE PATENT OFFICE.

The VICE PRESIDENT laid before the Senate the amendments of the House of Representatives to the bill (S. 683) prohibiting the use of the name of any Member of either House of Congress or of any officer of the Government by any person, firm, or corporation practicing before the Patent Office in advertising his business, which were, in line 4, to strike out the words "the Patent Office" and insert "any department or office of the Government," and to amend the title so as to read: "An act prohibiting the use of the name of any Member of either House of Congress or of any officer of the Government by any person, firm, or corporation practicing before any department or office of the Government."

Mr. POINDEXTER. I move that the Senate concur in the amendments of the House.

The motion was agreed to.

LANDING OF SIR FRANCIS DRAKE IN CALIFORNIA.

The VICE PRESIDENT laid before the Senate the amendments of the House of Representatives to the concurrent resolution (S. Con. Res. 20) authorizing the appointment of a representative of the United States Government to appear at the celebration of the landing of Sir Francis Drake on the coast of California.

Mr. PHELAN. I move that the Senate concur in the amendments of the House of Representatives with an amendment to the amendments to strike out the numeral "20" after "S. J. Res." and insert the numeral "121." It is a mere verbal correction.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Senator from California moves that the Senate concur in the House amendments with an amendment. The question is on the motion of the Senator from California.

The motion was agreed to.

UNITED STATES DISTRICT COURT OF PORTO RICO.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Chair lays before the Senate a communication from the Resident Commissioner from Porto Rico, which will be noted in the RECORD and referred to the Committee on Pacific Islands and Porto Rico.

The communication is as follows:

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES, UNITED STATES,
Washington, D. C., April 18, 1916.

Hon. THOMAS H. MARSHALL,
President of the Senate, Washington, D. C.

MY DEAR MR. MARSHALL: I received last night the following cablegram from Porto Rico:

"LUIS MUÑOZ RIVERA,
"255 House Office Building, Washington, D. C.:

"The house of delegates unanimously resolved to petition Congress to abolish the United States district court of Porto Rico, conferring the jurisdiction thereof on the Supreme Court of Porto Rico, on the ground that this precedent had been established in all the Territories, and, besides, that the Federal court always disregards the civil laws of the island in rendering its decisions and because of the necessity of economy in appropriations.

"HERMINIO DIAZ, Speaker."

The House of Delegates of Porto Rico is composed of 20 Unionists, 14 Republicans, and 1 member of the Labor Party. Thus, as the resolution was unanimous, it represents the opinion of all parties in the island.

I respectfully request that this resolution be inserted in the RECORD and referred to the Committee on Pacific Islands and Porto Rico for consideration.

Very sincerely, L. MUÑOZ RIVERA.

PETITIONS AND MEMORIALS.

Mr. WILLIAMS presented petitions of sundry citizens of Mississippi, praying for national prohibition, which were referred to the Committee on the Judiciary.

Mr. JONES. I present a petition of the Chamber of Commerce of Cordova, Alaska, addressed to the President and Congress of the United States, asking that in the construction of railroads in Alaska 50 miles of line be constructed to the Bering field, and giving other valuable information with reference to the necessities for such a railroad. I ask that the petition may be printed in the RECORD and referred to the Committee on Territories.

There being no objection, the petition was referred to the Committee on Territories and ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

A petition.

To the President and Congress of the United States:

Whereas by acts of Congress approved March 12, 1914, the President is authorized and directed to locate, construct, and operate not to exceed 1,000 miles of railroad in the Territory of Alaska, at a cost not to exceed $35,000,000; and

Whereas under this authority the President has caused to be located and has designated for construction a line from Seward to Fairbanks with a branch to the Matanuska coal field, a total of about 504 miles, leaving nearly 500 miles now to be located and designated for construction under the provisions of the law; and

Whereas the mileage already designated for construction will tap and make available the coal from the Matanuska and Nenana coal fields, but will not touch or open the Bering River coal field; and

Whereas the Behring field is the nearest to market of any of the coal fields in Alaska, its coal is most urgently needed and requires only 30 miles of new track to make it available, while 20 miles additional, or a total of only 50 miles will make the Katalla oil as well as the Bering coal available; and

Whereas the Bering coal is absolutely essential to the proper development of the great copper field adjacent to it, and is the only essential lacking for the development of a great copper-mining and smelting industry in Alaska:

Wherefore your petitioners, the Cordova Chamber of Commerce, representing the business interests of this district, respectfully pray that 50 miles of railroad be located and constructed by the Government so as to open up the Bering coal field and bring the coal to the harbor at Cordova and to the markets of the Copper River district.

A memorandum showing further reasons in favor of such railroad construction is hereto attached.

Respectfully submitted.

CORDOVA CHAMBER OF COMMERCE,
By GEO. C. HAZLET, President.
EDWARD F. MEDLEY, Secretary.

[Memorandum.]

COAL OFFERED FOR LEASE, BUT NO RAILROAD.

It is stated that the regulations for the leasing of coal lands on the public domain in Alaska will shortly be issued, but no way is provided for hauling out the coal, so far as the Bering River field is concerned. There must be a railroad before there can be any coal mining.

The Government has gone to great expense in resurveying the coal lands of the Bering River field and dividing them into leasing tracts to be offered to the public. A large sum of money has been spent during the past year for this purpose. It is well known that a railroad is necessary before coal can be mined, for the Government has had its engineers for months surveying the various railroad routes into the field.

The Secretary of the Interior has recommended appropriations of more than $10,000,000 for railroad building in Alaska during the coming year, but nothing is recommended for the Bering River field.

AUTHORITY SUFFICIENT.

There is no lack of authority for building railroads to the Bering field. The President was not only authorized, but directed to build not to exceed a thousand miles of railroad in Alaska. For this purpose he was authorized to spend $35,000,000. Opening the coal fields was one of the main purposes expressed in the law for the building of railroads. Of the thousand miles authorized, only about 500 miles have so far been designated for construction. This is the line from Seward to Fairbanks. This is estimated to cost $27,000,000. This leaves $8,000,000 of the $35,000,000 and nearly 500 miles out of the 1,000 miles authorized.

BERING FIELD CLOSEST TO MARKET.

There is no good reason why a line should not be built to the Bering field. The coal is the best, or equal to the best, and there is the greatest demand for it. It will be of the greatest use in developing the other resources of the Territory.

There are three available coal fields in Alaska, namely, the Bering River, the Matanuska, and the Nenana. The distance from the various fields to market is as follows:

	Miles.
Bering River to Cordova	68
Matanuska to Seward	185
Nenana to Fairbanks	104

The Copper River & Northwestern Railway reaches 38 miles of the distance from Cordova to the Bering field, so that only 30 miles of new track is necessary to bring this coal to market. These 30 miles are of easy construction. Twenty miles further would tap the Katalla oil field. Thus, with 50 miles of new track, the coal, oil, and copper would all be assembled at Cordova on easy grades and at the lowest cost. It is estimated the first 30 miles to the nearest coal could be built in 90 days, or at most in six months.

The estimated cost, in round figures, and time for completion of railroad facilities to the different fields is as follows:

DISTANCE, ESTIMATED COST, AND TIME OF COMPLETION.

Bering River to Cordova, 30 miles; $1,000,000; six months.
Matanuska to Seward, 184 miles; $7,000,000; three years.
Nenana to Fairbanks, 104 miles; $3,000,000; three years.

It is estimated by a very able commission who studied the subject that the coal from the Bering field can be hauled to Cordova by rail for $1.42 a ton, while from the Matanuska to Seward it will cost $3.38 a ton. There seems no justification for the Government to open Matanuska coal and keep the Bering field closed.

DISCRIMINATION.

Aside from all economic questions, is it just to develop one locality in Alaska and refuse to develop another equally entitled to it? Is it intentional discrimination? The interstate-commerce law provides—

"That it shall be unlawful for any common carrier subject to the provisions of this act to make or give any undue or unreasonable preference or advantage to any particular person, company, firm, corporation, or locality, or any particular description of traffic, in any respect whatsoever, or to subject any particular person, company, firm, corporation, or locality, or any particular description of traffic, to any undue or unreasonable prejudice or disadvantage in any respect whatsoever."

Violation of this law is punishable by fine and imprisonment.

When the Government itself goes into the railroad business, though it is not amenable to the law, should it not, nevertheless, be guided by the just principles of the law? If it is criminal for a private corporation to strangle and kill one locality while it upbuilds another, should not the Government itself refrain from doing the same thing?

PRIVATE RAILROAD IMPOSSIBLE.

The Government may expect that when the coal is opened somebody will at once come in and build a railroad to the Bering field. It has often been said that the owners of the Copper River & Northwestern Railway will do so. But this is a false hope. The Copper River people did plan to build a railroad there at one time. They took an option on 5,280 acres of coal land, made surveys for a railroad to it, and would no doubt have built the line and opened a coal mine. But the Government interposed, charged the parties with a conspiracy to monopolize the coal field, canceled the title to the coal land, and thus stopped the proposed railroad building.

The law has now been changed so that coal lands can not be bought at all, but must be leased.

A railroad is expressly prohibited from taking a lease, except for coal for its own use. This is impracticable, for coal in the small quantity required for a railroad's fuel supply can not be economically mined.

A railroad must have coal for traffic as well as for fuel.

A railroad is also prohibited by law from carrying any coal mined or produced by it or in which it has any interest. A railroad therefore can neither own nor lease nor have any interest in a coal mine.

Conversely, a coal company can not own a railroad. A franchise or right of way for a railroad can only be obtained by a railroad company.

The only chance, then, for private construction is that one company take a lease of coal land and another build the railroad. But if the two companies should enter into an agreement that one should open a mine and the other build a railroad to haul the coal, it would then be an unlawful combination or conspiracy. Section 8 of the coal-leasing law expressly forbids this.

If the Copper River & Northwestern Railway should venture again to build to the field, they could again be charged with conspiracy to monopolize the coal. The coal lease to which they proposed to build would also be subject to cancellation.

No doubt the Government could amend the law so as to induce private companies to build a railroad to the Bering coal. They can not do so under existing laws.

GOVERNMENT RAILROAD NECESSARY UNDER LEASING SYSTEM.

It was clearly recognized by those who advocated the leasing system that Government railroads were essential to the plan. Hon. Walter Fisher, former Secretary of the Interior, in an annual report, says:

"The adoption of a leasing policy will take away from the promoters of such a road the lure of great gain from the exploitation of the coal fields. This exploitation clearly should be prevented in the public interest. But at the same time, the Government must recognize that if it withdraws from private capital this incentive for railroad construction, the Government itself must assume the obligation of making possible that kind of development upon which it insists for the general good. It has been urged that the Government should meet this objection by guaranteeing the payment of bonds or the interest on bonds equal to the cost of the construction of the road. I can see no advantage whatever in this policy. If the Government is to guarantee the cost of construction, I see no reason why the Government should not own the railroad outright whether it operates it or leases to an operating company."

Dr. Alfred H. Brooks, Chief of the Alaska Division of the United States Geological Survey, a member of the first Alaska Railroad Commission, and one of the ablest of all students of Alaska development, says:

"Under the old policy, now happily abandoned, these lands would in part have been granted to private corporations which by railway construction, in turn would make the latent wealth of these and others available. This policy having been abandoned, the only alternative is for the Government to furnish the transportation. Without railways the land is valueless; with them it becomes an asset of importance. It was probably these more than purely commercial considerations, as much as the opportunity to furnish a new field of activity to our people, that led to the enactment of the law providing for Government railroads in Alaska. A further argument lies in the general acceptance of the principle of leasing the mineral fuels in the public lands rather than selling them. A Government railroad is almost a necessary corollary of leasing mineral lands in an undeveloped field."

GOVERNMENT COMPETITION.

Even if the law did not practically prohibit private railroad building in Alaska as it does, there would still be the danger of Government competition. A private line to the Bering field would surely have to compete with the Government line to the Matanuska except as to coal for local use. It might have to compete with a Government line to the Bering field itself. The President has undoubted authority to build there.

The coal-leasing law also expressly reserves 5,280 acres of coal land in the Bering field, and authorizes the President to open mines to compete with any other coal mine or railroad when in his opinion the price of coal is too high. Thus the threat of destructive competition is always before one who might venture to build a private road or open a coal mine.

Unless the Government itself will build a railroad to the Bering field, its position is more hopeless than it was before the railroad and coal-leasing laws were passed. Instead of being opened, it is more effectively closed.

NAVAL COAL TESTS.

It may be said that one reason why a railroad to the Bering field is not being built is that a test showed the coal unsuitable for naval use, while Matanuska coal is suitable. But this test was another example of injustice to the Bering field. A physician was sent to select the sample tested from the Bering field, while an experienced coal-mining engineer selected that from Matanuska.

There are many different veins of coal in the Bering field and many kinds of coal. The doctor happened to pick a poor sample for the peculiar needs of the Navy. The chemical analysis shows the coal of the two fields to be of the same general character. The same coal-mining engineer who selected the good sample from Matanuska does not hesitate to say that there is equally as good naval coal in the Bering field, and probably as much or more of it.

LOCAL USE PRINCIPAL VALUE OF BERING COAL.

But even if never a pound of Bering coal is used for the Navy, it does not justify strangulation of the district.

The principal value of the coal is for local uses. For upon the coal depends the other development of the tributary districts. The great copper belt extending over a hundred miles in length along the Chitina and Copper River Valleys must stay practically undeveloped until the coal is available.

There is one great copper mine opened there for which the Copper River Railroad was built. How many others there might have been if the coal were available, can not be told. But there are over 500 other copper claims located in the district. The owners of these claims have spent hundreds of thousands of dollars in their development and have been waiting for years for the opening of the coal. The ores are of the highest grade and the coal, lime, silica, and all elements for smelting are so near and so easy to assemble at a fine harbor on tidewater that it is the most favorable locality in the entire world for development of a great copper industry. The one essential lacking is a railroad to the coal.

The Kennecott Mines are producing about 300,000 tons of ore a year. A large part of this is 72 per cent ore—nearly pure copper. But there is much more low-grade ore, running from 5 per cent to 15 per cent, which must now be crushed and concentrated at the mine until it is at least 50 per cent copper before it can be shipped at all; for it must now be carried through Cordova and past the coal field and taken to Tacoma, 1,400 miles away, to be smelted. Nothing but the richest ore can stand this transportation. How many thousands or millions of tons of ore would be produced were it permitted no one can say. But in Montana, in Utah, and in Arizona, where the conditions are not so favorable for cheap copper production, the ores mined run into the millions of tons per year. Fine cities and prosperous communities are built and supported on the copper industry alone. Butte, a thriving city of 75,000 population, is an example of what might be built at Cordova were only a little reasonable sense and justice used about it. As it stands, the Government will neither develop the field itself nor permit anybody else to do it.

Hon. Walter Fisher, former Secretary of the Interior, referring to this situation, says:

"I personally visited the Bering field and examined some of its coal veins and coal mines. * * * The erection of smelters on Prince William Sound will cause an immediate demand for coal, as the first smelters will probably be erected near Cordova, which is the tidewater terminal of the Copper River & Northwestern Railway, which now taps the principal copper field of the Territory.

"One of the pressing needs of the Territory is the construction of such smelters at which the copper ore especially can be smelted without the labor and expense of transporting the ore the enormous distance now necessary for this purpose. The main purpose and practically the only present use of the expensive railroad from Cordova up the Copper River is the transporting of the ore from the so-called Bonanza copper field, in which the Morgan-Guggenheim Syndicate, which owns this railroad, already has extensive interests. No smelter, however, has as yet been constructed, and none would be profitable until the coal and copper can be brought together. Once the Bering coal fields are open, the transportation becomes in this, as in other respects, the most important problem, upon the solution of which future development will depend. The enormous expense of railroad construction through mountainous and glacier-covered territory makes it practically certain that the Copper River Railroad will remain the natural distributor for any of this coal for which there may be a demand in the interior of the particular district in which it is located. I think it may be assumed, not only from the statements made to me by its officials, but also from the very nature of the case, that the people interested in this road will construct smelting works at Cordova as soon as Alaskan coal is available for its use. Smelters at Cordova would be able to take care of the copper ores, of which there are many indications throughout the entire district tributary to Prince William Sound. The exploitation and commercial development of these ores would promptly follow the construction and operation of such smelters. * * *

"The harbor at Cordova is so clearly superior in all respects to any other harbor available for the Bering coal fields that the slightly longer transportation necessary by this route appears entirely unimportant, especially as the grade is practically a water grade to the coal fields."

CRUEL INJUSTICE TO THE PEOPLE.

The people of the towns of Cordova, Chitina, McCarthy, and Kennecott and other places are not only obliged to see the great resources about them remain undeveloped, the ores produced in their district hauled away to be smelted and to build up communities in a distant State instead of their own, but they must bring even the coal they use for domestic purposes from foreign fields a thousand miles and more away instead of from the Alaska coal field right at their own doors.

The people of Katalla, only 10 miles from the Bering coal, are obliged to pay $20 per ton for coal for domestic use brought from British Columbia.

These communities having a population of only two or three thousand pioneers, struggling to build up their towns against the natural hardships of the country, see their best efforts defeated by the obstruction and discrimination of their own Government.

Heretofore pioneers have been helped and not hindered. They have been praised for their courage and appreciated for their enterprise in building prosperous communities in our undeveloped territories.

MALIGNANT POLITICS.

The truth is, the Bering coal has long been the subject of political controversy. The most astonishing lies have been invented about it and retailed to the public for political purposes. The Ballinger-Pinchot quarrel raged about it. The enemies of the Taft administration used it freely as a weapon of attack in the Cunningham coal cases and the Controller Bay incident. Its uses for such purposes ought to have passed. The time seems to have come when it should be put to its natural uses.

THE COPPER RIVER RAILROAD.

The Copper River Railroad is an excellent line extending 200 miles from Cordova inland. It would long ago have thrown out a branch to the Bering coal, but was stopped. Now it can not. It is owned by the Kennecott Copper Corporation, which owns the producing copper mine already referred to. The shareholders of this company number six or seven thousand. It is operated more as a mine road than a commercial line because it has not been permitted to extend to the coal. It has for the same reason been prevented from extending other branches into the copper field or further to the interior. Its growth is stopped. The rates are necessarily higher because it can not develop its territory and so increase its volume of business.

GOVERNMENT MAY CONDEMN.

By the terms of the Alaska railroad law the President is fully authorized to condemn or purchase any existing line of railroad or any part thereof, or to compel any such line to make traffic connections with a Government line.

Therefore in extending a line to the Bering coal, the Government may make use of the existing line as far as it goes. It may purchase or condemn the 38 miles of track, or if considered preferable, could condemn or purchase the whole of the existing line.

But it is not at all necessary to do either. The law is ample to compel the existing line to make a traffic connection with any line the Government may build to the coal, upon reasonable terms and conditions, to be adjusted by the Interstate Commerce Commission, if necessary.

The Government could, as an alternative plan, secure running rights over the 38 miles of existing line and so handle the coal traffic independently. Such contracts for running rights are very common. The Union Pacific Railroad, for example, secured such rights on the Northern Pacific track from Portland to Seattle, and operates its own trains over its rival's tracks, in full competition with it.

Such contracts for running rights may be seen in nearly every large city where two or more railroads use the same tracks to enter the terminals.

Unless the Government means to own all the railroads in Alaska now or hereafter to be built, it must consider traffic connections and running rights agreements with private lines. The law requires them to make such connections.

ROUTE OFFICIALLY RECOMMENDED.

In 1912 an expert commission was sent to Alaska under authority of Congress expressly to study the subject of railroad routes and the development of the coal fields. It was composed of distinguished Army and Navy and civil engineers and included Dr. Alfred H. Brooks, Chief of the Alaska division of the United States Geological Survey. Referring to the Cordova route and the Bering coal, they reported and recommended as follows:

"It is evident that on the Cordova route the first investment will be less than on the Seward route, the resulting freight rates will be lower, the terminal port offers a better harbor than the one at Seward, and the tributary coal field promises the earlier developments because its product can be marketed cheaper. Each of these economic features points clearly to the advisability of reaching the Tanana Valley via the valley of the Copper River, and the commission therefore recommends the construction of a railway from Chitina to Fairbanks."

The second engineering commission, which was sent in 1914, though it made no recommendations, confirmed the report of the first commission in all essential facts. No doubt, upon reasons which seemed sufficient, the report of the first commission was rejected in so far as a line to Fairbanks is concerned. It is certainly unusual to send an expert commission to examine and recommend action, and then take a course directly opposite to their recommendation. But the line to the Bering coal field still calls for decision.

CORDOVA HARBOR.

The report of the Army and Navy engineers confirmed the opinion of Secretary Fisher, heretofore quoted, as to Cordova Harbor. They say:

"After its study of all available harbors the commission is of the opinion that the one at Cordova is without question the best. It has no disadvantage not possessed by all and one great advantage possessed by no other, namely, an ample area of good anchorage. Seward is evidently the seaport for the Matanuska coal and Cordova the logical outlet for the Bering River coal. The comparison of transportation rates given in the foregoing table show that for an output of 500,000 tons annually it will cost $1.96 a ton more to haul Matanuska coal to Seward than it will to haul the Bering River coal to Cordova, and the analysis further shows that for double this output the additional cost will be $1.11. This places the Matanuska coal at such disadvantage that it could probably not be marketed at tidewater in competition with the Bering River coal."

PREPAREDNESS.

As a site for a military and naval base for national defenses the harbor at Cordova is unique. It is superior to any site in the Hawaiian Islands or any other point on the Pacific coast. It is completely landlocked and can easily be made impregnable to attack from either land or sea. In addition, there can be here assembled three commodities of the greatest need in war, namely, copper, coal, and oil. All these commodities are produced and can be brought to Cordova Harbor with 250 miles of railroad, 200 miles of which are already in operation. There is no other similar district on the Pacific seaboard, probably no other in the entire world. In the hands of an enemy this site would be most dangerous. In case of war it would no doubt be seized by an enemy instantly and a branch quickly extended to the coal and oil fields.

PROCRASTINATION.

It may be said that it is intended to build a railroad to the Bering coal, but that it must wait until the line is finished from Seward to Fairbanks. This will probably take five years. What can be gained by waiting? It can be built as cheaply now as then. Of all possible reasons, procrastination would seem the least excusable.

SIXTEEN YEARS OF EFFORT.

Coal was discovered in the Bering field in 1896. In 1900 Congress passed the first act intended to make the coal available. This act failed to work. Then in 1904, 1906, 1908, 1910, and lastly in 1914, Congress legislated upon the subject of Alaska coal land. Thus in 16 years six different acts have been passed upon the subject; but the Bering coal is still unopened.

The leasing system is now to be tried, but without a railroad there can be no coal mines. The Government only can build it under existing conditions.

REPORTS OF COMMITTEES.

Mr. SAULSBURY, from the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds, to which was referred the bill (S. 5503) to provide for the purchase of a site for the erection of a Federal building at Georgetown, Del., reported it without amendment and submitted a report (No. 359) thereon.

Mr. ROBINSON, from the Committee on Interstate Commerce, to which was referred the bill (H. R. 8234) to prevent interstate commerce in the products of child labor, and for other purposes, reported it with an amendment and submitted a report (No. 358) thereon.

He also, from the Committee on Claims, to which was referred the bill (S. 5206) for the relief of mail contractors, reported it with amendments and submitted a report (No. 360) thereon.

Mr. JOHNSON of Maine, from the Committee on Pensions, to which was referred the bill (H. R. 12194) granting pensions and increase of pensions to certain soldiers and sailors of the Regular Army and Navy and certain soldiers and sailors of wars other than the Civil War and to widows of such soldiers and sailors, reported it with amendments and submitted a report (No. 361) thereon.

He also, from the same committee, to which was referred the bill (H. R. 12843) granting pensions and increase of pensions to certain soldiers and sailors of the Civil War and certain widows and dependent children of soldiers and sailors of said war, reported it with amendments and submitted a report (No. 362) thereon.

Mr. SUTHERLAND, from the Committee on the Judiciary, to which was referred the bill (S. 1308) to amend an act entitled "An act to establish circuit courts of appeals and to define and regulate in certain cases the jurisdiction of the courts of the United States, and for other purposes," approved March 3, 1911, reported it with amendments and submitted a report (No. 363) thereon.

Mr. WADSWORTH, from the Committee on Claims, to which were referred the following bills, reported them severally without amendment and submitted reports thereon:

S. 1288. A bill for the relief of Simon M. Preston (Rept. No. 366);

H. R. 2235. An act for the relief of the widow and heirs at law of Patrick J. Fitzgerald, deceased (Rept. No. 365); and

H. R. 7239. An act for the relief of Philip H. Heberer (Rept. No. 364).

He also, from the same committee, to which were referred the following bills, reported them each with an amendment and submitted reports thereon:

S. 1056. A bill for the relief of Alfred Sjostrom (Rept. No. 368); and

S. 4807. A bill for the relief of James W. Cross (Rept. No. 367).

Mr. HARDING, from the Committee on Claims, to which was referred the bill (S. 4581) for the relief of Victor A. Ermerins, reported it without amendment and submitted a report (No. 369) thereon.

Mr. RANSDELL, from the Committee on Commerce, to which was referred the bill (S. 4085) to establish a Coast Guard station on the coast of Louisiana, in the vicinity of Barataria Bay, reported it with an amendment and submitted a report (No. 370) thereon.

FOX RIVER BRIDGE, ILLINOIS.

Mr. SHEPPARD. From the Committee on Commerce, I report back favorably, with amendments, the bill (S. 5415) to authorize the construction of a bridge across the Fox River at Geneva, Ill., and I submit a report (No. 356) thereon. I ask for the immediate consideration of the bill.

Mr. LEWIS. Mr. President, I move the passage of the bill.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Chair is inquiring whether there is any objection to its present consideration.

Mr. LEWIS. I ask unanimous consent for its immediate consideration.

The VICE PRESIDENT. That has already been asked for. Does the Senator object?

Mr. LEWIS. I am favoring it. I did not understand that the request was made by the Senator from Texas.

There being no objection, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill.

The amendments were, in line 7, after the words "Fox River," to insert "at a point suitable to the interest of navigation," and in line 11, after the date "nineteen hundred and six," to strike out the remainder of section 1, so as to make the bill read:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Chicago & North Western Railway Co., a corporation organized and existing under the laws of the States of Wisconsin, Illinois, and Michigan, its successors and assigns, be, and is hereby, authorized to construct, maintain, and operate a bridge across the Fox River, at a point suitable to the interest of navigation, in the city of Geneva and State of Illinois in accordance with the act of Congress entitled "An act to regulate the construction of bridges across navigable waters," approved March 23, 1906.

SEC. 2. That the right to alter, amend, or repeal this act is hereby expressly reserved.

The amendments were agreed to.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendments were concurred in.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

CREDIT IN CERTAIN ACCOUNTS.

Mr. LANE. From the Committee on Claims I report back favorably without amendment the bill (S. 697) authorizing a credit in certain accounts in the office of the Auditor for the War Department, and I submit a report (No. 357) thereon. I call the attention of the Senator from Pennsylvania to the report.

Mr. OLIVER. I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of the bill just reported by the Senator from Oregon.

There being no objection, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill. It authorizes the Secretary of the Treasury and the proper accounting officers of the Treasury Department to credit in the accounts of the Treasurer of the United States the sum of $3,965.28, carried in the accounts of the Auditor for the War Department, and in the general account of the Treasurer of the United States, as unavailable funds, and representing differences found in the accounts of the late Brig. Gen. Alexander Hays, United States Volunteers.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

Mr. OLIVER. I ask unanimous consent that the report accompanying the bill be printed in the RECORD.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Without objection, it is so ordered.

The report this day submitted by Mr. LANE is as follows:

[S. Rept. No. 357, 64th Cong., 1st sess.]

CREDIT IN CERTAIN ACCOUNTS.

The Committee on Claims, to whom was referred the bill (S. 697) authorizing a credit in certain accounts in the office of the Auditor for the War Department, having considered the same, report thereon with a recommendation that the bill do pass.

This is a bill to credit the accounts of the late Brig. Gen. Alexander Hays, United States Volunteers, who served as second lieutenant, Eighth Infantry, United States Army, from June 18, 1846, to April 12, 1848, when he resigned; as major and colonel, Twelfth and Sixty-third Pennsylvania Infantry; and as brigadier general of Volunteers from April 24, 1861, to May 5, 1864, when he was killed in battle.

Alexander Hays graduated at West Point on July 1, 1844. He was assigned to the Fourth Infantry, then at Camp Salubrity, La., near Natchitoches. The little army at Natchitoches was termed the "Army of observation"; when at Corpus Christi, Tex., it became the "Army of occupation," about 2,200 men, all Regulars; and when across the Rio Grande it was termed the "Army of invasion." Its history is the history of Zachary Taylor's operations in the War with Mexico. Lieut. Alexander Hays was present for duty in all these operations up to the middle of May, 1846, two weeks after the battle of Resaca de la Palma. He was in action at that battle and was wounded. He was also in action at Palo Alto the day before. Lieut. Hays early received mention for bravery. In a daring charge Lieut. Hays, with a classmate, Lieut. Woods, attended only by one man, put to flight a crew operating a gun and captured the gun, the first one taken from the enemy in the Mexican War. He was brevetted first lieutenant for gallant services at Palo Alto and Resaca. Two weeks after receiving his wound at Resaca he was unfit for field duty and was ordered home for recruiting service. He returned to the field of active operations September, 1847, with a large body of recruits, in time to join the battalion of regular recruits under Capt. Seneca G. Simmons, attached to the volunteer brigade of Gen. Joseph Lane, which left Vera Cruz September 19, fighting its way to the City of Mexico, relieving the beleaguered and hard-pressed garrison at Puebla while on the way. Lieut. Hays, who had been appointed assistant adjutant general of the brigade, was with Gen. Lane in all the engagements of his memorable expedition. He participated in the following engagements in Mexico: Palo Alto, Resaca de la Palma, Santa Fe, Paso de Ovegas, National Bridge, Huamantla, El Pinal, Atlixco, San Augustine de la Palma, Tehuacan, Galaxara, Tlaxcala, Orizaba, Tulancingo, and Zacultiplan.

Some of these were skirmishes, but many were important affairs. In his report of the engagement at Zacultiplan, Gen. Lane mentions Lieut. Hays as his aid, and concludes by saying:

"Lieut. Alexander Hays, Eighth Infantry, acting assistant adjutant general, needed not this occasion to signalize his bravery, coolness, and devotion to his duties. His behavior in every emergency added, if possible, new honors."

On April 12, 1848, the war over, Lieut. Hays resigned his commission and returned to Pittsburgh to engage in civil pursuits. On March 28, 1848, Gen. Lane addressed the following letter to President Polk:

"To His Excellency the PRESIDENT OF THE UNITED STATES:

"SIR: At parting with Bvt. First Lieut. Alexander Hays, Eighth Infantry, I should do him, myself, and the service at large the uttermost injustice not to mention especially his good behavior upon all occasions and to recommend him in the strongest manner to the notice of the War Department.

"Lieut. Hays, after services at Palo Alto and Resaca de la Palma, which won his brevet, joined my column at the National Bridge, being then on duty with Capt. Heintzelman's battalion of recruits. In the conflict of Huamantla, at Puebla, Atlixco, Tlaxcala, Matamoros, and Galaxara he behaved with distinguished courage and coolness; and evincing remarkable capacity for the post of quartermaster, I appointed him such for my brigade, the duties of which office he discharged to my entire satisfaction. He accompanied me to the City of Mexico from Puebla, and upon the first vacancy I selected him as one of my aids and acting assistant adjutant general. Since that time, at Tehuacan, Orizaba, Tertihuacan, Tulancingo, and Sequaltaplan, he has fully justified my confidence and esteem. I can add nothing in this respect to my official reports, already forwarded.

"When I obtained my leave of absence Lieut. Hays tendered his resignation, Gen. Butler not feeling at liberty to allow him to accompany me home. He is unable to perform infantry duty from the rheumatism and neuralgia (contracted in a long period of exposure and fatigue and a fall from his horse near the National Bridge).

"There is no man that I would more highly commend than Lieut. Hays, and nothing could afford me so much pleasure (should he desire to remain in the service) than to know of his appointment as quartermaster or to some other office in the Army which your better judgment may designate.

"I am, Mr. President,

"Very respectfully, your obedient servant,

"JOSEPH LANE,
"Brigadier General."

Alexander Hays, classmate of Winfield Scott Hancock, Alfred Pleasanton, and Simon Buckner, comrade of Grant, Augur, Russell, Longstreet, and A. P. Hill, was the same ideal soldier in Mexico that he was on the battle fields of our Civil War.

At the outbreak of the Civil War Lieut. Hays was engaged in bridge engineering. He at once gave up his work and enlisted in a militia company in Pittsburgh known as the City Guard, of which he was chosen captain. This company became part of the Twelfth Regiment, for three months' service, and Capt. Hays was commissioned major. On May 14, 1861, he was appointed captain of the Sixteenth United States Infantry. At the close of the term of the service of the Twelfth Regiment he returned to Pittsburgh and recruited a regiment for the war, the Sixty-third Pennsylvania Volunteers, of which he was commissioned colonel. In an engagement at second Bull Run Col. Hays, while leading his men, received a shot which shattered his leg. Before entirely recovered from his wound he was assigned to the command of the Third Brigade of Casey's Division, Twenty-second Corps, in charge of the defenses of Washington. He fought gallantly and successfully in the three days' battle at Gettysburg. On the 5th of May, 1864, the first day's fight in the Wilderness, Gen. Hays, then in command of the survivors of Kearney's old division of heroes, occupying the key to Grant's position, was shot through the head, dying three hours afterwards. Gen. Hancock, in his report of the Battle of the Wilderness, spoke of the death of Gen. Hays as follows:

"Gen. Alexander Hays, that dauntless soldier, whose intrepid and chivalric bearing on so many battle fields had won for him the highest renown, was killed at the head of his command."

Gen. Grant, in his "Personal Memoirs," speaking of the death of his old classmate, says:

"One of our most gallant commanders, Gen. Alexander Hays, was killed. I had been with him at West Point and had served with him through the Mexican War. He was a most gallant officer, ready to lead his command wherever ordered. With him it was 'Come, boys,' not 'Go.'"

The death of Gen. Hays is thus described by Gen. Walker in his history of the Second Army Corps:

"The losses had been heavy. Among the killed of that afternoon was Gen. Alexander Hays. At Gettysburg, at Bristow, at Mine Run, at Mortons Ford, this devoted officer rode, with his staff and flag behind him, the mark of a thousand riflemen, the admiration of the two armies, only to fall in a tangled wilderness, where scarce a regiment could note his person and derive inspiration from his courage and martial enthusiasm. All the peculiar advantages of the Army of the Potomac were sacrificed in this jungle fighting into which they were called to engage. Of what use here was the tactical skill and perfection of form; of what use here the example and the personal influence of a Hays or a Hancock?"

The books in the auditor's office show the differences were due to Lieut. Hays's failure to make returns for subsistence supplies turned over to him at Puebla, Mexico, October 31, 1847, on account of recruiting expenses and on account of regular supplies and transportation of the Army. At this time Alexander Hays was a young, inexperienced lieutenant, working under great difficulties, and enduring severe hardship in the performance of his duties. A quotation from a letter which he wrote to his brother on March 16, 1846, gives some idea of the conditions. He said:

"I would like to give you some account of our landing and passage to the interior, but will not have space, I fear. Previous to going there I had been put upon extra duty for some time, and after we arrived the old general [Lane] made it permanent by selecting me for every expedition, sometimes acting as captain of a steamboat, sometimes as skipper of a yawl. On another expedition I was sent to purchase cattle for 'Uncle Sam.' I had no money, only my sweet, honest face, and that 300 miles from the Army, where I was totally unknown. I succeeded in obeying my orders, not without considerable difficulty, and returned after a month's absence with 80 yoke, pronounced to be 'the finest lot of cattle ever collected.' Without giving me any rest, I was sent again and again until finally 'exhausted nature could stand it no more,' and I was laid up."

It has been a legend in the Hays family that these expeditions were the cause of the apparent shortages, and that because of the remoteness from the Army and Washington and the unusual conditions the exacting demands for receipts and accountings were never lived up to.

There is no appropriation carried by the bill, as it simply seeks to credit the accounts, and in view of the valiant service of Gen. Hays and the unusual duties thrust upon him in securing supplies and commissary necessities for the Army and the fact that this soldier's high character precludes the possibility of there having been any misappropriation, your committee is of the opinion that favorable action should be taken upon the bill, and therefore recommend its passage.

THE TREATMENT OF WATER FRONTS.

Mr. CHILTON, from the Committee on Printing, reported the following resolution (S. Res. 171), and it was considered by unanimous consent and agreed to:

Resolved, That the article entitled "The treatment of water fronts," by the Senator from Nevada, Mr. NEWLANDS, which was printed in the Journal of the American Institute of Architects for April, 1916, be included in Senate Document No. 362, Sixty-fourth Congress, with accompanying illustrations.

BILLS INTRODUCED.

Bills were introduced, read the first time, and, by unanimous consent, the second time, and referred as follows:

By Mr. NELSON:

A bill (S. 5645) for the establishment of Noyes, in the State of Minnesota, as a port of entry and delivery for immediate transportation without appraisement of dutiable merchandise; to the Committee on Commerce.

By Mr. KERN:

A bill (S. 5665) granting a pension to Michael J. Fisher (with accompanying papers); and

A bill (S. 5666) granting an increase of pension to Winfield S. Webster (with accompanying papers); to the Committee on Pensions.

By Mr. O'GORMAN:

A bill (S. 5667) to provide for the refund under certain conditions of the additional taxes or penalties of 50 per cent imposed under the provisions of section 3176 of the Revised Statutes of the United States, or subsection 5 of section 38 of the act of August 5, 1909, known as the special excise corporation-tax law, or both, for neglect to make, at the proper time or times, returns required under the provisions of section 2 or of paragraph or subsection S of section 4 of the act of October 3, 1913, known as the income-tax law, or under the provisions of the act of October 22, 1914, known as the war-revenue law, or such act as extended; to the Committee on Finance.

A bill (S. 5668) directing the reexamination of the accounts of the late Peter G. S. Ten Broeck; to the Committee on Military Affairs.

By Mr. MARTINE of New Jersey:

A bill (S. 5669) for the relief of sundry railroad companies; to the Committee on Claims.

By Mr. SMITH of Maryland:

A bill (S. 5670) to license operators of cinematographs, moving-picture machines, and similar apparatus, and for other purposes; to the Committee on the District of Columbia.

INTERNATIONAL AGREEMENTS.

Mr. PHELAN. Mr. President, I introduce a joint resolution and ask that it be read.

The joint resolution (S. J. Res. 122) reaffirming the faith of the United States in the peaceful settlement of international disputes by all reasonable and honorable means, was read the first time by its title and the second time at length, as follows:

Resolved, etc., That despite the enlargement of the Army and Navy required by present world conditions, the United States of America reaffirm their faith in the policy of the peaceful settlement of international disputes by all reasonable and honorable means, and declare their desire and intention to welcome such international agreements as will make large or competitive armaments unnecessary.

Mr. PHELAN. I ask for the adoption of the joint resolution.

Mr. LODGE. My attention was diverted. I should like to hear the joint resolution read.

The VICE PRESIDENT. It is a joint resolution, and under the rules of the Senate it must go to a committee.

Mr. PHELAN. I ask unanimous consent for its immediate consideration.

Mr. LODGE. I object; I want to hear it first.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The joint resolution will be again read.

The Secretary again read the joint resolution.

Mr. STONE. Mr. President, I am under the impression at least that it would be better if my friend from California [Mr. PHELAN] would consent to have the joint resolution referred to the Committee on Foreign Relations, as I think should be done with all similar resolutions. The Senator from California understands that in saying this I do not mean to express the least dissent to the substance of the resolution; but we may have a flood of such resolutions, and I merely think it better to begin now by sending them all to the Committee on Foreign Relations. I move that the joint resolution——

Mr. LODGE. It is not necessary to move that the joint resolution be referred; it goes to the committee under the rule.

The VICE PRESIDENT. If there is objection to unanimous consent——

Mr. STONE. I object.

The VICE PRESIDENT. If there is objection, the joint resolution will go to the Committee on Foreign Relations, under the rules of the Senate.

Mr. PHELAN. Mr. President, I defer to the request of the chairman of the Committee on Foreign Relations [Mr. STONE]. While I strongly favor the so-called policy of preparedness, I believe that the passage of the joint resolution at this time would be opportune in view of the fact that we are about to be called in joint session to hear an address by the President of the United States. I can not divine the object of the call, nor do I know what is to be the character of the message, but I thought at this time, immediately after the passage of the bill for military preparedness, that the passage of such a joint resolution would be opportune. I submitted it to several of my colleagues in advance of its introduction, and in view of the objection to its consideration without a reference to the committee necessarily I yield.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The joint resolution will be referred to the Committee on Foreign Relations.

GOOD ROADS.

Mr. SHAFROTH. Mr. President, I offer an amendment to House bill 7617, concerning good roads. The amendment is short and I ask that it be read.

There being no objection, the amendment was read and ordered to lie on the table and be printed, as follows:

After the word "roads," in the twenty-second line of page 6, strike out the semicolon and insert the following: "by the payment of one-fourth of the total cost of any such road, in the manner and upon the conditions hereinafter provided, whenever individuals, the county, and State in which such road is situate shall each have contributed an amount equal to one-fourth of the estimated cost thereof."

AMENDMENTS TO APPROPRIATION BILLS.

Mr. WADSWORTH submitted an amendment proposing to appropriate $3,000 to be used to cooperate with horticultural organizations in the standardization of botanical names in horticultural use, intended to be proposed by him to the Agricultural appropriation bill (H. R. 12717), which was referred to the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry and ordered to be printed.

Mr. JONES submitted an amendment proposing to appropriate $1,000,000 for the acquisition, by purchase or condemnation, of a tract of land at or near American Lake, in the State of Washington, sufficient for annual maneuvers and encampment of such of the military forces of the United States as may be assembled at that point, etc., intended to be proposed by him to the Army appropriation bill, which was referred to the Committee on Military Affairs and ordered to be printed.

Mr. SMITH of Arizona submitted an amendment proposing to appropriate $1,000 to pay to Tom K. Richie, of Tucson, Ariz., having been inadvertently covered into the Treasury on a forfeited cash recognizance in a case pending in the United States district court, etc., intended to be proposed by him to the sundry civil appropriation bill, which was referred to the Committee on Appropriations and ordered to be printed.

Mr. RANSDELL submitted an amendment intended to be proposed by him to the river and harbor appropriation bill (H. R. 12193), which was referred to the Committee on Commerce and ordered to be printed.

Mr. CLARKE of Arkansas (for Mr. BRYAN) submitted an amendment intended to be proposed by him to the river and harbor appropriation bill (H. R. 12193), which was referred to the Committee on Commerce and ordered to be printed.

Mr. STERLING submitted an amendment intended to be proposed by him to the river and harbor appropriation bill (H. R. 12193), which was referred to the Committee on Commerce and ordered to be printed.

Mr. SMITH of Michigan submitted an amendment intended to be proposed by him to the river and harbor appropriation bill (H. R. 12193), which was referred to the Committee on Commerce and ordered to be printed.

Mr. JOHNSON of Maine submitted an amendment intended to be proposed by him to the river and harbor appropriation bill (H. R. 12193), which was ordered to be printed and, with the accompanying paper, referred to the Committee on Commerce.

SPEECH BY SENATOR WALSH (S. DOC. NO. 410).

Mr. OWEN. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent to have printed as a public document a speech delivered by the Senator from Montana [Mr. WALSH] at the Jefferson Day banquet, April 13, 1916, in this city.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Without objection it is so ordered.

NOMINATION OF LOUIS D. BRANDEIS (S. DOC. NO. 409).

Mr. CHILTON. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the hearings held before the Committee on the Judiciary on the nomination of Louis D. Brandeis and the report of the committee thereon be printed as a public document.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Is there objection? The Chair hears none, and it is so ordered.

EXPOSITION AT SAN ANTONIO, TEX.

Mr. SHEPPARD. Mr. President, I wish to give notice that on the conclusion of the morning business on Friday, April 21, the eightieth anniversary of the battle of San Jacinto, whereby the independence of Texas was achieved, I shall address the Senate on the subject of the Texas Bicentennial and Pan American Exposition to be held at San Antonio in 1918. This exposition will commemorate the two hundredth anniversary of the founding of San Antonio, and will show the progress and resources of Texas and the Southwest. It will also have for its object the cultivation of closer trade relations between the United States and the other nations of Pan America.

PRESIDENTIAL APPROVAL.

A message from the President of the United States, by Mr. Sharkey, one of his secretaries, announced that the President had on this day approved and signed the joint resolution (S. J. Res. 24) authorizing the Librarian of Congress to return to Williamsburg Lodge, No. 6, Ancient Free and Accepted Masons, of Virginia, the original manuscript of the record of the proceedings of said lodge.

THE AQUEDUCT BRIDGE.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Morning business is closed.

Mr. SWANSON. Mr. President, I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of House bill 759, being the bill for the erection of the Aqueduct Bridge. I beg to say in this connection that the bill has been reported unanimously by the Committee on Commerce of the other House, that it passed that House without a dissenting vote, that it has been unanimously reported by the Commerce Committee of the Senate, and I know of no objection to it. The old bridge has been condemned, and it is necessary that the proposed new bridge be constructed at an early date.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is on the motion of the Senator from Virginia [Mr. SWANSON] to proceed to the consideration of the bill named by him.

The motion was agreed to; and the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill (H. R. 759) to provide for the removal of what is now known as the Aqueduct Bridge, across the Potomac River, and for the building of a bridge in place thereof, which had been reported from the Committee on Commerce with amendments.

Mr. KENYON. Mr. President——

Mr. GALLINGER. Let the bill be read, Mr. President.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Secretary will read the bill.

The Secretary read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of War be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to cause to be constructed a bridge across the Potomac River at or near what is now known as the Aqueduct Bridge, replacing said bridge with a substantial structure, at a cost of not more than $1,000,000.

SEC. 2. That the Secretary of War is further authorized, if in his judgment it should be necessary, to acquire any lands, easements, rights, or property on each side of the Potomac River, by purchase or condemnation, as may be desired for the construction of said bridge and the approaches thereto.

SEC. 3. That the Secretary of War is further authorized to make such contract for the removal of the present bridge and for the sale thereof as in his discretion may be proper, and to cover the proceeds of such sale, if any, into the Treasury of the United States.

SEC. 4. That in the discharge of his duties hereunder the Secretary of War is hereby authorized and directed to employ the services of such engineers and other persons as he shall determine to be necessary to carry out the provisions of this act.

SEC. 5. That the sum of $150,000, or so much thereof as may be necessary, is hereby appropriated, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, for the purpose of securing proper plans and for the payment of any lands, easements, rights, or property: Provided, That the plans and specifications herein authorized shall be so drawn and prepared as to insure the construction of a bridge and approaches thereto within the limit of cost of $1,000,000, as fixed herein. As soon as the plans and specifications are approved the Secretary of War shall give public notice of the specifications and invite competitive bids for the construction of the bridge and approaches thereto according to the specifications, reserving the right to reject any or all such bids.

SEC. 6. That the said bridge shall be used as a highway for traffic, and for gas and water mains, power, telegraph and telephone wires or cables, upon such conditions and for such compensation as may from time to time be prescribed by the Secretary of War: Provided, That the Washington & Old Dominion Railway, now using the Aqueduct Bridge, shall be permitted, with the approval of the Secretary of War, to change its location so as to cross with a double track the new bridge and approaches herein provided for and to connect its railway, located in Alexandria County, Va., and in the District of Columbia, with the tracks of said new bridge; and that all plans for such change are to be approved by the Secretary of War: And provided further, That a standard system of electric propulsion shall be installed by said railway on said new bridge, and no dynamo furnishing power to this portion of the road of said railway shall be in any manner connected with the ground, and that the cost of paving and maintaining in good condition between the tracks and 2 feet outside thereof shall be paid by said railway: And provided further, That any electric railway shall have the right to use said new bridge upon terms determined by the Secretary of War, who is hereby authorized and directed to hear the interested parties and to fix the terms of joint trackage. And all electric railways using said new bridge shall, in addition to taxes and other charges, pay monthly into the Treasury of the United States the sum of one-half of 1 cent for each passenger transported each way over said new bridge, and just and reasonable rates or charges on all freight transported thereon, and of these sums, when paid into the Treasury, one-half shall be credited to the District of Columbia.

SEC. 7. That one-half of the entire expense of constructing said bridge, and its maintenance when constructed, including the amount appropriated in section 5 of this act, shall be paid by the District of Columbia.

SEC. 8. That the sum of $25,000, or so much thereof as may be necessary, is hereby appropriated, out of any moneys in the Treasury of the United States not otherwise appropriated, for the purpose of maintaining and repairing the present Aqueduct Bridge until the new bridge herein provided for is completed.

Mr. SWANSON. I ask that the amendments proposed by the committee be acted upon.

The first amendment reported by the Committee on Commerce was, in section 6, page 3, line 5, after the word "cables," to insert "and interurban railroads," so as to read:

SEC. 6. That the said bridge shall be used as a highway for traffic, and for gas and water mains, power, telegraph and telephone wires or cables, and interurban railroads upon such conditions and for such compensation as may from time to time be prescribed by the Secretary of War.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, in the same section, on page 3, line 24, after the word "bridge," to insert "and the double track above described," so as to read:

And provided further, That any electric railway shall have the right to use said new bridge and the double track above described upon terms determined by the Secretary of War.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. STERLING. Mr. President, I suggest to the Senator from Virginia that a further amendment should be made. In section 5, page 2, line 17, after the word "property," I move to insert the words "necessary in the construction of said bridge."

The VICE PRESIDENT. The amendment will be stated.

The SECRETARY. In section 5, page 2, line 17, after the word "property," it is proposed to insert "necessary in the construction of said bridge," so as to read:

SEC. 5. That the sum of $150,000, or so much thereof as may be necessary, is hereby appropriated, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, for the purpose of securing proper plans and for the payment of any lands, easements, rights, or property necessary in the construction of said bridge.

Mr. SWANSON. I have no objection to that amendment.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Without objection, the amendment is agreed to.

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President, section 7 of the bill provides:

SEC. 7. That one-half of the entire expense of constructing said bridge, and its maintenance when constructed, including the amount appropriated in section 5 of this act, shall be paid by the District of Columbia.

If the bill becomes a law as reported to the Senate, the District of Columbia will pay one half of the expense of constructing the bridge and the Government of the United States will pay the other half.

Mr. President, I think it is well understood that before many years there will be constructed a $4,000,000 bridge over the Potomac River in the neighborhood of the Lincoln Memorial. I understand that that project is being considered favorably by the other House, and the Government is to pay every dollar of the expense of that bridge, if the plans as mapped out are carried to a successful conclusion.

I think, Mr. President, the State of Virginia ought, at least, to pay part of the expense of the bridge provided for in the pending bill, and should receive a part of whatever charges are collected from the railroads for transportation over the bridge; and to bring that about I am going to offer an amendment to section 7, so that it will read as follows:

SEC. 7. That one-third of the entire expense of constructing said bridge, and its maintenance when constructed, including the amount appropriated in section 5 of this act, shall be paid by the State of Virginia, and one-third by the District of Columbia.

In other words, the Government of the United States would pay one-third, the District of Columbia one-third, and the State of Virginia one-third. I can not see, Mr. President, why that amendment should not be accepted by the Senator having the bill in charge.

It is stated that the Government of the United States owns some property in Alexandria County, Va. That is true, but the bridge will be more of an advantage to the people of Virginia than it will be to the District of Columbia. As long as the Government is to build a $4,000,000 bridge over the Potomac River near the Lincoln Memorial, it seems to me the Government of the United States should not be compelled to pay one-half the expense of building the bridge now proposed, and all of the expense of building the memorial bridge, while the State of Virginia is to pay nothing.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. Mr. President, will the Senator allow me to ask him a question?

Mr. SMOOT. Certainly.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. What is the necessity for the other bridge if we build this one? What occasion is there for another?

Mr. SMOOT. Well, Mr. President, I suppose it is to be the memorial bridge that has been insisted upon by the Senators of Virginia; and I understand that sufficient sentiment has been created in Congress so that it is going to be built.

Mr. OVERMAN. It is not to be a traffic bridge.

Mr. SMOOT. No. As the Senator from North Carolina suggests, it is not to be a traffic bridge. Of course, the railroads or the interurban lines will not be allowed to pass over that bridge. The name suggests the purpose of the bridge.

Mr. SWANSON. Mr. President, in reference to the amendment offered by the Senator from Utah, in the first place it means, if passed, that this bridge will not be constructed. Secondly, there is no justice in it. About one-third of the land in Alexandria County, I think, is owned by the Government. The United States Government pays no taxes, county or State. Alexandria County is perpetually embarrassed to keep its roads in order. All that it has ever asked of this Government was to improve its own roads through its own property, which the Government has repeatedly refused to do. Now, how can you expect the people of this county to pay taxes to build a bridge when the Government, which owns about one-third of the entire property in the county, does not pay a cent of taxes?

This is a bridge built largely for the benefit of the Government property at Fort Myer and to afford access to the 1,500 acres of land which the Government owns in Alexandria County. The law does not permit the State of Virginia to build bridges. These bridges are built by the counties. Here is a county adjoining Washington in which about one-third of the property pays no taxes for any purpose—State, local, or otherwise—and that condition makes it an absolute act of justice that this bridge should be constructed by the United States Government.

The railroads pay twelve or fifteen thousand dollars a year, one-half a cent on every passenger that comes over either way, which amounts to about $15,000 a year. That is paid by the citizens coming in and going out of Washington every day.

It seems to me that it is but right and proper that this bill should be passed as it stands. It has been reported unanimously by the Commerce Committee and passed unanimously in the House. All of these bridges, I think, that have been built to Alexandria County have been paid for half by the Government and half by the District of Columbia, because the Government pays no taxes, and it owns about one-third of all the property there. It is not a property in which there is any profit to the State of Virginia. It is used mostly for ornamental purposes. The land is utilized for parks; and anyone can see how a county is embarrassed when a large part of the nearest property in it to Washington—its most valuable property—is free of taxes.

Furthermore, as I have said, there is no law that would permit the State of Virginia to build bridges in the counties. These bridges are built by the counties themselves. It would be an act of injustice for this Government to take more than one-third of the property of Alexandria County and pay no taxes on it and then refuse to construct a bridge there. If it paid taxes, they would more than pay for this bridge.

Mr. WEEKS. Mr. President, before the Senator takes his seat may I ask him a question?

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Virginia yield to the Senator from Massachusetts?

Mr. SWANSON. I do.

Mr. WEEKS. I wish to ask the Senator if it is not a fact that the Government constructed the military road from the end of Chain Bridge to Arlington Cemetery, and if the Government did not construct a road from the village across the river at the end of the Aqueduct Bridge to Fort Myer?

Mr. SWANSON. After a long time we induced the Government to construct roads through it own property recently. Up to that time the roads had been constructed to the Government property, and the Government did not construct roads through its own property. There are sections of the Government property now through which no roads have been constructed. It is impossible to get the Government to do it, and it pays no taxes. I want to say that if there is any county or section of this country that has a hard time, it is Alexandria County, with the Government owning about one-third of the land and paying no taxes.

Mr. WEEKS. Mr. President, one more question. Is it true that the military road from the end of the Chain Bridge to the Arlington Cemetery is entirely through Government property?

Mr. SWANSON. I think it is entirely through Government property. Where does the Senator say?

Mr. WEEKS. From the end of the Chain Bridge.

Mr. SWANSON. The Chain Bridge down below here? I think the Government owns nearly all that property for its experimental farm, and so forth.

Mr. WEEKS. How about the road from the village across the river, at the end of the Aqueduct Bridge, to Fort Myer?

Mr. SWANSON. I think the Government owns up to the bridge—all of that property except the town, and it has a way through there. The town it does not own, but I think it owns to the other side of the bridge, if I am not mistaken.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. There is just a short distance there that the Government does not own.

Mr. SWANSON. Alexandria County is a very small county, and anybody can see how a county is embarrassed with large Government properties in it paying no taxes, either local, State, or otherwise.

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President, the Senator complains of the amount of property owned by the Government within Alexandria County that does not pay any taxes, and claims that one-third of the land in that county is owned by the Government of the United States, and that for this reason the Government ought to build this bridge and also build the public roads in that county. Why, Mr. President, we have States in the West in which the Government holds 79 per cent of the lands within the State.

Mr. BORAH. Eighty-three per cent.

Mr. SMOOT. Yes; and, as the Senator says, 83 per cent. It does not pay a cent of taxes, nor does it help build the State roads. It seems to me unjust for the Government of the United States to be compelled to pay half of the expense and the District of Columbia the other half for building a bridge across the Potomac River to assist the people of Virginia to reach the District of Columbia.

Mr. SWANSON. I should like to say, if the Senator will permit me, that this question as to the pro rata division of this expense as to the amount of property has been examined by committees; it has been looked into, and the committees have been unanimous in reporting in the case of bills of this kind for Alexandria County that this division is just and right.

Mr. NELSON. Mr. President, will the Senator yield to me?

Mr. SMOOT. I yield to the Senator from Minnesota.

Mr. NELSON. I want to say that this bridge bill has never been considered by the full Committee on Commerce. I am a member of that committee and have attended every meeting that has been called. We have a bridge subcommittee, and where a bill comes back from the War Department it goes to that subcommittee and is reported by it. The Senator from Texas [Mr. SHEPPARD] has undoubtedly reported this bill from that subcommittee; but we have never had before the full Committee on Commerce a consideration of this bill, and I was somewhat surprised to see it reported and put on the calendar.

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President, my amendment simply provides that the State of Virginia shall pay one-third of the expense. One-third of the property in the county belongs to the Government. All I ask is that the State shall pay one third of the expense of building the bridge and that the Government of the United States shall pay one third; the District of Columbia will pay the other third; and it seems to me it is nothing but fair that that division of the expense of building the bridge should be made.

Mr. SMITH of South Carolina. Mr. President, will the Senator from Utah allow me to ask him a question?

Mr. SMOOT. Yes.

Mr. SMITH of South Carolina. How was the present bridge built? Under what system or plan was the present bridge constructed?

Mr. SMOOT. I suppose it was built under the half-and-half plan, although I will say frankly to the Senator that I have not examined that matter, and I will not say positively.

Mr. SMITH of Arizona. Mr. President——

Mr. SMOOT. I yield to the Senator from Arizona.

JOINT MEETING OF THE TWO HOUSES.

The VICE PRESIDENT (at 12 o'clock and 50 minutes p. m.). The time has arrived at which, in accordance with the concurrent resolution of the two Houses, the Senate will proceed to the Hall of the House of Representatives to listen to the address of the President of the United States.

The Senate, preceded by the Vice President and the Secretary, and headed by the Sergeant at Arms, proceeded to the Hall of the House of Representatives.

At 1 o'clock and 20 minutes p. m. the Senate returned to its Chamber, and the Vice President resumed the chair.

ADDRESS OF THE PRESIDENT (H. DOC. NO. 1034).

The address of the President of the United States, this day delivered at the joint meeting of the two Houses of Congress, is as follows:

Gentlemen of the Congress, a situation has arisen in the foreign relations of the country of which it is my plain duty to inform you very frankly.

It will be recalled that in February, 1915, the Imperial German Government announced its intention to treat the waters surrounding Great Britain and Ireland as embraced within the seat of war and to destroy all merchant ships owned by its enemies that might be found within any part of that portion of the high seas, and that it warned all vessels, of neutral as well as of belligerent ownership, to keep out of the waters it had thus proscribed or else enter them at their peril. The Government of the United States earnestly protested. It took the position that such a policy could not be pursued without the practical certainty of gross and palpable violations of the law of nations, particularly if submarine craft were to be employed as its instruments, inasmuch as the rules prescribed by that law, rules founded upon principles of humanity and established for the protection of the lives of non-combatants at sea, could not in the nature of the case be observed by such vessels. It based its protest on the ground that persons of neutral nationality and vessels of neutral ownership would be exposed to extreme and intolerable risks, and that no right to close any part of the high seas against their use or to expose them to such risks could lawfully be asserted by any belligerent government. The law of nations in these matters, upon which the Government of the United States based its protest, is not of recent origin or founded upon merely arbitrary principles set up by convention. It is based, on the contrary, upon manifest and imperative principles of humanity and has long been established with the approval and by the express assent of all civilized nations.

Notwithstanding the earnest protest of our Government, the Imperial German Government at once proceeded to carry out the policy it had announced. It expressed the hope that the dangers involved, at any rate the dangers to neutral vessels, would be reduced to a minimum by the instructions which it had issued to its submarine commanders, and assured the Government of the United States that it would take every possible precaution both to respect the rights of neutrals and to safeguard the lives of non-combatants.

What has actually happened in the year which has since elapsed has shown that those hopes were not justified, those assurances insusceptible of being fulfilled. In pursuance of the policy of submarine warfare against the commerce of its adversaries, thus announced and entered upon by the Imperial German Government in despite of the solemn protest of this Government, the commanders of German undersea vessels have attacked merchant ships with greater and greater activity, not only upon the high seas surrounding Great Britain and Ireland but wherever they could encounter them, in a way that has grown more and more ruthless, more and more indiscriminate as the months have gone by, less and less observant of restraints of any kind; and have delivered their attacks without compunction against vessels of every nationality and bound upon every sort of errand. Vessels of neutral ownership, even vessels of neutral ownership bound from neutral port to neutral port, have been destroyed along with vessels of belligerent ownership in constantly increasing numbers. Sometimes the merchantman attacked has been warned and summoned to surrender before being fired on or torpedoed; sometimes passengers or crews have been vouchsafed the poor security of being allowed to take to the ship's boats before she was sent to the bottom. But again and again no warning has been given, no escape even to the ship's boats allowed to those on board. What this Government foresaw must happen has happened. Tragedy has followed tragedy on the seas in such fashion, with such attendant circumstances, as to make it grossly evident that warfare of such a sort, if warfare it be, can not be carried on without the most palpable violation of the dictates alike of right and of humanity. Whatever the disposition and intention of the Imperial German Government, it has manifestly proved impossible for it to keep such methods of attack upon the commerce of its enemies within the bounds set by either the reason or the heart of mankind.

In February of the present year the Imperial German Government informed this Government and the other neutral governments of the world that it had reason to believe that the Government of Great Britain had armed all merchant vessels of British ownership and had given them secret orders to attack any submarine of the enemy they might encounter upon the seas, and that the Imperial German Government felt justified in the circumstances in treating all armed merchantmen of belligerent ownership as auxiliary vessels of war, which it would have the right to destroy without warning. The law of nations has long recognized the right of merchantmen to carry arms for protection and to use them to repel attack, though to use them, in such circumstances, at their own risk; but the Imperial German Government claimed the right to set these understandings aside in circumstances which it deemed extraordinary. Even the terms in which it announced its purpose thus still further to relax the restraints it had previously professed its willingness and desire to put upon the operation of its submarines carried the plain implication that at least vessels which were not armed would still be exempt from destruction without warning and that personal safety would be accorded their passengers and crews; but even that limitation, if it was ever practicable to observe it, has in fact constituted no check at all upon the destruction of ships of every sort.

Again and again the Imperial German Government has given this Government its solemn assurances that at least passenger ships would not be thus dealt with, and yet it has again and again permitted its undersea commanders to disregard those assurances with entire impunity. Great liners like the Lusitania and the Arabic and mere ferryboats like the Sussex have been attacked without a moment's warning, sometimes before they had even become aware that they were in the presence of an armed vessel of the enemy, and the lives of non-combatants, passengers and crew have been sacrificed wholesale, in a manner which the Government of the United States cannot but regard as wanton and without the slightest color of justification. No limit of any kind has in fact been set to the indiscriminate pursuit and destruction of merchantmen of all kinds and nationalities within the waters, constantly extending in area, where these operations have been carried on; and the roll of Americans who have lost their lives on ships thus attacked and destroyed has grown month by month until the ominous toll has mounted into the hundreds.

One of the latest and most shocking instances of this method of warfare was that of the destruction of the French cross-Channel steamer Sussex. It must stand forth, as the sinking of the steamer Lusitania did, as so singularly tragical and unjustifiable as to constitute a truly terrible example of the inhumanity of submarine warfare as the commanders of German vessels have for the past twelvemonth been conducting it. If this instance stood alone, some explanation, some disavowal by the German Government, some evidence of criminal mistake or wilful disobedience on the part of the commander of the vessel that fired the torpedo might be sought or entertained; but unhappily it does not stand alone. Recent events make the conclusion inevitable that it is only one instance, even though it be one of the most extreme and distressing instances, of the spirit and method of warfare which the Imperial German Government has mistakenly adopted, and which from the first exposed that Government to the reproach of thrusting all neutral rights aside in pursuit of its immediate objects.

The Government of the United States has been very patient. At every stage of this distressing experience of tragedy after tragedy in which its own citizens were involved it has sought to be restrained from any extreme course of action or of protest by a thoughtful consideration of the extraordinary circumstances of this unprecedented war, and actuated in all that it said or did by the sentiments of genuine friendship which the people of the United States have always entertained and continue to entertain towards the German nation. It has of course accepted the successive explanations and assurances of the Imperial German Government as given in entire sincerity and good faith, and has hoped, even against hope, that it would prove to be possible for the German Government so to order and control the acts of its naval commanders as to square its policy with the principles of humanity as embodied in the law of nations. It has been willing to wait until the significance of the facts became absolutely unmistakable and susceptible of but one interpretation.

That point has now unhappily been reached. The facts are susceptible of but one interpretation. The Imperial German Government has been unable to put any limits or restraints upon its warfare against either freight or passenger ships. It has therefore become painfully evident that the position which this Government took at the very outset is inevitable, namely, that the use of submarines for the destruction of an enemy's commerce is of necessity, because of the very character of the vessels employed and the very methods of attack which their employment of course involves, incompatible with the principles of humanity, the long established and incontrovertible rights of neutrals, and the sacred immunities of non-combatants.

I have deemed it my duty, therefore, to say to the Imperial German Government that if it is still its purpose to prosecute relentless and indiscriminate warfare against vessels of commerce by the use of submarines, notwithstanding the now demonstrated impossibility of conducting that warfare in accordance with what the Government of the United States must consider the sacred and indisputable rules of international law and the universally recognized dictates of humanity, the Government of the United States is at last forced to the conclusion that there is but one course it can pursue; and that unless the Imperial German Government should now immediately declare and effect an abandonment of its present methods of warfare against passenger and freight carrying vessels this Government can have no choice but to sever diplomatic relations with the Government of the German Empire altogether.

This decision I have arrived at with the keenest regret; the possibility of the action contemplated I am sure all thoughtful Americans will look forward to with unaffected reluctance. But we cannot forget that we are in some sort and by the force of circumstances the responsible spokesman of the rights of humanity, and that we can not remain silent while those rights seem in process of being swept utterly away in the maelstrom of this terrible war. We owe it to a due regard for our own rights as a nation, to our sense of duty as a representative of the rights of neutrals the world over, and to a just conception of the rights of mankind to take this stand now with the utmost solemnity and firmness.

I have taken it, and taken it in the confidence that it will meet with your approval and support. All sober-minded men must unite in hoping that the Imperial German Government, which has in other circumstances stood as the champion of all that we are now contending for in the interest of humanity, may recognize the justice of our demands and meet them in the spirit in which they are made.

PRINTING OF THE PRESIDENT'S ADDRESS (H. DOC. NO. 1034).

Mr. STONE. Mr. President, I ask that the address of the President of the United States this day delivered to the joint session of the two Houses of Congress be referred to the Committee on Foreign Relations for consideration, and that 5,000 additional copies be printed for the use of the Senate document room.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Without objection, it is so ordered.

THE AQUEDUCT BRIDGE.

The Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, resumed the consideration of the bill (H. R. 759) to provide for the removal of what is now known as the Aqueduct Bridge, across the Potomac River, and for the building of a bridge in place thereof.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is on the amendment proposed by the Senator from Utah [Mr. SMOOT], on which he has the floor.

Mr. SHEPPARD. Mr. President——

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Utah yield to the Senator from Texas?

Mr. SMOOT. I yield.

Mr. SHEPPARD. Mr. President, I want to state that I polled the Commerce Committee to secure a majority of signatures to a favorable report of the bill for the construction of a new Aqueduct Bridge across the Potomac River. I did so, because I thought speedy action on the bill was absolutely necessary. Since 1910 there have been repeated reports from the engineers of the War Department condemning the present bridge and pronouncing it unsafe for human life and travel. It was stated in the House debate on the bill that unless speedy action should be taken some calamity might occur which would be an everlasting and a sad reflection upon the Congress. For that reason I pursued the very usual course that is followed here in the Senate Chamber and secured the signatures of a majority of the members of the Commerce Committee in favor of reporting the bill. I did not have the opportunity of seeing the Senator from Minnesota [Mr. NELSON], or I should have presented the measure to him. I explained it, however, to those members of the committee whom I saw.

As to whether the State of Virginia should pay a part of the cost of this bridge is another question. The land on the Virginia side belongs to the Federal Government; it does not belong to the State of Virginia. If the State of Virginia pays a part of the cost of the bridge, it will necessarily want a part of the control. The bridge has some strategic significance; it connects Fort Myer, which is one of our principal Army posts, with a large section of country to the north and east. There are many reasons which would make it advisable for the Government to retain complete control of the bridge. I say, however, that this is entirely another question.

I merely wanted to explain to the Senate why it was that the bill was reported without being submitted to a formal meeting of the Commerce Committee.

Mr. GALLINGER. Mr. President, will the Senator from Utah permit me to make a statement?

Mr. SMOOT. I will.

Mr. GALLINGER. I want to call attention to a custom that has grown up in the Senate of late years, and that is of ignoring the meetings of committees, of polling the membership of committees, getting a majority—a bare majority—and then reporting a bill. This is not an isolated case. Bills are brought to my desk every day, and I am asked to attach my signature to the back of them. I ordinarily do it, as a matter of courtesy, but it is a very bad practice. If bringing this matter somewhat prominently before the Senate will tend to cure that practice, a very good work will have been done.

This is a very important bill. It is not like the bridge bill which a Senator ordinarily reports for the building of a bridge across an inconsequential stream somewhere. This is a matter, certainly, which ought to have been considered by the Committee on Commerce as a whole.

I have had charge of some bills similar to this—for this matter of rebuilding the Aqueduct Bridge is not a new matter—and such bills used to be referred to the Committee on the District of Columbia; but I, as chairman of that committee, never thought of doing otherwise than calling the full committee together to give the bills consideration.

Mr. SHEPPARD. Mr. President, the Senator from New Hampshire knows that it has been almost impossible to secure meetings of committees during the last two or three months.

Mr. GALLINGER. That has seemed to be the case during the past two or three years. We find that condition existing as to all our committees; but the leaders on the other side of the Chamber ought to see that such a bad practice is speedily put an end to. I attend committee meetings, but I frequently find that there are no quorums present, and my time is wasted. Nonattendance on committee meetings seems to be almost universal of late.

Mr. CLARKE of Arkansas. Mr. President, will the Senator from Utah permit me to make a brief statement about this matter?

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. WALSH in the chair). Does the Senator from Utah yield to the Senator from Arkansas?

Mr. SMOOT. I do.

Mr. CLARKE of Arkansas. Mr. President, the practice of the Committee on Commerce is not quite so loose as one would suppose to be the case from some of the statements which have been made. Very few bills are reported by that committee by polling the individual members of the committee. There seem to be exceptional circumstances that justified that practice in this case. When the matter was called to my attention, I said, if the consent of the entire membership of the committee could be obtained, it would be a satisfactory way of reporting the bill on the floor. It never occurred to me as a possibility that the bill would be brought back here without having been presented to the Senator from Minnesota [Mr. NELSON], who is the former chairman of that committee and the ranking opposition member at the present time. I was advised that the entire membership of the committee was favorable to the passage of the bill with certain amendments, and on that condition I consented to its being reported to the Senate.

Any member of the committee has a right to object to the committee being polled, and if a single member of the Committee on Commerce now says that he had no opportunity for considering the matter, it would be my pleasure, and I am sure it would be the pleasure of the Senate, to have the bill recommitted.

Mr. SHEPPARD. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Utah yield to the Senator from Texas?

Mr. SMOOT. I yield.

Mr. SHEPPARD. Mr. President, the advice which the honorable chairman of the committee speaks of did not come from me. I did not advise him as to the matter.

Mr. CLARKE of Arkansas. That is true. I have not had any communication whatever from the Senator from Texas, and any statement I made was not intended to include him.

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President, I want to emphasize what has been said here by the Senator from New Hampshire [Mr. GALLINGER] in regard to polling committees. I suppose every Senator knows that I absolutely refuse to indorse a bill by polling a committee when any Senator comes to me for the purpose of getting my signature to it without the consideration of a committee. I never have believed in polling committees, and I never will indorse a bill in that way in order that it may be reported to the Senate.

In view of the statement made by the Senator from Arkansas [Mr. CLARKE] I think I had better not say anything more about the bill until I know whether the Senator from Minnesota desires to object to its consideration and to move its recommittal, because, if it is to be recommitted to the committee, I would prefer to say nothing more at this time.

Mr. NELSON. Mr. President, without intending to reflect upon or criticize anybody in connection with this matter, I desire to say that this bill has received no consideration before the committee at any meeting which I have attended. We have a subcommittee on bridges, to which are referred the ordinary bridge bills. That committee sends such bills to the War Department for any suggestions the department may care to make regarding them; and, where there is no objection to them, the committee reports them to the Senate. Most of the bridge bills, in fact all of them, are simply to give authority to build bridges over streams.

Mr. SMOOT. And they involve no expense to the Government.

Mr. NELSON. They involve no expense to the Government. This is an entirely different case from that of an ordinary bridge bill. This is a bill to construct a new bridge and to appropriate something over $1,000,000 for that purpose. I suggest that a bill of this character and importance ought to be considered by the full committee; and to that end it should be recommitted.

I desire the Senator from Texas, as I have said, to understand that I am not criticizing him. I can readily see how the report happened to be made. I myself have sometimes foolishly, when an appeal has been made to me—although I have always felt reluctant about doing it—acceded to requests for the reporting of a bill without bringing it before the committee; but this is a bill of such transcendent importance, involving, as it does, a good many hundred thousand dollars, and affecting the State of Virginia as well as the District of Columbia and the railroad companies, that I think the bill ought to go back to the committee for full consideration, and so I move that the bill be recommitted to the Committee on Commerce.

Mr. SWANSON. Mr. President, I recognize that if the Senator makes a point of order against the bill, that it has not been reported by the committee, except by polling its members, the point of order lies, and that, on the objection of any Senator, the bill will go back to the committee. I desire to say, however, that I think this matter ought to be acted upon speedily. Because of the condition of the bridge an accident is likely to occur there at any time. The bridge has been repeatedly condemned since 1910. Soon the street cars will be entirely prohibited from going over the bridge and thereby a great many people will be discommoded. All I ask is that, if the bill is recommitted to the committee, it be considered and acted on promptly by them and disposed of speedily by the Senate.

Mr. SHEPPARD. Mr. President, let me add here that only one street car is allowed on the bridge at a time, and the tonnage which may be transported across the bridge at one time is limited to a very small amount. As has been stated by the Senator from Virginia, an accident may happen on that bridge at any time.

Mr. NELSON. Mr. President, I want to say to the Senator from Virginia, if he will allow me, that, so far as I am concerned, I will not delay the bill a moment. I simply want it to receive full consideration before the committee, and I will join with the friends of the bill in expediting its consideration. I have no purpose of delaying it.

Mr. SWANSON. Mr. President, I have no objection to the bill being recommitted.

Mr. NEWLANDS. Mr. President, before this bill appropriating $1,000,000 for the construction of a bridge across the Potomac to Virginia goes back to the committee, as I assume it will, I wish to call attention to two considerations: One is that this bill contains no provision that the plans shall be submitted to and approved by the National Fine Arts Commission as to their artistic features; and the other is that half of the cost of this bridge can not justly be imposed upon the District of Columbia, but it should be considered entirely as a national project.

Mr. President, the work is now going on of developing Washington on the lines or plans originated by Washington and L'Enfant and elaborated by the so-called Park Commission, with the aid of the most distinguished architects, artists, and sculptors in the country, and perhaps in the world. Those plans were worked out through a committee of the Senate—the Committee on the District of Columbia, headed by the then Senator from Michigan, Mr. McMillan—and the plans were paid for out of the contingent fund of the Senate. Unfortunately an antagonism arose between the Senate and the House with reference to those plans, not regarding their excellence, but over questions of authority, and that contention has lasted until this day. The plans have not been formally approved, and the artistic development of Washington has been maintained, not in an orderly way under established law but by the constant watchfulness and contention of those in the country who are devoted to its artistic development.

Among other things that have been accomplished by this artistic sentiment has been the creation of a National Fine Arts Commission, composed of the most distinguished artists, architects, and sculptors in the country, acting in a public-spirited way, whose duties, although most onerous and without compensation, have been most intelligently and conscientiously performed. The appropriation for that commission, originally $10,000, has been reduced to $5,000, and I am told that as a result of certain antagonisms created by that commission in the exercise of the duty put upon it by Congress and the President they are seriously considering in another body the denial of any appropriation whatever. Without sufficient funds, with an inadequate force of assistants, that commission has struggled on, devoting a large portion of the time of its members to a constantly increasing work, the importance of which can not be overestimated, although it is not easily brought to the attention of or understood by the public.

There is a disposition upon the part of officials connected with some of the executive departments to escape from the jurisdiction of that commission, imposed by the law of Congress and by the Executive order of the President. The departments become restive under the restraints of the canons of art imposed by this highly competent commission, and recently the Treasury Department, having failed to comply with the law regarding the submission of the plans for a heat and power plant to this commission, having disobeyed the law, through what it claimed to be an inadvertence, entered into a contract for the construction of a building under plans prepared by it, and then, when it was sought by a Member of the Senate by a resolution presented in this body to give Congress the opportunity to inquire into the facts and to change its own mind with reference to a matter which had originated through the Appropriations Committee of another body and without the initiative of the committee having jurisdiction, every power of the Treasury Department, every influence, every activity was exercised to prevent Congress from availing itself of the opportunity of securing the information that would enable it to act intelligently upon the subject. That act of insubordination is fruitful of results, and will be fruitful of results. Executive officers, with no high conception of art, eager to carry through their plans, will seek to evade the restraints imposed by law through the Art Commission.

I do not know whether the bridge in question comes within the exact terms of the act of Congress creating the Commission of Fine Arts, or whether it comes within the exact terms of the Executive order, made by the President of the United States, regarding the submission of plans of public structures to this commission. I have not that order before me; and therefore I think it wise in this bill to see to it that these plans, so far as their artistic features are concerned, are submitted to this able and capable commission.

Mr. President, the development of this water front is one of the most important questions relating to the development of Washington. Throughout America our water fronts have been neglected. Throughout America our water fronts are examples of hideousness and frightfulness, instead of examples of art and beauty, as they are in every other civilized country. Features that nature has provided not only for use but to charm the eye of man should always receive the highest decoration in aid of nature, and we are in danger of neglecting this in Washington.

Go to Dusseldorf-on-the-Rhine, go to Munich, go to Dresden, go all along the Danube and the Volga, and see the water fronts there with their wharves and bridges and structures all harmoniously designed to impress the eye as well as to meet the requirements of the utilities.

Mr. President, we have an opportunity here in Washington to present a model for this entire country; and the art societies and the architectural associations and the federated art associations are looking to Washington for the models which they will hold up in their respective communities to be followed. We have already invaded one of the most important water fronts in Washington, the water front that stretches from the Bureau of Engraving and Printing down to the War College, a distance of a mile. In view of the mangy, neglected, rotting wharves and rotting structures along that water front, it is no wonder that when the Appropriations Committee of the House located that power plant they thought that any structure would be an ornament to it. They did not realize, however, that this Commission of Arts had in their minds a beautiful construction rivaling those of the Seine or the Thames or the Rhine or the Volga or the Danube, and that opposite this beautiful island park which we are constructing, with its stadium, with its place for memorials of distinguished Americans, was to be this water-front construction, a complete setting to the picture, the frame of the picture itself. So, failing to exercise their imagination, they authorized the structure to go up in that place; and one of the things that the art societies of the country fear is that that building being put up there will discourage and prevent the development of the rest of the water front upon the lines pointed out by the Art Commission.

Mr. NELSON. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Nevada yield to the Senator from Minnesota?

Mr. NEWLANDS. Certainly.

Mr. NELSON. Has the Senator any objection to having this bill referred back to the Committee on Commerce?

Mr. NEWLANDS. I will be through in just a moment.

Mr. President, I therefore wish to call the attention of the Committee on Commerce, of which I am not a member, to this important feature and to urge them to see to it that this structure, costing a million dollars, is submitted to competent expert authority with reference to its artistic features.

Mr. BRANDEGEE. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Nevada yield to the Senator from Connecticut?

Mr. NEWLANDS. Certainly.

Mr. BRANDEGEE. When the question of the location of this power plant was before the Senate the last time the Senator from Nevada referred, as he has just done, to the violation of some law because it had not been submitted to the Art Commission. At that time I stated that, in my opinion, if the law had been violated—if there was a law requiring that before it was located it should be submitted to the Art Commission and that law had not been complied with—there was no valid contract in existence; whereupon the senior Senator from Virginia [Mr. MARTIN], the chairman of the Appropriations Committee, read from the statutes the act authorizing the erection of this power plant, and it seemed to me as he read it that there was nothing in the act that required it to be submitted to the Art Commission.

I readily agree with the Senator that the Executive order was violated in that case if I understand the facts; but the Senator has again to-day stated that the law was violated. Can the Senator cite to me the law to which he refers as having been violated?

Mr. NEWLANDS. It is not before me.

Mr. BRANDEGEE. Is the Senator sure that there is such a law?

Mr. NEWLANDS. Yes; I examined the law after the discussion which I had with the Senator from Virginia to which the Senator refers.

Mr. GALLINGER. Mr. President, I have the law before me, and if the Senator will permit me I will read from it.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Nevada yield to the Senator from New Hampshire?

Mr. NEWLANDS. Yes.

Mr. GALLINGER. It is the act approved May 17, 1910. It provides for a commission of "seven well-qualified judges of the fine arts, who shall be appointed by the President," and specifies that—

> It shall be the duty of such commission to advise upon the location of statues, fountains, and monuments in the public squares, streets, and parks in the District of Columbia, and upon the selection of models for statues, fountains, and monuments erected under the authority of the United States and upon the selection of artists for the execution of the same.

Mr. NEWLANDS. There is also a provision there giving the President certain authority.

Mr. GALLINGER. Not in the bill, I think.

Mr. NEWLANDS. My recollection is that there is a provision of law giving the commission jurisdiction of such questions of art as were submitted to it by the President, and that an Executive order was made, pursuant to that, requiring every executive official in Washington to submit the plan of any public building whose construction is contemplated in the District of Columbia to the Art Commission before construction is commenced.

Mr. BRANDEGEE. I can readily understand that any law that gave the President authority, by proclamation or an Executive order, to require a thing in his discretion might be a valid law, and a proclamation issued by the President in pursuance of it might have the force of law. I am in thorough sympathy with the Senator from Nevada in what he says, not only about this bridge, but about the power plant and its location. I simply desire to call the Senator's attention, however, to the fact that I do not think he strengthens his case any by basing it upon a violation of law unless he is certain there has been a violation of law.

I will go further and say that if the law does not require such structures as public bridges and structures that the Government pays for in the District of Columbia to be submitted to some commission of experts, so that they may be objects of beauty, or, if not, that at least they may not be eyesores and hideous objects, I am in favor of passing such a law.

Mr. NEWLANDS. I realize what the Senator says—that unless the action of the executive official was clearly against the law, it does not strengthen our case to rely upon that. My recollection is that the law provided for the submission of any question of art by the President to this Art Commission, and my recollection was that, pursuant to that, he made an order. I will state, however, that, with reference to this particular matter, that phase of the question has entirely disappeared; because, as I pointed out to the Senate at the time we were debating the amendment to the urgent deficiency bill on this subject, if Congress, after its attention was called to this act of omission or inadvertence upon the part of the Secretary of the Treasury, voted an appropriation for the completion of a building the plans of which had not been submitted to this commission, it ratified the contract, and therefore the contract itself would not be illegal.

Mr. GALLINGER. I will say, if the Senator will permit me——

Mr. NEWLANDS. Certainly.

Mr. GALLINGER. That if there is any statute covering that matter—that is, giving the President authority to do certain things—it must have been a supplementary statute to the one I have quoted, and I have not any knowledge of it. Perhaps it exists.

Mr. NEWLANDS. I will look it up, and if I find I am in error I will so state.

Mr. GALLINGER. The statute of 1910 gives no such authority.

Mr. NEWLANDS. There is but one other thing, and that is with reference to the imposition of half of the cost upon the District of Columbia.

It seems to me perfectly clear that if the cost is to be apportioned at all, Virginia ought to stand its share as well as the District of Columbia and the Federal Government. I do not believe, however, that the cost should be apportioned at all. I believe that this is purely a national project. It relates to interstate commerce. The Federal Government has the absolute control over these rivers.

Mr. BRANDEGEE. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Nevada yield to the Senator from Connecticut?

Mr. NEWLANDS. Certainly.

Mr. BRANDEGEE. Does the Senator from Nevada really think that the Senator from Virginia, who is scratching his head in anxiety as the Senator refers to this horrible thing, would want this bridge if his State had to pay anything toward its construction?

Mr. NEWLANDS. I do not think it would be fair to impose part of the cost of this bridge on Virginia, nor do I think it fair to impose part of the cost upon the District of Columbia. As the Senator states, the bridge is being constructed, in the main, for the convenience of the Government. The Government owns Arlington on the other side; it owns a military post there, and it must have some means of ready communication with the property which it owns and which it conducts. As a matter of convenience to itself, it is building this bridge. I am aware that it is the custom to place a portion of the cost of almost everything that is designed or devised either in or near the District of Columbia upon the District of Columbia; but this is certainly not within the District of Columbia. Only one end of the bridge, I presume, is in the District of Columbia. There seems to be a constantly increasing disposition to add to the burdens of the District of Columbia.

I have some familiarity with this District, and I state that for the past three or four years the assessments in the District of Columbia have been steadily raised so that they have reached a percentage beyond that of any other community with which I am familiar.

Mr. GALLINGER. Mr. President, those assessments are made by officials of the District of Columbia.

Mr. NEWLANDS. Yes.

Mr. GALLINGER. We are not responsible for that.

Mr. NEWLANDS. Yes; but something can be said as to the source of responsibility. I do not say Congress is responsible for it, but it has been done. There are numerous properties in this District that can not be sold to-day for the amount of the assessment, although the assessment is nominally only two-thirds of the real value. There are numerous instances of this kind, I am told; and I think the Senate Committee on Commerce might well consider whether the District of Columbia should not escape from the burden of this project as well as the State of Virginia, and whether it should not be placed in its entirety upon the General Government, whose interest it serves, and not upon the District government, which has neither jurisdiction over nor ownership of it.

Mr. SWANSON. Mr. President, I have no objection to this bridge bill being referred back to the committee, as under the rules of the Senate when a bill is reported from a committee on the basis of a poll, if an objection is made, it is not considered a proper report from the committee, and must be referred back.

I should like to say in this connection, however, that I hope this bill will be promptly reported. Since 1910 this bridge has been condemned. It is unsafe to go over it. If a catastrophe happens there, the responsibility is with this Congress and not with others. If this bridge becomes condemned and can not be used at all, thousands of people will be deprived of all means of coming in and out of Washington.

As to the State of Virginia paying a part of the expense of building this bridge, there is no justice whatever in it. The control of this bridge is left absolutely to the Secretary of War for war purposes, for an Army post, and it is an absolute piece of folly to presume that Virginia or the county of Alexandria will pay a part of the cost of a bridge as to which it has nothing to do with the plans, the cost, the control, the repairs, or anything else. The Government has control of the river to the low-water mark on the other side. The bridge connects Government property, and there is absolutely no justice in expecting the county of Alexandria to pay part of the cost when the Government owns, I think, nearly one-third of the property in that county—I can not be positive—and pays no taxes on it. The railroads pay about $12,000 or $15,000 per annum, which is nearly one-third of the maintenance of this bridge, taken out of passengers.

As to whether the Government and the District of Columbia should share this expense between themselves, that is for these two parties to determine; but it is a Government bridge, constructed by the Government, controlled by the Government, and no one would think of not letting it be under the control of the Secretary of War.

I simply ask the Committee on Commerce to report the bill promptly.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. In the absence of objection, the motion of the Senator from Minnesota prevails.

MESSAGE FROM THE HOUSE.

A message from the House of Representatives, by J. C. South, its Chief Clerk, announced that the House agrees to the report of the committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 11471) to amend an act entitled "An act to reduce tariff duties and to provide revenue for the Government, and for other purposes," approved October 3, 1913.

The message also announced that the House further insists upon its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate still in disagreement between the two Houses on the bill (H. R. 11471) to amend an act entitled "An act to reduce tariff duties and to provide revenue for the Government, and for other purposes," approved October 3, 1913, asks a further conference with the Senate on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses thereon, and had appointed Mr. KITCHIN, Mr. RAINEY, and Mr. FORDNEY managers at the further conference on the part of the House.

GOOD ROADS.

Mr. BANKHEAD. Mr. President, I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of House bill 7617, commonly known as the good-roads bill.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Alabama moves that the Senate proceed to the consideration of House bill 7617. Is there objection?

Mr. GALLINGER. Mr. President, I wish to ask the Senator if he can approximate the probable length of time that will be taken in the consideration of this bill?

Mr. BANKHEAD. I hope we shall be able to pass the bill perhaps to-day, certainly to-morrow.

Mr. GALLINGER. Within a day or two?

Mr. BANKHEAD. I shall make every effort to do that.

Mr. GALLINGER. Mr. President, we agreed to consider and complete two important bills recently by unanimous consent, and they have been disposed of. I have noticed in the press that a program of legislation has been laid out for Congress in another place, and I feel a little concerned to get information as to whether or not it is probable that that extensive program is to be carried out at this session of Congress.

I have done all I could up to the present time to hasten legislation, but if a program is to be made up for us, and we are to stick to it, that will keep us here until July next, I think we might just as well remain until December. While I presume the Senator has not the information I should like to secure from him, yet I do want to suggest to the Senator and to other Senators having in charge important measures of legislation that so far as I am concerned—and of course what I do accounts for little in this body—I am not going to distress myself to sit here day after day and submit myself to a great deal of inconvenience to hasten legislation and to make a quorum if we are going to be kept here until midsummer, because, as I have suggested, after July Washington is a pretty pleasant place to live in, and it would not hurt us any more perhaps to remain until December than it would to remain until July or August.

I did not expect the Senator to give me definite information on that point; but if we are to remain here, if it has been ordained that we shall remain here, if the fiat has gone forth that we are to remain here until we consider all the bills that we have had suggested to us from another place, then we ought to give very careful consideration to every measure that is before the Senate, and not have them pressed through under the whip and spur or perhaps agreed by unanimous consent that they should be legislated upon for the purpose of saving time.

Mr. BANKHEAD. Mr. President——

Mr. GALLINGER. This is a mere admonition.

Mr. BANKHEAD. I am very sorry indeed that I am unable to give the Senator from New Hampshire the information that he seeks. I do not know of any program that has been laid down, and I do not know that I would be informed if such a program had been laid down. I simply want to get the bill before the Senate. Both political parties are committed to it in their platforms.

I will say to the Senator from New Hampshire, if he would enter into a bargain with me that we could carry out, that no Senator should consume more time in discussing the bill than I shall do, we will pass it very soon. Do I understand that the bill is before the Senate?

Mr. GALLINGER. No; the motion has not been put.

I will make one further suggestion to the Senator. The bill the Senator has reported is a very different bill from the bill which came from the House of Representatives.

Mr. BANKHEAD. It is very different, I agree.

Mr. GALLINGER. It is very different. Personally I am strongly in favor of the bill the Senator reported as compared with the bill which came to us from another body.

I want to give one further word of admonition, if I may be permitted to do so, and that is, if the Senator's bill is passed in the form substantially in which it is reported, I trust when it goes to conference the Senator, with his well-known strong personality and influence, will see to it that we do not have a bill sent back to us from conference which provides for building dirt roads all over the country. If such a bill comes back, some considerable time will be consumed, I assure the Senator, if some of us are alive.

Mr. BANKHEAD. All I can say to the Senator on that point is that I am in favor of this bill; and I shall, of course, if it goes to conference, insist upon its main provisions, inasmuch as the Senate will have instructed me to do that when the bill has been passed.

Mr. GALLINGER. Mr. President, I think we ought to have a quorum before the motion is put. I suggest the absence of a quorum.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from New Hampshire suggests the absence of a quorum. The Secretary will call the roll.

The Secretary called the roll, and the following Senators answered to their names:

Ashurst	Harding	Myers	Smith, Md.
Bankhead	Hardwick	Nelson	Smith, Mich.
Beckham	Hitchcock	Newlands	Smoot
Borah	Hollis	Norris	Sutherland
Brady	Husting	O'Gorman	Swanson
Burleigh	James	Owen	Taggart
Chilton	Johnson, S. Dak.	Page	Thomas
Clapp	Jones	Phelan	Thompson
Clark, Wyo.	Kenyon	Pittman	Tillman
Clarke, Ark.	Kern	Poindexter	Townsend
Culberson	La Follette	Pomerene	Underwood
Cummins	Lane	Ransdell	Vardaman
Curtis	Lewis	Saulsbury	Wadsworth
Dillingham	Lippitt	Shafroth	Walsh
du Pont	Lodge	Sheppard	Weeks
Gallinger	McLean	Smith, Ariz.	Williams
Gronna	Martine, N. J.	Smith, Ga.	Works

Mr. CHILTON. I wish to announce the absence of my colleague [Mr. GOFF] on account of illness. I will let this announcement stand for the day.

Mr. KERN. I desire to announce the unavoidable absence of the senior Senator from Florida [Mr. FLETCHER]. He is detained on account of official business. This announcement may stand for the day.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. MYERS in the chair). Sixty-eight Senators have answered to the roll call. A quorum of the Senate is present. The question is on the motion——

Mr. BANKHEAD. I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of House bill 7617, commonly called the good-roads bill.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on the motion of the Senator from Alabama.

The motion was agreed to; and the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill (H. R. 7617) to provide that in order to promote agriculture, afford better facilities for rural transportation and marketing farm products, and encourage the development of a general system of improved highways, the Secretary of Agriculture, on behalf of the United States, shall in certain cases aid the States in the construction, improvement, and maintenance of roads which may be used in the transportation of interstate commerce, military supplies, or postal matter, which had been reported from the Committee on Post Offices and Post Roads with an amendment in the nature of a substitute.

Mr. BANKHEAD. I ask unanimous consent that the formal reading of the bill be dispensed with.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection?

Mr. BORAH. May I ask the Senator a question before we proceed with this matter?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Alabama yield to the Senator from Idaho?

Mr. BANKHEAD. I do.

Mr. BORAH. I presume we are all desirous of considering the measure as rapidly as it may be done, but I should like to know what the Senator's program is, because I have not had time to ascertain the details of the bill.

Mr. BANKHEAD. I, of course, expect that the bill will take the regular course in the Senate. It is before the Senate, subject to amendment and subject to debate, and I know of no way of limiting debate. Therefore I assume that it will necessarily take the course that bills always take in the Senate. It is the unfinished business, and I think we ought to be able to dispose of it in a day or two, or three at the outside. I have no disposition to hurry it through.

Mr. BORAH. Does the Senator expect to dispose of it to-day?

Mr. BANKHEAD. Of course I hope to. That is with the Senate.

Mr. BORAH. If the Senator hopes to, I hope he will not.

Mr. GALLINGER. But the Senator quite understands, if he will permit me, that hope deferred makes the heart sick.

Mr. BANKHEAD. Very often.

Mr. BORAH. This is an important measure; it has come from the committee, and I do not suppose that a dozen Senators outside of the committee have had time to study the details of the bill. I am very anxious, at least, to know something about it. It concerns our part of the country considerably. We are about 80 per cent under the control of the National Government, and I am anxious to know what the National Government is going to do toward taking care of its own particular property.

Mr. BANKHEAD. For the information of the Senator, I will say that when the bill was reported a copy of the bill and a copy of the report, which is somewhat voluminous and undertakes to explain every section of the bill, were laid on each Senator's desk. That was more than two weeks ago. Of course it is fair to assume that it was overlooked, but this morning a copy of the bill and report are again placed upon the desks of Senators.

Mr. BORAH. Precisely. When I came into the Chamber this morning I was greeted by the report and the bill. I do not know what the capacity of other Senators is, but I can not pass upon this kind of a measure by simply glancing at the front page of a report.

Mr. BANKHEAD. Nobody is insisting upon that.

Mr. BORAH. I do not care to delay the matter further than to say that I do not want to have it disposed of to-day or to-morrow.

Mr. BANKHEAD. As I said, that is with the Senate, of course.

Mr. WORKS. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Alabama yield to the Senator from California?

Mr. BANKHEAD. I do.

Mr. WORKS. Mr. President, I have made some efforts to inform myself about the bill. I read the report with a good deal of care and looked into the bill somewhat, as much as I could, engaged as we all have been within the last two or three weeks. I think it is due to the Senate that the Senator from Alabama should explain the provisions of the bill. I do not know how many Senators have read the report that has been made. It is a very ingenious one. It tries to meet every constitutional question that might be raised respecting it, and it involves some very important questions of law as well as of policy.

The bill involves the expenditure of $75,000,000 by the National Government to aid the States in the construction of roads within the States, not national roads, not interstate roads, but every possible highway within the States where the mails are carried, and, of course, the mails are carried over most of the roads in all the States. I think it is a very serious matter to enter upon a proposition to embark the Government in the expenditure of money for these purposes, and I think it is due from the Senator from Alabama to make a full explanation of the bill.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Alabama has asked unanimous consent that the formal reading of the bill be dispensed with. Is there objection to the request?

Mr. GALLINGER. And that it be read for amendment.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator may add that, if he wishes.

Mr. BANKHEAD. It may be read for amendment. It is open to amendment then.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Alabama incorporate in his request that it be read for amendment?

Mr. BANKHEAD. Yes.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senate has heard the request of the Senator from Alabama. Is there objection?

Mr. KENYON. As I understand it, that does not prevent the doing away with the reading of the bill by the Secretary.

Mr. BANKHEAD. Oh, no.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair understands that according to the request, if granted, the bill will be read by the Secretary for the purpose of having amendments offered.

Mr. BANKHEAD. The reason why I suggested that the formal reading of the bill should be dispensed with was that it would save two readings. It has to be read for amendment. I did not make the request with any purpose or intention of hurrying it at all. I thought perhaps it would save time.

Mr. NORRIS. Will the Senator yield?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Alabama yield to the Senator from Nebraska?

Mr. BANKHEAD. I do.

Mr. NORRIS. I have no objection to dispensing with the formal reading, but I do not like the form in which the request now appears.

Mr. VARDAMAN. If the Senator from Alabama will allow me——

Mr. BANKHEAD. In a moment. I have yielded to the Senator from Nebraska.

Mr. NORRIS. The request is now made, I understand, to have it read for amendment.

Mr. BANKHEAD. When it is read.

Mr. NORRIS. I do not want to get the Senate in a position where we would be precluded from offering amendments to the bill that we were not ready to present at the time of the reading. That is the only safeguard I wish to secure.

Mr. BANKHEAD. I withdraw my request.

Mr. VARDAMAN. I was going to suggest to the Senator from Alabama that he would save time by allowing the bill to be read.

Mr. BANKHEAD. I withdraw my request and will let the bill be read.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Secretary will read the bill in the usual order.

The SECRETARY. The Committee on Post Offices and Post Roads report to strike out all after the enacting clause of the bill and to insert:

That the Secretary of Agriculture is authorized to cooperate with the States, through their respective State highway departments, in the construction of rural post roads; but no money apportioned under this act to any State shall be expended therein until its legislature shall have assented to the provisions of this act, except that, until the final adjournment of the first regular session of the legislature held after the passage of this act, the assent of the governor of the State shall be sufficient. The Secretary of Agriculture and the State highway department of each State shall agree upon the roads to be constructed therein and the character and method of construction.

SEC. 2. That for the purpose of this act the term "rural post road" shall be construed to mean any public road over which the United States mails are or might be transported, excluding every street and road in a place having a population, as shown by the latest available Federal census, of 2,500 or more, except that portion of any such street or road along which the houses average more than 200 feet apart; the term "State highway department" shall be construed to include any department of another name, or commission, or official or officials, of a State empowered, under its laws, to exercise the functions ordinarily exercised by a State highway department; the term "construction" shall be construed to include reconstruction and improvement; "properly maintained" shall be construed to mean in practically as good a condition as when it was first built; necessary bridges and culverts shall be deemed parts of the respective roads covered by the provisions of this act.

SEC. 3. That for the purpose of carrying out the provisions of this act there is hereby appropriated, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1917, the sum of $5,000,000; for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1918, the sum of $10,000,000; for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1919, the sum of $15,000,000; for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1920, the sum of $20,000,000; and for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1921, the sum of $25,000,000. So much of the appropriation apportioned to any State for any fiscal year as remains unexpended at the close thereof shall be available for expenditure in that State until the close of the succeeding fiscal year, except that amounts apportioned for any fiscal year to any State which has not a State highway department shall be available for expenditure in that State until the close of the third fiscal year succeeding the close of the fiscal year for which such apportionment was made. Any amount apportioned under the provisions of this act unexpended at the end of the period during which it is available for expenditure under the terms of this section shall be reapportioned, within 60 days thereafter, to all the States in the same manner and on the same basis, and certified to the Secretary of the Treasury and to the State highway departments and to the governors of States having no State highway departments in the same way as if it were being apportioned under this act for the first time.

SEC. 4. That so much, not to exceed 5 per cent, of the appropriation for any fiscal year made by or under this act as the Secretary of Agriculture may estimate to be necessary for administering the provisions of this act shall be deducted for that purpose, available until expended. Within 60 days after the close of each fiscal year the Secretary of Agriculture shall determine what part, if any, of the sums theretofore deducted for administering the provisions of this act will not be needed for that purpose and apportion such part, if any, for the fiscal year then current in the same manner and on the same basis, and certify it to the Secretary of the Treasury and to the State highway departments, and to the governors of States having no State highway departments, in the same way as other amounts authorized by this act to be apportioned among all the States for such current fiscal year. The Secretary of Agriculture, after making the deduction authorized by this section, shall apportion the remainder of the appropriation for each fiscal year among the several States in the following manner: One-third in the ratio which the area of each State bears to the total area of all the States; one-third in the ratio which the population of each State bears to the total population of all the States, as shown by the latest available Federal census; one-third in the ratio which the mileage of rural delivery routes and star routes in each State bears to the total mileage of rural delivery routes and star routes in all the States, at the close of the next preceding fiscal year, as shown by the certificate of the Postmaster General, which he is directed to make and furnish annually to the Secretary of Agriculture.

SEC. 5. That within 60 days after the final passage of this act the Secretary of Agriculture shall certify to the Secretary of the Treasury and to each State highway department and to the governor of each State having no State highway department the sum which he has estimated to be deducted for administering the provisions of this act and the sum which he has apportioned to each State for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1917, and on or before January 20 next preceding the commencement of each succeeding fiscal year shall make like certificates for such fiscal year. The Secretary of Agriculture and the State highway department of each State may jointly determine at what times, and in what amounts, payments, as work progresses, shall be made under this act. Such payments shall be made by the Secretary of the Treasury, on warrants drawn by the Secretary of Agriculture, to such official, or officials, or depository, as may be designated by the State highway department and authorized under the laws of the State to receive public funds of the State or county.

SEC. 6. That any State desiring to avail itself of the benefits of this act shall, by its State highway department, submit to the Secretary of Agriculture project statements setting forth proposed construction of any rural post road or roads therein. If the Secretary of Agriculture approve a project, the State highway department shall furnish to him such surveys, plans, specifications, and estimates therefor as he may require. Items included for engineering, inspection, and unforeseen contingencies shall not exceed 10 per cent of the total estimated cost of the work. If the Secretary of Agriculture approve the plans, specifications, and estimates, he shall notify the State highway department and immediately certify the fact to the Secretary of the Treasury. The Secretary of the Treasury shall thereupon set aside the share of the United States payable under this act on account of such project, which shall not exceed 50 per cent of the total estimated cost thereof. No payment of any money apportioned under this act shall be made on any project until such statement of the project, and the plans, specifications, and estimates therefor, shall have been submitted to and approved by the Secretary of Agriculture; nor until there shall have been made available for expenditure by or on behalf of said State on the project money, labor, and material in such amounts, at such prices and such terms as may be agreed on between the Secretary of Agriculture and the State highway department, the aggregate amount to be not less than the amount to be received from the United States for expenditure on such project; nor until an agreement shall have been made with the Secretary of Agriculture, to his satisfaction, that the rural post road or roads so to be constructed under such project will be properly maintained by the State, or any subdivision thereof; nor shall any such payment be in excess of $10,000 per mile, exclusive of the cost of bridges of more than 20 feet clear span. The construction work and labor in each State shall be done in accordance with its laws, and under the direct supervision of the State highway department, subject to the inspection and approval of the Secretary of Agriculture and in accordance with the rules and regulations made pursuant to this act.

SEC. 7. That the Secretary of Agriculture is authorized to withhold apportionment of funds to any State in which roads constructed under the provisions of this act have not, in his judgment, been properly maintained by the State, or any subdivision thereof, if within six months after he has given notice in writing to the State highway department such roads be not properly maintained by the State, or any subdivision thereof. The Secretary of Agriculture is also authorized temporarily to decline to issue warrants under this act upon failure on the part of any State, or its State highway department, to comply with the provisions of this act or upon breach of agreement made with him pursuant to this act; and finally to decline to issue such warrants if, within three months after he has given notice in writing to the State highway department, such failure be not corrected or such breach be not remedied to his satisfaction. If he withhold an apportionment or finally decline to issue a warrant under this section, the Secretary of Agriculture shall certify the reasons therefor to the Secretary of the Treasury and to the State highway department before the close of the fiscal year in which such action is taken and shall report the same to the next regular session of Congress.

SEC. 8. That, out of the appropriations made by or under this act, the Secretary of Agriculture is authorized to employ such assistants, clerks, and other persons in the city of Washington and elsewhere, to rent such buildings in the city of Washington and elsewhere, to purchase such supplies, material, equipment, office fixtures, and apparatus, and to incur such travel and other expense as he may deem necessary for carrying out the purposes of this act.

SEC. 9. That the Secretary of Agriculture is authorized to make rules and regulations for carrying out the provisions of this act.

SEC. 10. That this act shall be in force from the date of its passage.

Mr. KENYON. Mr. President, I wish the Senator from Alabama would, if he can, let this matter go over until to-morrow. We are interested in the road question; I know I am very deeply myself. There are very few Senators in attendance this afternoon. So many things have gone on that the Senate is rather wearied, and its mind is naturally upon some other subjects at this time. I know Senators would like to hear the Senator from Alabama with a full attendance here. The bill is of such tremendous importance and involves so many intricate and interesting questions that I think it would be very conducive to the welfare of the measure and to the welfare of the country if it could go over. I do not want to delay it.

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President, in connection with what the Senator from Iowa has already said, I should like to have the Senator from Alabama agree to lay the bill aside temporarily. It will then be the unfinished business, and if he will do that I will move to take up the calendar and consider bills on the calendar to which there is no objection. I think we could get rid of 15 pages of the calendar this afternoon if the Senator would agree to that course.

Mr. BANKHEAD. I will say to the Senator from Utah that I am perfectly willing to adjourn at a reasonable hour this evening, and then the Senate will have to-morrow morning, after the routine business, for the calendar.

Mr. SMOOT. There may be something come up to-morrow morning that will occupy the morning hour, and I will say to the Senator that there are a number of Senators who desire to make speeches upon the bill who are not prepared to do so this afternoon.

Mr. BANKHEAD. And they may not be prepared to-morrow.

Mr. SMOOT. They would be prepared to do so to-morrow. I understand, however, Mr. President, there is one Senator on the other side of the Chamber who desires to make a speech this afternoon. He might go on with his speech, and after he has concluded, perhaps the Senator from Alabama would consent to laying the bill aside.

Mr. BANKHEAD. I think there are a number of Senators here, perhaps, who want to make speeches on this proposition. Let us go on this afternoon and permit them to do so.

Mr. SMOOT. For the present, then, we will go on until there is no Senator ready to speak on the bill.

Mr. BANKHEAD. Mr. President, I do not intend to consume the time of the Senate in discussing this bill. I discussed this question before the Senate several years ago, and the Senate is perfectly familiar, not with my views but with the views that are held by the country and those who are interested in this legislation. I do not desire, Mr. President, and it is not my habit, to take credit for anything that does not belong to me. I take no pride whatever in the authorship of this bill, and it may be well enough perhaps to state to the Senate briefly how this particular bill happens to be now before the Senate.

The National Association of Highway Engineers held a national convention in Chicago last fall and discussed this whole question of road building and the best method that could be secured for participation between the National Government and the States in road building. They prepared a bill, sent me a copy of it, and requested me to introduce it in the Senate. There were some provisions in the bill that did not quite meet with the approval of my judgment, and I therefore made some changes in the bill before introducing it. About that time a bill came over from the House of Representatives on this question known as the "Shackleford good-roads bill." Perhaps Senators are more familiar with the provisions of that bill than they are with the provisions of the bill now before the Senate. It may have attracted their attention more directly.

The Committee on Post Offices and Post Roads, after very carefully considering the provisions of that bill, could not give it their approval. It contained a number of provisions that did not appear to be wise, and that perhaps could not be made workable. In that view of the case the bill now before the Senate, reported unanimously by the Post Offices and Post Roads Committee, was submitted to the Agricultural Department. The road division in that department, myself, and others had several conferences on the bill. They suggested some amendments that I think are important. The bill was then submitted to the Secretary of Agriculture for his review. He carefully went over the provisions of the bill and, as I now remember, made one or two minor suggestions as to amendments. That is the bill now before the Senate.

The committee in framing this bill never for a moment lost sight of the interests and rights of the States in the construction of these roads; and if Senators will examine the bill—section 6, I believe it is—they will at once see that the bill provides that the money shall be expended and that the roads shall be constructed under the laws of the States and under the supervision of the State authorities, whether a highway commission, or, in the absence of a highway commission, the constituted road authorities of the respective States. I thought this was very important. If Senators will examine another section of the bill, or perhaps it is the same section or one a little later, they will find that the committee has provided that the States may furnish labor or material in the construction of such roads, the price to be paid for such labor and material to be agreed upon between the State authorities and the Secretary of Agriculture.

The bill provides for the distribution of this appropriation. Such distribution is based upon three propositions: The area of the States, the population of the States, and the road mileage of the States—the three being added together. The bill provides that when the State authorities, either the State highway commission or any other constituted road authorities of the State, shall have selected a route for the construction of a road and shall have presented their plans and specifications, agreed upon the method of construction and the character of the roads, then they shall submit the question to the Secretary of Agriculture for his review; and if he approves the plans, the specifications, and estimates which have been submitted as to the cost of construction the Government of the United States becomes bound to pay one-half of the cost of the construction of the road. The State, subdivisions of the State, or individuals may contribute the other 50 per cent of the cost of construction.

There are other provisions of the bill which I do not think it is necessary for me to go over and to explain in detail.

The reason, Mr. President, why the committee thought it wise and fair to apportion this money upon area, mileage of ronds, and population——

Mr. WARREN. The Senator from Alabama means, I presume, post roads?

Mr. BANKHEAD. Yes; I mean post roads.

The reason the committee thought it wise and fair to apportion this money upon area, mileage of roads, and population, was that there are a great many States in the Union which are sparsely populated; they do not have as many miles of post roads as do other States; but they have a large area, and that area makes up the general average when we come to the appropriations.

Mr. WORKS. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. HUSTING in the chair). Does the Senator from Alabama yield to the Senator from California?

Mr. BANKHEAD. I yield to the Senator from California.

Mr. WORKS. I should like to ask the Senator whether the committee reporting this bill determined what proportion of roads would fall under the definition of "post roads" as given in the bill itself?

Mr. BANKHEAD. The bill provides that "post roads" shall be construed to mean roads over which the rural mail goes or may go after improvement.

Mr. WORKS. Yes; I understand the definition very well; but the question was what proportion of roads in the several States would be included in that definition?

Mr. BANKHEAD. The Agricultural Department, according to the last census, as they claim, states that the mileage of post roads and star routes is 1,195,014, and that there are in all, Mr. President, in this country more than 2,199,646 miles of roads; but the rural mail does not go over half of them for the very good reason that a very large percentage of that mileage is in such condition that the rural mail can not go over it. That is one of the things that we ought to keep in mind in considering this bill; that its purpose is, if possible, to extend the rural service wherever it can properly go on roads on which it can properly travel.

Mr. GALLINGER. Will the Senator permit me to interrupt him?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Alabama yield to the Senator from New Hampshire?

Mr. BANKHEAD. I do.

Mr. GALLINGER. There is a phrase I find in the bill which is rather bewildering.

Mr. BANKHEAD. To what section does the Senator from New Hampshire refer?

Mr. GALLINGER. I refer to section 2, which reads:

> That for the purpose of this act the term "rural-post road" shall be construed to mean any public road over which the United States mails are or might be transported.

Does not the Senator think that is very vague? Might not this money be used entirely in constructing roads over which the mails are not now being transported on the ground that they "might be transported" over such roads?

Mr. BANKHEAD. I have just said, Mr. President, that the purpose of that language is to improve that class of roads, as far as possible, over which the mails do not go at this time. It is impossible, as the Senator from New Hampshire knows, to build all these roads as hard-surface roads. The purpose of the bill is, as I understand, to build roads over which the mails and the products of the farmer may be carried in proper safety at all seasons of the year.

Mr. GALLINGER. Yes; undoubtedly; that is a good purpose; but it occurs to me that it might be better to limit these appropriations to the roads—execrable as they are in many parts of the country—over which the mails are now being transported, and not permit the money to be used for roads that may some time or might some time be used for that purpose—a mere fiction or a guess. I wish the Senator from Alabama would carefully think that over. I presume he has already given it some consideration.

Mr. BANKHEAD. Yes; I will do so.

Mr. LANE. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Alabama yield to the Senator from Oregon?

Mr. BANKHEAD. I now want to answer the Senator from New Hampshire.

Mr. GALLINGER. I thought that possibly the Senator might think it better to limit the expenditure of this money to roads over which the mails are now being transported. Even in my own little State, where we have spent a large amount of money for the construction of roads—millions of dollars, indeed—there are many roads over which the mails are now going that are almost impassable, and the money which would be expended under this bill, which would come to my State, would hardly take care of the fifth part of those roads, I believe.

Mr. BANKHEAD. Mr. President, the committee had in mind that it could very well trust the expenditure of this money to the road authorities of the States. We did not believe, and do not now think, that the State highway commissions, or, in the absence of a State highway commission, the recognized and legally constituted road authorities of the State, would expend this money anywhere where they could not get sufficient results for the expenditure; and we thought perhaps it was well enough——

Mr. GALLINGER. The Senator from Alabama knows that I am not going to be factious about this matter. This bill appeals to me very strongly as being the most sensible bill that I have yet come across which contemplates the expenditure of the money of the Government for the building of roads in the States. But the Senator knows that there will immediately be a contest in every State; influential parties will insist upon building a road in this direction, and other parties in the other direction, and so on, and there will be a constant fight as to where these roads shall be constructed. I have in mind a little strip of road in New Hampshire which I very much want to have improved, but I apprehend it would be opposed by other parties who will say that the money ought to be spent on some other road. That was the only thought I had in mind.

Mr. BANKHEAD. Mr. President, does not the Senator think it would be wiser to leave this question to the State authorities—to the highway commission or to the regularly constituted road authorities of the State—to determine whether or not any of the Government's money shall be expended on the extension of a road that ought not properly to be improved?

Mr. GALLINGER. I will say that may be so.

Mr. LANE. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Alabama yield to the Senator from Oregon?

Mr. BANKHEAD. Yes.

Mr. LANE. I think the committee is right, if the Senator please. In the older States there may be the objection to which the Senator from New Hampshire has made reference, but in the West, on the Pacific coast, through the mountain regions, the mail is carried now upon mule back over trails to communities which are marooned for lack of ordinary highway facilities. I think the Postmaster General and the committee had in mind the pressing necessity of relieving the unfortunate condition of those people when this provision was placed in the bill, and if it is handled with ordinary common sense and business discernment for the needs of the people, I believe it will be the most useful provision in the bill.

Mr. BANKHEAD. Mr. President, as I said in the beginning, I do not intend to discuss the merits of this bill; the bill speaks for itself. On the report which the committee have filed we have expended a great deal of labor. We have searched the records and obtained every particle of information that we could find and embodied it in that report; and I believe that every section of this bill which is not entirely clear and which is not perfectly understood by every Senator on the floor will be made clear by consulting the report which we have filed, which is on the desk of every Senator in the Chamber, and which contains a complete explanation.

I have no disposition, Mr. President—and, of course, the Senate knows I have no such purpose—to try to railroad this bill through the Senate. I want it discussed, if Senators desire to discuss it, and amended, if they desire to amend it. If, in the judgment of Senators and the Senate, weak points in this bill are discovered and places where it can be improved, I apprehend there will be no difficulty in having proper amendments adopted. As I said in the beginning, I have no pride of authorship in this bill; I indorse it——

Mr. VARDAMAN. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Alabama yield to the Senator from Mississippi?

Mr. BANKHEAD. I do.

Mr. VARDAMAN. Answering the objection suggested by the Senator from New Hampshire [Mr. GALLINGER], section 6 of the bill provides:

> That any State desiring to avail itself of the benefits of this act shall, by its State highway department, submit to the Secretary of Agriculture project statements setting forth proposed construction of any rural post road or roads therein. If the Secretary of Agriculture approve a project, the State highway department shall furnish to him such surveys, plans, specifications, and estimates therefor as he may require.

So there is that restriction which would prevent the probability of any waste or the expenditure of the money in a remote section where it will not bring satisfactory return upon the amount invested.

Mr. GALLINGER. Mr. President——

Mr. VARDAMAN. And again, if I may be permitted, the State will contribute half of the money which is to be invested in the building of roads, and we can very safely indulge the presumption that the authorities of the States will not waste, at any rate, their own money. I hope the Congress may in the future manifest the same deep interest and prudence in safeguarding the disbursements of all public funds as is shown in the matter of the proposed appropriation for building post roads throughout the country.

Mr. GALLINGER. Mr. President, if the Senator from Alabama will permit me, I will say that that is a safeguard to which I have not given very careful thought, but I think very likely it will obviate the objection which I have suggested. However, my impression is that the phraseology might be bettered if the provision should read "road over which the mails are or are likely to be transported." I think that would be better than the words "might be transported."

Mr. BANKHEAD. I have no objection to that.

Mr. LANE. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Alabama yield to the Senator from Oregon?

Mr. BANKHEAD. I want to say just a word more, and then I am through for the present so far as I am concerned.

The committee in the framing of this bill kept as far away as possible from Federal supervision, believing perhaps that it was better to leave the question of construction and the question of location to the State authorities, to be determined and administered under the laws of the State and under the supervision of the State authorities; but we did not quite see our way clear to eliminate every question of Federal supervision over these roads, inasmuch as the Government is to put up one-half of the money with which to build them. However, we limited the Federal supervision in the greatest possible degree.

Mr. POMERENE. Mr. President——

Mr. BANKHEAD. I yield to the Senator.

Mr. POMERENE. I desire to ask the Senator a question. The Senator from Mississippi [Mr. VARDAMAN] has called attention to this language used in section 6:

> That any State desiring to avail itself of the benefits of this act shall, by its State highway department, submit to the Secretary of Agriculture project statements setting forth proposed construction of any rural post road or roads therein.

Does that language mean that if a project should be submitted which simply contemplated the filling up of a lot of mudholes on some back road the authorities in Washington would have full power to fill up those mudholes?

Mr. BANKHEAD. The highway commission of the State, in the first place, would determine such a matter. They submit the plans; they designate the road to be built, its location, and the estimate for the improvement, to the Secretary of Agriculture; and while I regret, Mr. President, that we found it necessary to do so, we had to lodge the veto power somewhere, and we thought it best to give to the Secretary of Agriculture the power to say: "That is not a proper road to be built; it is not in a proper place; the construction of it is not what it ought to be; the estimate of cost is too high; and I am not, as the representative of the Government of the United States, willing to approve it and put up half the money for it." That is the proposition.

Mr. POMERENE. Suppose that a very substantial sum of the money which is appropriated out of the Federal Treasury for road purposes were desired to be used by the State authorities simply for the purpose of repairing an ordinary dirt road?

Mr. BANKHEAD. Well, Mr. President, I am constrained to believe that the Senator from Ohio has not read the bill——

Mr. POMERENE. I have been trying to read it.

Mr. BANKHEAD. Because there is an express provision in the bill which says that none of this money shall be used for repairs or maintenance.

Mr. POMERENE. I am very glad to know that.

Mr. BANKHEAD. We thought, Mr. President, after the Government of the United States had contributed its share to the building of roads, that it was the duty of the States to see that they were maintained; for without maintenance roads are not worth anything.

Mr. POMERENE. If the Senator will pardon me, I am in favor of Federal aid in the construction of highways, but I realize at the same time that most of the work of this character must be done by the local or State authorities, and I want to encourage them to the uttermost; but if we were to fritter away the Federal funds in mere repairs on some out-of-the-way road, or simply for the purpose of making a road temporarily passable, we would be discouraging the local authorities.

Mr. BANKHEAD. There is no doubt about that, and the bill expressly provides that none of this money shall be used for repairs or maintenance.

Mr. LANE. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Alabama yield to the Senator from Oregon?

Mr. BANKHEAD. Yes.

Mr. LANE. I wish at this time—for I think it is an opportune time—to mention the fact that if the Senate had been so wise as to adopt the amendment offered by me yesterday, which provided for a national-defense army to defend this country against all comers, that army to consist of 500,000 men, we will say, per annum, required to go out and build roads, except for two days in the week, when they would undergo military training, we would have had the roads without the expense now proposed, and we would have secured double the amount of military training for our people which will be given under the military reorganization bill which has been passed.

Mr. MARTINE of New Jersey. Mr. President——

Mr. BANKHEAD. I yield to the Senator from New Jersey.

Mr. MARTINE of New Jersey. Mr. President, I feel that the Senator from Ohio [Mr. POMERENE] need have little fear that any of the money proposed to be appropriated from the Federal Treasury will be spent simply for the purpose of filling mudholes, because in the bill, on page 7, it is provided that—

> The Secretary of Agriculture and the State highway department of each State shall agree upon the roads to be constructed therein and the character and method of construction.

So the Treasury of the United States is reasonably safeguarded in that respect. No Secretary of Agriculture would permit a contribution from the United States Government to go to any State whatever simply to fill up mudholes.

I am an earnest advocate of this bill. I am a member of the Committee on Post Offices and Post Roads, and I know, as the chairman of the committee has stated, the careful deliberation and the amount of study which have entered into the framing of this measure.

I am an earnest advocate of a good-roads system everywhere and anywhere. We know in the State of New Jersey how much has been accomplished in this direction. Our roads there are par excellence; there are none better. We are favored with a splendid administration, both in our road department and in other departments of our State government, and we have a governor and those associated with him who have been a credit and an honor to our State and a glory to our country. The work that has been accomplished by our road commission has resulted in a splendid system of highways, ramifying over the State very generally, and has resulted in an increased value to property on all sides in our State. I can commend our general system of highways to the people of the United States; and if we can have Federal aid we will accomplish wonders in the direction of good roads, and our system will prove a model not only for our own country, but for any other country which may send visitors to us.

Mr. WILLIAMS. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Alabama yield to the Senator from Mississippi?

Mr. BANKHEAD. I do.

Mr. WILLIAMS. I wish to ask the Senator from Alabama a question. On page 13, in section 8, beginning in line 18, I find this language:

> That, out of the appropriations made by or under this act, the Secretary of Agriculture is authorized to employ such assistants, clerks, and other persons in the city of Washington and elsewhere.

Then follows the language concerning which I wish to ask a question:

> To rent such buildings in the city of Washington and elsewhere.

In other words, a part of the money appropriated is to be used for the rent of buildings in the city of Washington. Will the Senator tell me why that is necessary? A million-dollar building has been erected for the Department of Agriculture; but that department is already renting other buildings—I do not know how many—all over the city, in spite of the fact that we gave them a building. It seems to me that to appropriate anything for the renting of buildings in the city of Washington is purely superfluous.

Mr. BANKHEAD. Mr. President, if the Senator will examine the bill, he will find a provision that not more than 5 per cent of the money appropriated shall be expended for administrative purposes, which include many things besides the renting of buildings, if the renting of buildings is necessary.

Mr. WILLIAMS. I am not speaking about the renting of buildings elsewhere.

Mr. SWANSON. Mr. President, will the Senator permit me to interrupt him?

Mr. WILLIAMS. I beg the Senator's pardon. I am not speaking about buildings elsewhere; I am speaking about the renting of buildings in the city of Washington. The Senator knows and I know that there is a very large amount of graft going on in connection with the renting of buildings in the city of Washington by the various departments—I will take back the word "graft"; I do not mean that; I mean unnecessary expenditures—and the more buildings we erect for the departments the more they seem to rent.

Mr. President, I give notice that at the proper time I shall offer an amendment—and I ask the Secretary to take down the amendment—to strike out, on page 13, line 21, the word "in" and insert the words "outside of," and in line 22, page 13, to strike out the words "and elsewhere," so that the clause as amended shall read:

> To rent such buildings outside of the city of Washington.

Mr. BANKHEAD. The only objection, I understand, is to the renting of buildings in the city?

Mr. WILLIAMS. That is all—in the city. It is absolutely useless. We gave them a million-dollar building down there, and all they did was to take a room where there had been seven men and distribute them into three rooms, or where there had been three men and put them into two rooms, and then to keep on renting buildings all over this city for the Forestry Division and for other parts of the Agricultural Department.

It does not do any good to erect these buildings if these people are going to keep up this rental system; and, whether true or not, I have heard that they pay more than private renters do for the same sort of quarters, in the same neighborhood, from the same landlords.

Mr. SWANSON. Mr. President, if the Senator will permit me——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Alabama yield to the Senator from Virginia?

Mr. BANKHEAD. I do.

Mr. SWANSON. The Agricultural Department rents about $132,000 worth of buildings. As chairman of the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds as soon as I was elected chairman I made a very full inquiry of every department in Washington in reference to their buildings, how much they rented for, the amount of space, the assessed value, and the average amount of the investment; and all of these reports have come in. They show that the Government rents nearly $600,000 worth of buildings in the city of Washington.

Mr. SMOOT. Over $600,000 worth.

Mr. SWANSON. Over $600,000 worth. It is not the fault of the Public Buildings Committee; it is the fault of the committees outside of that, who make these appropriations for rentals.

As the Senator from Mississippi [Mr. WILLIAMS] has well said, there have been two very fine buildings erected for the Agricultural Department. We hardly get through furnishing a building before they arrange for keeping up their rentals at what they were formerly. But in looking into the matter I find that the Agricultural Department has grown so rapidly, so many new bureaus have been added—and every year one or two bureaus are added—that I think they do need some rentals of buildings.

Now, the present Bureau of Roads in the Agricultural Department rents a building. I think it has always been compelled to rent a building.

Mr. VARDAMAN. Mr. President, will the Senator from Alabama permit me to ask the Senator from Virginia a question?

Mr. BANKHEAD. I will.

Mr. VARDAMAN. I am very much interested in the revelations that the Senator from Virginia is making. Has the Senator from Virginia made an estimate of the number of buildings that are rented, and the amount of money paid for them, by the Government—buildings that the Government could get along without?

Mr. SWANSON. Over $600,000 of rent is paid in Washington every year for buildings.

Mr. VARDAMAN. What portion of that can be dispensed with?

Mr. SWANSON. I have asked the Supervising Architect's Office to take these reports I have obtained and to make an estimate as to what it would cost to construct buildings to house all of these different departments, what rented buildings ought to be dispensed with, and to give me a statement as to what we can do, so that we may have another public buildings bill to construct such buildings as we ought to construct, to dispense with those that are unnecessary, and in the future to prevent any rentals in Washington; and that ought to be done.

Mr. VARDAMAN. I think it would be a very proper procedure.

Mr. SWANSON. Now, understand, the committee of which I am chairman has directed me to try to get a bill passed, or an amendment to some appropriation bill, in which a commission shall be appointed to examine into the rental of every building in Washington, to examine whether or not these rentals are necessary, to examine as to what these buildings can be constructed for where they are absolutely needed, and to report at the next session of Congress a complete plan to get rid of all rentals in Washington; and I think that will be put on.

Mr. WILLIAMS. It will not do you any good. They will keep on renting.

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President, will the Senator yield to me?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Alabama yield to the Senator from Utah?

Mr. BANKHEAD. I do.

Mr. SMOOT. I wish to say to the Senator from Mississippi [Mr. VARDAMAN] that the Appropriations Committee has considered the question as to whether any rooms can be dispensed with that are now being rented by the Government. There are only three departments of the Government that are not asking for authority to rent additional rooms over and above what they have to-day. I can assure the Senator that before this session of Congress is out there will be some kind of a resolution presented to the Senate authorizing the appointment of a committee for the investigation of this whole rent question, with a view—as the Senator from Virginia has said his committee has had in mind—of seeing just what it would cost the Government to construct sufficient buildings to house all of the employees of the Government.

Mr. VARDAMAN. Mr. President, how do the rentals paid by the Government compare with the rents paid by private citizens?

Mr. SMOOT. The rents that the Government is paying now are somewhat higher than those paid by private individuals.

Mr. VARDAMAN. How much higher?

Mr. SMOOT. I will say to the Senator that the Government in some cases rents buildings at 37½ cents a square foot; in other instances it runs as high as 50 cents. It depends upon the class of building and where it is located. I will say to the Senator, however, that taking the rent as a whole, I understand that it is somewhat higher than that paid by private concerns.

Mr. VARDAMAN. Does the Senator know how much higher?

Mr. SMOOT. I should judge it is something like from 5 to 7½ per cent higher.

Mr. THOMAS. Mr. President, may I ask the Senator a question?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Alabama yield to the Senator from Colorado?

Mr. BANKHEAD. I yield.

Mr. THOMAS. I should like to inquire of the Senator from Utah if he knows whether the Maltby Building is occupied?

Mr. SMOOT. It is not occupied, and I suppose that every time a department has asked for increased space the Maltby Building has been brought up before the committee. I want to give credit to the junior Senator from Colorado because he has mentioned that building upon all occasions when additional room was required, and he has insisted that it be used; but I do not believe that the head of any one of the departments feels that he wants to have his department occupy that building. They will make all sorts of excuses, saying that it is unsafe, and that it has been condemned, and that it is insanitary.

Mr. WILLIAMS. Why do we not sell it, then?

Mr. SHAFROTH. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Alabama yield, and to whom?

Mr. BANKHEAD. To whom? That is what I should like to know. [Laughter.]

Mr. SHAFROTH. I should like to say a word right here.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Alabama yield to the Senator from Colorado?

Mr. BANKHEAD. I do.

Mr. SHAFROTH. I should like to say a word with respect to the Maltby Building. I have examined that building. There is not a crack in any of the walls. It is perfectly safe. I can not get any of the departments to occupy it, however, because some want tiled floors, and some want nickel-plated plumbing, and some want a fireproof building, and all of those things prevent it. I will state, however, that there are some people now occupying that building. The Sergeant at Arms of the Senate, being crowded, has concluded to put a force over there, and it is being occupied to a limited extent, but I do not see why that building could not be occupied by all the offices required under this bill and why they would not be well accommodated in every respect.

Mr. WILLIAMS. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Alabama yield to the Senator from Mississippi?

Mr. BANKHEAD. I yield.

Mr. WILLIAMS. If the Senator from Alabama will pardon me just a moment longer, I remember when Mr. James W. Wadsworth, of New York, was chairman of the Agricultural Committee in the House of Representatives and when I was the senior minority member of that committee, that the Department of Agriculture came to us and wanted us to erect the building which now exists, and one of the reasons which they gave was that we would stop the enormous amount of rentals which they were paying out in the city of Washington. We appropriated the money; we erected the building; and, to my surprise, I find that they are renting just about as much as they did before they had the building. We did not destroy the old Agricultural Department building. We left that. We gave them a million-dollar new building, and yet they are still renting all over the city of Washington.

In answer to a question propounded by my colleague [Mr. VARDAMAN], I am not sure that I know enough to answer accurately in percentages, but I have heard that in one or two cases in the city of Washington the Government is paying to a landlord 25 per cent more than is being paid by a private tenant just next door. Whether that be true or not I do not know. It came to me in a way that does not stamp it with the authenticity of original information. I hope, however, that when the Senator from Utah has the investigation by his committee they will not stop with merely asking the rent paid and the location of the tenement rented or for what purpose it is rented, but that they will go back and find, not the nominal contractor, but the real flesh-and-blood man who was appointed by the department or the bureau to enter into the contract, and that they will also find out just what is being paid next door for exactly the same sort of tenement.

I despise making charges. All of you know I never do it, because the most precious thing for any human being in the world is his reputation, outside of his character, and no man has a right lightly to charge corruption; but I have a notion that if this thing were pursued back to the flesh-and-blood man who really acted for the Government in effecting a contract there might be found now and then a rake-off, because I can not otherwise understand why so much should be rented, and why what is rented should be rented at the figures at which it is rented.

Mr. BANKHEAD. Mr. President, I stated in the beginning that the Agricultural Department had made some minor amendments or suggestions with reference to this bill. The item in question is one of their suggestions. I am perfectly willing to accept the amendment of the Senator from Mississippi when we come to it. I think perhaps we will be able to get along without it.

Mr. GALLINGER. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Alabama yield to the Senator from New Hampshire?

Mr. BANKHEAD. I do.

Mr. GALLINGER. If I may be permitted to say a word about this matter of rent, it is something in which I have taken a good deal of interest. As chairman of the Committee on the District of Columbia for 12 years I looked into it from time to time without very much satisfaction. I feel sure that there is a recent publication—I can not put my hand on it now—which shows the percentage that the owners of the buildings now rented by the Government are receiving, and if I am not entirely mistaken it ranges from 5 to 14 per cent; there are buildings rented in this District where the owners are getting 14 per cent on the property.

Mr. VARDAMAN. Mr. President, if the Senator will permit me just in this connection, a day or two ago I was told by a prominent official of the Post Office Department, when he came before the committee and asked for an appropriation to erect a building to be used by the department, that in the case of the building they are now occupying they are paying a rental of 16 per cent on the investment. If this be true, such a condition is inexcusable.

Mr. GALLINGER. The document to which I allude—and I regret that I can not designate it specifically—does not show so large a percentage as that, but it shows an inordinate percentage in some cases. Now, one further word.

Mr. VARDAMAN. I want the Senator to understand——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Alabama further yield to the Senator from Mississippi?

Mr. BANKHEAD. I am yielding to the Senator.

Mr. VARDAMAN. I want the Senator to understand that my statement was not in anywise contradictory of his. I was simply adding that fact to the cumulative evidence on the subject which tends to show that something ought to be done to correct these abuses.

Mr. GALLINGER. I should like the Senator from Virginia to remain one moment, if he will.

If I may be permitted to allude to the Agricultural Department—and I do not allude to it in any factious spirit, or for the purpose of criticizing the man who is at the head of that department—when we appropriated for the new building, as a matter of fact, there were two new buildings constructed, and a space is left in the center for a third building, for which doubtless we will be asked to appropriate in the near future.

The Senator from Virginia, who has great energy and ability, says he is going to take up this matter and see if we can not construct enough buildings to accommodate the Government without renting. I will ask the Senator from Virginia how long ago it was that we appropriated to construct, I think, three public buildings on the squares between Fourteenth and Fifteenth Streets and running south from that point?

Mr. SWANSON. I did not catch the location of the place. What squares does the Senator mean?

Mr. CURTIS. Does the Senator mean the property south of the Willard Hotel?

Mr. GALLINGER. I do.

Mr. SWANSON. I will say to the Senator that the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds last year reported a bill to construct a building there for the Department of Justice. We have done it repeatedly. We tried to get it through the Senate, and objection was made all the time to the passage of the bill.

The Department of Justice pays, I think, $46,000 a year for rentals. The Department of Justice has no building whatever except what is rents. The Government bought the land there to construct a building for that department. As chairman of the committee, I reported last year a bill to proceed at once to the construction of the building. Every time the bill would come up the Senator from Ohio, Mr. Burton, or the Senator from New York, Mr. Root, one or the other, would object to its consideration. It was impossible for us to get it considered.

Recently I have talked with the Attorney General and other representatives of the Department of Justice, and they thought possibly it was better to let a bill be introduced in the House first and come over here. I had a talk with them about a week ago, and they still thought we had better see what the House of Representatives would do before we proceeded over here. We have bought the land there, we have been losing the interest on it, and we are paying rentals.

If there is any building that is needed it is one for the Department of Justice. I have urged it ever since I have been here, and objection has always arisen unless we would enter into an agreement that we would pay 5 per cent for a man to inspect the building, when the Supervising Architect's Office here is prepared to do it. I have not been willing to put into the bill a provision compelling us to pay for the inspection of that building when the Supervising Architect's Office could do it and save to the Government 5 per cent on the cost of the building. The objection to the passage of that bill has been because a member of the American Institute of Architects insists that he has a moral right, if not a legal right, to get 5 per cent for watching the construction of the building.

Mr. GALLINGER. Mr. President, the Government purchased the land——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Alabama yield the floor?

Mr. GALLINGER. I am holding the floor by the courtesy of the Senator from Alabama.

Mr. BANKHEAD. He is holding it for me.

Mr. GALLINGER. There does not seem to be any great rush in legislation to-day, so I suppose we may have a little leeway, to make it interesting, as they do in the House of Representatives.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair feels that he has given some leeway.

Mr. GALLINGER. As a matter of fact, the Government purchased the land several years ago, as I remember. The Government has dispossessed the occupants of several properties there, including the Emergency Hospital. The Government turned them out, and they had to raise money by private contribution and public contribution and build a new hospital. There stands the land in the name of the Government, and we do not appropriate for the building.

I do not know exactly the facts that the Senator has presented as to the impossibility of getting the appropriation made by Congress. It ought to be made, and ought to be made at once. The Senator from Virginia—and this is what I wanted to admonish him about—when he takes this contract to construct enough buildings to accommodate all the departments of the Government, will find that he has a very large contract on his hands. I will suggest that when that is done, if it ever shall be done, and there is room enough to give every man larger breathing space than he can get outdoors, we will find that by multiplying bureaus and divisions in the Government departments, which we are constantly doing, we will still be looking for some place to rent for the Government at 10 or 12 or 14 per cent.

Just a word about the Maltby Building. I lived in that building for four years, at the top of it.

Mr. OVERMAN. So did I.

Mr. GALLINGER. It is a most charming place, and I was rather sorry when I was dispossessed; but somebody discovered that it was unsafe. We owned a building south of the theater in Fifteenth Street, a substantial brick building. If it had been in New Hampshire it would have been allowed to stand there five or six hundred years, and would have been pointed to as an evidence of splendid construction. A certain Senator entered that building once, and saw a little crack in the wall, and he came back here and reported that it was unsafe, and we tore it down. The land is there now, with no building on it, and we have lost the use of that building.

Mr. CURTIS. Mr. President, may I ask the Senator a question right there?

Mr. GALLINGER. Certainly, if I may be permitted to yield to the Senator.

Mr. CURTIS. Was not the building that formerly stood next to the Riggs Bank the one that was occupied by the Department of Justice?

Mr. GALLINGER. Yes. It was pulled down because somebody saw a crack in the wall, I believe.

Mr. CURTIS. And the Government still owns that site, does it not?

Mr. GALLINGER. It still owns the land; yes.

This is a question that ought to be taken up; and I am glad that the Senator from Virginia [Mr. SWANSON], with his usual energy, says that he will take it up and try to solve the problem. It is a serious problem, which ought to be met bravely and courageously.

Mr. SWANSON. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Alabama yield to the Senator from Virginia?

Mr. BANKHEAD. Yes; I yield.

Mr. SWANSON. There is a great deal in the suggestion made by the Senator from New Hampshire that the rapidity with which the departments have been created has necessitated the rental of buildings. For instance, the Department of Commerce has been separated from the Department of Labor. The Department of Labor has been created—a new department. A new bureau, the Children's Bureau, has been created. Consequently, it has necessitated an increased rental to house these bureaus, because none of these departments will give up any of the space they occupy when you give them a new building. The only department I know of that has surrendered a building is the Treasury Department. When we built a new building over here for the Bureau of Engraving and Printing, I understand the Treasury Department ceased a great deal of its rentals. I do not know how much they amounted to, though I had the figures, but very few of the departments do that. With that exception, when you construct a building for them, they keep up their existing rentals.

The fault in that respect is not with the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds. It is with the Appropriations Committee. These gentlemen never appear before us to authorize a rental. The only thing we authorize is the construction of buildings. All of the rentals are authorized by other committees, and not the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds.

Mr. CURTIS. Mr. President, right there I should like to make a suggestion. The Committee on Appropriations must authorize the rental of buildings until the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds authorizes their construction.

Mr. SWANSON. That is true; and consequently that committee is compelled to authorize rentals, when new departments or bureaus are created, until we have a general building or construction bill. It is nearly impossible to get separate bills through the House and Senate. We have not had a building bill since 1911. I tried for two sessions to get through here a building for the Department of Justice. I pushed it urgently and with all the energy I had, yet it was impossible to get it through.

I will endeavor to report a bill for this purpose very soon, and I want to get the Senator from New Hampshire [Mr. GALLINGER] to help me get through a building for the Department of Justice. If any objection arises on that side, where all the objection was raised the last time, I hope he will suppress it; and I hope the Senator from Utah [Mr. SMOOT] will aid me in suppressing any objection that may arise to the construction of a building for the Department of Justice. We own the land. We have lost the interest on it for years. It is an absolute piece of business folly that the Government should buy that land and not utilize it. Yet, although we have tried for years to construct a building on it, on account of the opposition of some Senators we have been unable to do so.

I shall be very glad to have that building bill reported promptly.

Mr. BANKHEAD. Mr. President, I have said all I care to say at this time on this bill. I am going to yield the floor, unless some Senator wants to ask me a question.

Mr. CURTIS. Mr. President, before the Senator yields the floor I desire to ask him a question in regard to this part of section 3:

> Any amount apportioned under the provisions of this act unexpended at the end of the period during which it is available for expenditure under the terms of this section shall be reapportioned, within 60 days thereafter, to all the States in the same manner and on the same basis.

What effect would that have on the States that refused to appropriate their one-half?

Mr. BANKHEAD. It could have but one effect, and that would be that it would go back into the Treasury for redistribution to those who did appropriate.

Mr. CURTIS. Would that State be considered again in the redistribution, having failed to appropriate?

Mr. BANKHEAD. Oh, yes; I think so.

Mr. CURTIS. That is the question I wanted to ask, Mr. President.

Mr. COLT. Mr. President——

Mr. BANKHEAD. I yield the floor to the Senator from Rhode Island.

Mr. SHAFROTH. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Rhode Island yield to the Senator from Colorado?

Mr. SHAFROTH. No; I do not care to interrupt the Senator from Rhode Island, if he is going to take the floor.

Mr. BANKHEAD. I am yielding to the Senator from Rhode Island.

Mr. JONES. Mr. President, I understand that the Senator from Rhode Island is not going to confine his remarks to this bill, but is going to discuss a bill of very great importance. I therefore suggest the absence of a quorum.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The absence of a quorum being suggested, the Secretary will call the roll.

The Secretary called the roll, and the following Senators answered to their names:

Bankhead	Johnson, Me.	Page	Stone
Beckham	Johnson, S. Dak.	Poindexter	Sutherland
Brandegee	Jones	Pomerene	Swanson
Burleigh	Kenyon	Ransdell	Taggart
Chilton	Kern	Reed	Thomas
Clark, Wyo.	Lane	Robinson	Thompson
Colt	Lee, Md.	Shafroth	Underwood
Curtis	Lewis	Sheppard	Vardaman
Gallinger	Lodge	Simmons	Wadsworth
Gronna	McCumber	Smith, Ariz.	Walsh
Hardwick	Martine, N. J.	Smith, Md.	Williams
Hollis	Myers	Smith, S. C.
Husting	Norris	Smoot
James	Overman	Sterling

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Fifty-three Senators having answered to their names, a quorum is present. The Senator from Rhode Island [Mr. COLT] is entitled to the floor.

Mr. HOLLIS. Will the Senator yield to me to give a short notice.

Mr. COLT. Certainly.

RURAL CREDITS.

Mr. HOLLIS. I desire to give notice that immediately upon the conclusion of the consideration of the good-roads bill, which is now the unfinished business, I shall move to take up the rural-credits bill—Senate bill 2986.

FEDERAL JUDGES.

Mr. COLT. Mr. President, I shall not detain the Senate long. Senate bill 706, reported by the Senator from Georgia [Mr. SMITH] from the Committee on the Judiciary, has been before the Senate several times for discussion. It so happens that I was not present on one or two of those days. I think the bill is a most important measure, and I desire at this time briefly to express my objections to it.

Mr. President, I am opposed to this bill because I believe it is unjust to the Federal judges, dangerous in principle, and of doubtful constitutionality.

It is unjust to the judges, because it clothes the President with power to retire them wholly, or in great part, from the duties of their office and to reduce their rank or standing in the courts. It is dangerous in principle, because it authorizes Executive interference with the judiciary, and is thus an infringement of Anglo-Saxon liberty, which rests upon the independence of the judiciary and the supremacy of law. It is of doubtful constitutionality, because under the Constitution the power to create judicial offices and to regulate the standing of judges is vested in Congress, and the constitutional power of the President is limited to filling the judicial offices which have been established by Congress.

Mr. President, the pending bill, after reciting the present law, which permits Federal judges at the age of 70 who have held a commission for 10 years to retire on full pay, reads as follows:

> In the event any circuit judge, having so held a commission or commissions at least 10 years continuously, and having attained the age of 70 years as aforesaid, shall, nevertheless, remain in office, the President, if in his opinion the public good so requires, may appoint, by and with the advice and consent of the Senate, an additional circuit judge of said circuit, who, notwithstanding the incumbency of the judge so entitled to resign, shall sit customarily as one of the judges of the circuit court of appeals of his circuit. And the judge so entitled to resign shall thenceforth be relieved, save as hereinafter provided, from the duty imposed by section 118 of this title to sit as one of the judges of said circuit court of appeals, and shall be held and treated as if junior in commission to the remaining judges of said court, who shall, in the order of the seniority of their respective commissions, exercise such powers and perform such duties as by law may be incident to seniority.

The bill then provides that, whenever the "public good shall so require," the circuit judge so entitled to resign may be designated by the presiding judge of the circuit court of appeals, or the Chief Justice of the United States, to sit upon the hearing of any case in the circuit court of appeals, and may also be designated to sit in the district court. Then follow substantially similar provisions with respect to the district judges.

Mr. President, when I read the provisions of this bill the thought came to me, Are we going back to the age of James the First and Lord Coke, when the great chief justice was dismissed from office for interfering with the royal prerogative; or, Are we living in the twentieth century, under the common law and the Constitution of the United States? There is no difference in principle between judges holding office at the pleasure of the King and judges who can be "relieved" of their official duties and deprived of their rank or standing in the courts at the pleasure or will of the Executive.

If this bill becomes a law, the President at once will be vested with power to create 15 additional circuit and district judges, and with power to retire from their active official duties 15 circuit and district judges now in office, and at the same time to lower their rank or standing in the courts; and this Executive power of appointing new judges and retiring old judges from their active duties and reducing them in rank is to continue in every case where a circuit or district judge holding office has reached the age of 70 and has served 10 years continuously.

Mr. President, the position of a Federal judge under the Constitution and laws of the United States is marked by three distinct features—permanent tenure of office, fixed compensation, and the gradation of judges according to length of service.

The Constitution declares that the judges shall hold their offices during good behavior, and that their compensation shall not be diminished during their continuance in office. By these provisions the framers of the Constitution believed they would secure judges of high character, free from partisanship and from every form of corrupting influence, and who would devote their lives to an impartial administration of law.

By the statutes of the United States the judges are ranked according to the seniority of their commissions. Section 215 of the Judicial Code declares that—

> The Associate Justices shall have precedence according to the dates of their commission, or, when the commissions of two or more of them bear the same date, according to their ages.

In the act of March 3, 1891, establishing the circuit court of appeals, it is provided:

> And the circuit judges in attendance upon the court, in the absence of the chief justice or associate justice of the Supreme Court, shall preside in the order of the seniority of their respective commissions.

There are also other provisions in the statutes which clearly mark this feature of our Federal judicial system. Thus we find that under the existing law age and length of service add honor, dignity, and responsibility to the office of Federal judge. The present bill is a reversal of this policy. Under this bill age and length of service are penalized by a forced retirement from active duty and a reduction in rank or standing.

Mr. President, there are at this time 128 circuit and district judges who are holding their offices during good behavior, at a fixed compensation, and whose rank in the courts is based upon the seniority of their commissions. Nine of the circuit judges are now the active presiding judges of the nine circuit courts of appeal. The Supreme Court Justices seldom, if ever, preside in these courts, because their duties keep them in Washington. In each of these nine circuits it is the resident circuit judge holding the oldest commission who presides over the court. If the senior circuit judge is disqualified, the circuit judge holding the next oldest commission presides. The circuit judge whose date of commission is next in seniority to that of the presiding circuit judge sits at the right of the presiding judge, and the circuit judge whose commission is of a still later date sits at the left.

The district judge who holds the senior commission is known as the senior district judge, and should a district judge be required to sit in the circuit court of appeals he would be selected, if not disqualified, and, if disqualified, the district judge holding the next commission in the order of seniority would be called upon.

The presiding judge of the circuit court of appeals occupies a position of exceptional dignity and responsibility. He is, in fact, the chief justice of that court. He presides at the sessions of the court, assigns cases for consideration by particular judges, and performs other administrative functions.

Now, this bill gives the President the power to say to every presiding circuit judge of the circuit court of appeals who has reached the age of 70 and has served 10 years:

> I will strip you of your office of chief justice, retire you from the active duties assigned to you by law, and relegate you to the rank of a judge holding a junior commission.

The truth is that these presiding judges and all others to whom the provisions of this bill may be applied become, in fact, mere supernumeraries who can no longer be employed in the regular service of the courts, but can only be called upon in case of emergency, and then they are not to occupy their accustomed position in the court, but, in the language of the bill, are "to be held and treated as if juniors in commission to the remaining judges of said court."

If this bill is sound in principle, there is no good reason why it should not be extended to the Supreme Court; and if it were so extended it would give the President power at this time to increase the number of Justices from 8 to 11, to retire the Chief Justice and the two senior Associate Justices from active duty, and to reduce them to the rank of Justices holding junior commissions; in other words, the Chief Justice and the two senior Associate Justices would become mere supernumeraries.

Mr. WALSH. Mr. President, will the Senator from Rhode Island permit me?

Mr. COLT. Certainly.

Mr. WALSH. I am very much interested in what the Senator is saying concerning the applicability of the bill to the Supreme Court. But let us assume that such a condition exists on the Supreme Court as the bill is intended to meet; let us assume that four justices of the Supreme Court are past the age of 70 years; that they are physically incapacitated and unfit for the discharge of their duties and decline to resign, what would the Senator from Rhode Island do?

Mr. COLT. The Senator is making, to my mind, an impossible supposition.

Mr. WALSH. The Senator is making only such a supposition as the Senator from Rhode Island has propounded. He has propounded the case of the applicability of the bill to the Supreme Court. Of course, in order to do so we must assume that a somewhat similar condition exists.

Now, let me ask the Senator from Rhode Island a question. He understands perfectly well the condition to which the bill is addressed. There are some of these circuit judges over 80 years of age, one of them actually bedridden. He never discharges his duty, he never sits in court, he is physically incapable of sitting in court.

Let me say to the Senator I sympathize much with what he is saying in denunciation of the bill, but I am still confronted with the difficulty, and I will ask the Senator what he would do?

Mr. COLT. Mr. President, I deal with this aspect of the case later on. The remedy in the supposed case of the Supreme Court which the Senator has assumed, the remedy in every case, and the only remedy under the Constitution, is by a special act creating an additional judge.

Mr. WALSH. That is to say, the Senator suggests that instead of a general act dealing with the subject a special act shall be passed.

Mr. COLT. I recall that in the case of Mr. Justice Moody, who became ill soon after his appointment, a special act was passed. I recall the case of Mr. Justice Hunt, of New York, where Congress passed a special bill.

Mr. WALSH. Let me ask the Senator, Did they not both resign?

Mr. COLT. Justice Hunt, as I recall, could not resign, because he did not come within the provisions of the statute. He had not served a sufficient length of time.

Mr. WALSH. Exactly; and I understand a special bill was passed allowing him to resign.

Mr. COLT. Let me answer the inquiry of the Senator by saying that after the most careful reflection upon this subject, and in view of the constitutional provision of life tenure of the Federal judges, I know no way of meeting the situation in which a judge remains on the bench after he has become incapacitated except by appealing to Congress and having a special act passed.

Mr. CLARK of Wyoming. Mr. President, will the Senator yield to me for a moment?

Mr. COLT. Certainly.

Mr. CLARK of Wyoming. I wish to suggest to the Senator from Montana that, as I remember the terms of the bill, the suppositious case which he puts to the Senator from Rhode Island is hardly in harmony with the language and purpose of the bill. The bill, as I understand it, does not relate to those cases which the Senator has intimated it does relate to alone. The bill relates to those cases where, in the judgment of the President, the general good requires it. There might be something besides physical incapacity or mental incapacity. In any case that appealed to the President, where, in his judgment, the country would be better served if another judge were on the bench, he could make the appointment, as I understand the bill, not having looked at it recently.

Mr. WALSH. The Senator will understand I did not intend by my inquiry addressed to the Senator from Rhode Island to enter upon a general defense of the bill or of every feature of it. I am very desirous, however, to get the view of the Senator from Rhode Island, because no man in this body is better equipped to express an opinion on the subject than he.

Mr. COLT. There is no man in this body of whose judgment I have a higher opinion in regard to all legal questions than the Senator from Montana, and I am exceedingly obliged to him for interrupting me. However, I would be very glad if at this time he would wait until I deal with the legal aspect of this question both under the common law and the Constitution of the United States.

The only aspect of the bill I have thus far presented is that it seemed to me unjust with respect to its treatment of the Federal judges; in other words, that the bill gives the President the power of retiring judges from the bench and degrading them in their rank in cases where that should not be done.

Mr. SUTHERLAND. Before the Senator resumes, will he permit me to make a suggestion with reference to the case which the Senator from Montana supposes?

Mr. COLT. Certainly.

Mr. SUTHERLAND. The Constitution provides that the judges both of the Supreme Court and inferior courts shall hold their offices during good behavior. If we can imagine a case where a judge on the bench would continue to hold his office and draw his salary and positively decline to perform any of the duties of his office, I suggest that that might well constitute a case of misbehavior.

The case that is supposed, however, is a case where the judge is unable to perform his duties and declines to resign. While I am not entirely clear about it, it seems to me that that might also present a case of misbehavior on the part of a judge who is unable to perform the duties and persists in holding the office. The Constitution nowhere defines what constitutes misbehavior.

Mr. WALSH. If the Senator from Rhode Island will allow me a moment, I should like to call the attention of the Senator from Utah for just a moment to this point. That, of course, is very interesting, and possibly is a very proper solution of it. I dare say that a great many people would conclude that it was no breach of good behavior which the Constitution contemplated if a man did not resign. But let me ask the Senator from Utah how then he would get rid of the man who was thus lacking in good behavior in not resigning?

Mr. SUTHERLAND. The Constitution assumes that there is some way to get rid of him.

Mr. WALSH. That is what I want to know.

Mr. SUTHERLAND. He might be gotten rid of by impeachment.

Mr. WALSH. Of course. There is no doubt about that.

Mr. SUTHERLAND. He might be gotten rid of by Congress passing a statute defining what should constitute misbehavior and declaring that upon that being established his right to hold the office should cease.

Mr. WALSH. That is what I wanted to understand. I wanted to understand what was the Senator's idea as to whether he thought that Congress could legislate to meet the situation or not.

Mr. SUTHERLAND. I have not gone so far as to determine precisely what the remedy would be, but, at any rate, the Constitution does contemplate that the judge can hold the office only during good behavior, and, of course, there must be some way of providing and applying a remedy.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. Mr. President, allow me to ask a question here.

Mr. COLT. As I deal with these various questions, I will be glad if I may finish what I have to say, and then Senators can interrogate me upon any particular point.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. I only want to ask the Senator from Utah one question, and then I will not interrupt the Senator further. It is this: Did not the minority report in the House which the Senator from Utah had placed in the RECORD take the position that lack of good behavior meant lack of good moral conduct, and that under it a judge could not be dealt with unless his moral conduct became bad?

Mr. SUTHERLAND. I do not recall, Mr. President, whether or not that was the case.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. I know that was in the report, but I am not clear as to what it means.

Mr. COLT. It may be said that the application of the principle of this bill to the Supreme Court bears a close analogy in its mode of operation and effect to its application to the nine circuit courts of appeal. These courts may be called little Supreme Courts, since they are courts of last resort in most cases, and they were established for the very purpose of relieving the Supreme Court. Indeed, as pointed out by the Senator from Utah [Mr. SUTHERLAND], there is even more justification for applying this bill to the Supreme Court by reason of the flexibility of the circuit and district courts, owing to the interchange of the judges in these courts.

Mr. President, in view of the position and standing under the Constitution and laws of the United States of the 128 circuit and district judges I can not but regard this bill as unjust in its treatment of these judges.

But, Mr. President, this is not the most objectionable feature of this bill. The most objectionable feature is the control which it gives the President over the Federal judiciary. Such control is revolutionary in principle; it undermines the independence of the courts; it strikes at the very foundation of our liberty. This liberty is founded upon the supremacy of law, and the supremacy of law signifies the entire absence of arbitrary or discretionary power on the part of the Executive to interfere with the courts or the judges. It further signifies equality before the law, which means that all persons must be tried by the same kind of law, and that the parties before the court must stand upon an equality.

In speaking of this rule of law as the predominant characteristic of English institutions Dicey says:

> The rule of law means, in the first place, the absolute supremacy or predominance of regular law as opposed to the influence of arbitrary power, and excludes the existence of arbitrariness, of prerogative, or even wide discretionary authority on the part of the Government. It means, again, equality before the law, or the equal subjection of all classes to the ordinary law of the land administered by the ordinary law courts; the rule of law in this sense excludes the idea of any exemption of officials or others from the duty of obedience to the law which governs other citizens or from the jurisdiction of the ordinary tribunals.

This bill is subversive of these great principles because it not only permits Executive interference with the judges, but it violates the principle of equality before the law. The Government does not stand upon an equality with the private citizen before the courts when it has the power to retire from active duty and to degrade in rank and standing the very judge before whom a Government case is being tried.

History teaches that to permit the Government to occupy the position contemplated by this bill is wrong, because it offers a temptation to subserviency on the part of the judges and to an abuse of power on the part of the Government. Judges should not be placed in a position where they can be displaced if they incur the displeasure of the Executive. The absolute independence of United States judges is essential to guard the Constitution and the rights of individuals. It is essential to the faithful performance of their duties in the impartial administration of justice. The power of encroachment on the part of the Executive means the insecurity of the legal freedom of the citizen.

In considering this bill let us ever keep in mind that the Government is engaged in most important litigation in the Federal courts, and hence is not a disinterested party. Attorneys General and district attorneys who represent the Government in these cases are human, and what is more natural than that they should advise the Executive, when the Government has suffered defeat in some close and important case, that the court needs strengthening by a change in its composition.

It is clear, then, that under our system of jurisprudence the Executive should not be vested with power to reconstruct the courts by the creation of new judges and the retirement of old judges from their active duties and standing in the courts. There is no true liberty if the power of judging is not entirely separated from the Executive power.

Mr. President, the framers of the Constitution understood fully the great principles which underlie our liberty, and in the Constitution they have carefully guarded the Federal courts and the judges against any encroachment of Executive power. There are several controlling provisions on this subject:

Section 8 of Article I, in defining the powers vested in Congress, declares that Congress shall have power—

> To constitute tribunals inferior to the Supreme Court.

Section 1 of Article III declares:

> The judicial power of the United States shall be vested in one Supreme Court, and in such inferior courts as the Congress may from time to time ordain and establish.
> The judges, both of the Supreme and inferior courts, shall hold their offices during good behavior, and shall, at stated times, receive for their services a compensation which shall not be diminished during their continuance in office.

Section 1 of Article II declares:

> The executive power shall be vested in a President of the United States of America. * * *
> * * * He shall nominate and, by and with the advice and consent of the Senate, shall appoint * * * judges of the Supreme Court, and all other officers of the United States, whose appointments are not herein otherwise provided for, and which shall be established by law. * * *

By the first two of these provisions the power to establish inferior courts is vested in Congress. As the judge is a necessary part of a court, the office of judge must be created by Congress; and, in fact, Congress has always designated by statute the number of judges who should comprise the courts. It is certainly a doubtful question whether Congress can delegate this power to the Executive.

By the third of these provisions the judges are to hold their offices during good behavior, receiving a compensation which shall not be diminished during their continuance in office. By this provision the independence of the judiciary is secured by life tenure and a fixed compensation. And here again it is certainly a doubtful question whether a judge can be said to hold his office during good behavior when he can be "relieved" against his will from his official duties as prescribed by law, and can only be called upon to sit in some particular case or cases in the event of an emergency. Clearly this bill violates the spirit if not the letter of this constitutional provision.

By the last of these provisions the President is vested with the power to appoint, with the consent of the Senate, the judges of the Supreme Court and all other officers of the United States whose appointments are not herein otherwise provided for, and which shall be established by law.

The power to appoint circuit and district judges is vested, by implication, in the President under the latter part of this paragraph. It is plain from the language used that the office must first be "established by law," and that the only power vested in the President is to fill an office so established. Manifestly he has no power to create the office of circuit or district judge. His power is strictly limited to filling such of these offices as Congress may establish. It is clear, therefore, that the provisions of this bill on their very face are of doubtful constitutionality.

Mr. President, no system of tenure of office works perfectly in the case of judges. There are some objections to a life tenure and other objections to a shorter period. The framers of the Constitution believed that a life tenure was best, and consequently Federal judges must continue to hold their offices during good behavior until the Constitution is changed. In the working of this life-tenure system it has been found that sometimes a judge will remain in office after the time when he is capable of discharging the duties of the office. Such instances are rare, but they do occur.

To meet this situation Congress has provided that judges who have reached the age of 70 and have served 10 years may retire on full pay. It is said, however, that this provision does not give adequate relief, as some judges fail to take advantage of it and still retain their office when unable to fulfill its requirements.

The object of this bill, it is claimed, is to meet this situation by enabling the President to appoint a new judge and practically to retire the old judge who has not availed himself of his right to resign. The result would be that we should then have three classes of Federal judges—active judges, supernumerary judges, and judges who have resigned after 70—all of whom would draw full pay.

Now, what I want to call attention to is that in the actual working of our Federal system, so far as the circuit and district judges are concerned, there is little difference between a judge who has resigned and a judge who still holds on to the office but is unable to perform his judicial work. The interchange of circuit and district judges is such under the law that we have practically the same result whether a judge resigns or is incapacitated. In the instance cited by the Senator from Georgia [Mr. SMITH] of a judge who had been confined to his house for years the only effect is that some other judge takes his place, and the situation is substantially the same as if this particular judge had resigned. What is needed in such a case, whether the judge continues in office or resigns, is an additional judge.

I can not attach much weight to the reasoning that a judge who is incapacitated by reason of physical infirmities can still be of service to the courts by occupying the position of a supernumerary. Nor am I impressed with the argument that judges who have reached the age of 70 would be glad to take advantage of the privileges conferred by the bill instead of resigning on full pay. To test this question I would be very glad if the Senator from Georgia would offer an amendment to the bill to the effect that no judge should be obliged to submit to the provisions of the bill until he had filed a written request with the Department of Justice.

To my mind the whole issue raised by this bill resolves itself into the inquiry, Shall additional circuit and district judges required for the proper conduct of judicial business be created by the Executive or by act of Congress? In other words, Shall we substitute the President for Congress in fixing the number of necessary judges for the Federal courts?

It is possible that it may be a more direct and convenient way to obtain this relief at the hands of the Executive than through the regular channel of Congress; but in regard to this proposition we must weigh practical convenience on the one hand as against the grave constitutional and other objections which arise in the attempt to vest any such power in the Executive. And, further, I can see more room for political manipulation with respect to these high offices if the President is vested with the power conferred by this bill than if the power should remain in Congress, where, I believe, it belongs under both the common law and the Constitution of the United States.

The only safe course, then, to pursue in affording such relief to the circuit and district courts as may now be necessary is for Congress to pass a special act in every case where an additional judge is required.

The suggested plan of the Attorney General differs widely in principle and practical operation from this bill. According to this plan the President is required to appoint circuit and district judges in every case where the judge does not resign as now provided by law. This would not only call for an unnecessary number of additional judges, but it would work a manifest injustice in the great majority of cases. Most judges at the age of 70, just as is the case with Senators in this body, have only reached the maturity of their powers and are capable of doing their best work.

In an instructive paper prepared by Judge B. F. Long, of North Carolina, and introduced into the RECORD the other day by Senator OVERMAN, appear the following facts: Twenty-two of the 56 judges of the Supreme Court were between 56 and 66 years of age when appointed, and 36 out of these 56, though of mature age at the time of their appointment, served from 10 to 34 years. Further, 20 of the judges of the Supreme Court served comparatively long periods after they were 70, as, for example, Chief Justice Taney, 17½ years; Chief Justice Marshall, 9½ years; Justice Nelson, 9¾ years; Justice Bradley, 8⅝ years; and so on. The author also draws similar illustrations from the English courts. It is manifest, therefore, that under our constitutional system of life tenure Congress should not pass a law requiring the President to appoint an additional judge whenever a circuit or district judge reaches the age of 70 and does not resign.

Whether we consider the plan of the Attorney General or that plan as modified by this bill, the only solution of the problem is to call upon Congress to act as the necessities of the situation may require.

Mr. President, we are not confronted with any startling or unusual condition with respect to our circuit and district courts. There is no emergency such as might afford some justification for novel and hazardous legislation. Our Federal judicial system has worked well. It has commanded the admiration of the world. It is the unique feature in our constitutional form of Government. It stands as the protector of the Constitution and of individual rights against the exercise of every form of arbitrary power. Let us guard it in every way. Let us resolve that it shall be neither changed nor modified, except when demanded by the sober, mature judgment of the American people.

OSAGE OIL LEASES.

Mr. LANE. Mr. President, I wish to place in the RECORD the terms which govern the sale of the oil lands of the Osage Indians in Oklahoma. They will be sold to-morrow. The sale has been deferred from time to time, and I am informed that there is great dissatisfaction among the Indians in regard to the price which has been set upon their lands by the Indian Bureau. The lands are to be sold upon terms in which the bidding is based upon a bonus in addition to a fixed royalty of from one-sixth to one-fifth of the product. There are some of these lands for which offers have been made of one-half. Other lands are worth more; some are worth less, perhaps; but in the way the sales are to be made the lands will be disposed of under a method which leaves it largely to guesswork and which is acknowledged to be a matter of chance by the bureau. The value of the lands is not definitely ascertained; the bidding is restricted to those who can put up the cash as a bonus or a bet. This excludes not only men who are familiar with drilling oil and operating wells but do not have the cash to tender as a bonus, yet could give a bond for the faithful performance of their contracts, but also, and for the same reason, excludes large numbers of others. This method of sale has been objected to by many, and the sales have been deferred from time to time.

Complaint was also made in regard to the sale of the gas lands. The gas was to be sold by the Indian Bureau for one-half a cent for each 1,000 cubic feet. Under the terms of the former lease the Indians had received in the past about one-twentieth of a cent for a thousand cubic feet of gas. Under fire and after complaint was heard by the Committee on Indian Affairs against such injustice, the Indian Bureau saw its way clear to accept 3 cents per thousand cubic feet of gas for its wards.

What I wish to do, with the consent of the Senate, is to have this advertisement for tenders placed in the RECORD in connection with my statement that an offer has been made, apparently a bona fide offer, of 50 per cent royalty for some of the lands which are to be sold at one-fifth royalty, in addition to whatever bonus may be bid upon it, which will amount to no man knows what. These lands are being sold upon uncertain terms, and the claim is made that the Indians will lose not less than $10,000,000 and perhaps $16,000,000 if such deals are made.

I introduced a resolution some time ago asking that the land be sold upon a simple royalty basis with the unfair bonus or betting clause left out. A well producing 3 barrels a day necessarily is not as valuable as one which produces 50 barrels a day, or another which produces a thousand barrels a day or a "gusher" from which returns may produce $7,000 or $8,000 a day, as is the case now in some portions of this same territory or adjoining territory belonging to the Indians. Yet they all sell at the same price of one-sixth or one-fifth royalty.

I feel that the rights of the Indians are not being protected. I do not say that to reflect upon any one unjustly; but an appeal was made to me to-day to the effect that this was especially a matter of conscience with Congress; that we are primarily the guardians of those people; and asking me if I was going to consent, without protest, to the method proposed by which the Indians will be parted from their property, and by which it was alleged they will lose from $10,000,000 to $16,- 000,000. I felt it my duty to call the attention of the Senate to the subject.

As I have said, the lands are to be sold to-morrow upon terms which will pay them, in my opinion and that of many others, much less than the Indians would receive if the lands were sold upon a fair basis of ordinary business principles.

I ask the consent of the Senate to place the price list of the bureau to which I have referred in the RECORD, so that all men may read it in connection with the statement which is apparently a bona fide offer, was made of one-half royalty, minus a bonus, instead of a one-fifth royalty with an unknown bonus for some of the identical lands that are rated for sale in it.

I give notice also that if the sale is made of those or any other lands at a price less than its actual value I shall do what I can to stop it.

I now ask that the circular to which I have referred be printed in the RECORD.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Without objection, it is so ordered.

The circular referred to is as follows:

DEPARTMENT OF THE INTERIOR,
OFFICE OF INDIAN AFFAIRS.

PUBLIC SALE OF LEASES OF DEVELOPED OSAGE INDIAN OIL LANDS.

TERMS AND CONDITIONS.

Approximately 100 quarter-section or fractional quarter-section units of developed oil lands located in Osage County, Okla., will be offered for lease for oil-mining purposes to the highest responsible bidder in accordance with the provisions of this circular at public auction at the office of the superintendent of the Osage Indian Agency, Pawhuska, Okla., beginning Tuesday, February 15, 1916, at 2 o'clock p. m.

These lands belonging to the Osage Tribe of Indians are located within the so-called Foster lease, which will expire by limitation on March 16, 1916, are now producing oil, and are being operated by various sublessees under the regulations of the Secretary of the Interior.

Oil leases will be made for a period of five years from March 17, 1916, and as long thereafter as oil is found in paying quantities, but such period shall not extend beyond the time the title to the minerals remains in the Osage Tribe, which time will expire April 8, 1931, unless otherwise provided by Congress.

Successful bidders may keep a representative on the premises after the day of sale, and will take possession of the properties under new leases on March 17, 1916. All leases and accompanying papers shall be upon forms prescribed, and operations shall be conducted in accordance with the regulations approved by the Secretary of the Interior August 26, 1915.

The equipment, including the casing, on some of the lands offered for lease has been appraised, which appraisements are shown in the following list. All bids must be for a bonus in addition to the royalties as hereinafter fixed, and in addition thereto the appraised value of the equipment and casing must be paid for at the time of sale. Should no acceptable bid be received for any of the tracts offered, the present operators will be given new leases thereon as provided by the regulations approved August 26, 1915.

Lessees shall pay to the Osage Tribe a royalty on oil of one-sixth, except that such royalty shall be one-fifth when the production from all the producing wells on any quarter section or fractional quarter section during any calendar month shall be sufficient to average 100 or more barrels of oil per producing well per day.

Each quarter section or fractional quarter section will be offered separately, and a bidder may acquire any number of such tracts the acreage of which added to that of Osage lands held under lease by the bidder on the date of sale does not exceed 4,800 acres, provided that the present sublessee who is now operating any tract included in the following list will be permitted to bid upon such tract independent of present acreage held by him.

Successful bidders will be required to make payments on the day of sale in the form of exchange or certified check on a solvent national bank as follows: Twenty per cent of the amount of bonus offered plus the appraised value of equipment and casing payable to George N. Wise, special disbursing agent, shall be deposited with the superintendent of the Osage Agency. If any bid is not approved by the Secretary of the Interior, all such payments shall be promptly returned to the bidder.

Where the value of the equipment on any tract is not specified such tract will be offered for lease independent of the equipment, and the successful bidder may negotiate for the purchase of such equipment from the present sublessee. If sale of the equipment is not perfected in such cases between interested parties the present sublessee will be allowed 30 days after March 16, 1916, within which to remove any equipment to which he is legally entitled, but in no case shall the casing in any producing wells be removed.

Upon being notified of the acceptance of bid successful bidders shall execute leases and file same with necessary accompanying papers and balance of purchase price or bonus with the superintendent of the Osage Agency on or before March 10, 1916. Failure on the part of any bidder to comply with this requirement will operate as a forfeiture of the amount theretofore paid and subject his lease to disapproval. Bond shall be furnished in the sum of $1,000 for each quarter section or fractional part thereof, but the lessee may file one bond in the sum of $15,000 to cover all such leases to which he may be a party.

Prospective bidders may at any time inspect the detailed inventory of equipment and other records concerning production of wells on any unit at the office of the superintendent, Osage Agency, and should inspect the properties before date of sale, as neither the production nor condition of equipment is guaranteed.

Bidders who can not be present on the date of sale may be represented by an agent, but such agent must have a duly executed power of attorney to so act from the real party in interest. Written bids may also be submitted addressed to J. George Wright, Superintendent, Pawhuska, Okla., which shall give the description of the land, the terms of the bid, and be accompanied by exchange or certified checks as herein required of oral bidders, and by a sworn statement as to good faith and ability to pay the balance of bid and to operate the property. Such bids should be mailed so as to reach Pawhuska not later than February 14, 1916, and should be marked on the outside of the envelope "Bid on oil lands." Any written bid so received will be given consideration, and the highest such bid for any tract will be announced at the sale as the first bid. Should no higher oral bid be received a tract may be awarded to the maker of the highest written bid.

In order to afford protection to all interests involved against irresponsible bidders, the superintendent of the Osage Agency may, on his own initiative, and upon the request of any other bidder shall, require any bidder to submit satisfactory evidence of good faith and that he has the cash in hand or at his command, and to furnish, whenever called upon by the superintendent during the progress of the sale, an authenticated statement of some solvent national bank to the effect that the bidder has the means to purchase the property. All bidders or agents should come to the sale prepared to make such showing promptly when called upon. The superintendent shall refuse to entertain any bid from any person who does not make a showing satisfactory to him in this respect.

The Osage council shall meet on Wednesday, February 16, 1916, to consider the bids received and to make recommendations with reference thereto.

The lands included in the following list are offered for lease for oil only. The gas rights are being leased separately. Should the oil lessee in drilling for oil bring in a gas well he shall be reimbursed the expense of such well by the gas lessee in the manner provided in the regulations of August 26, 1915.

The right is reserved by the Secretary of the Interior to reject any and all bids and to disapprove any lease. Further information may be had upon application to the superintendent of the Osage Agency.

EXECUTIVE SESSION.

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President——

Mr. STONE. Mr. President, if the Senator from Utah wishes to present some business, I will not interfere; otherwise, I will move an executive session.

Mr. SMOOT. If the Senator wishes to do that, I will simply say that I was going to ask that House bill 7617, the good-roads bill, be temporarily laid aside, and then I intended to move to take up the calendar to consider unobjected cases until half past 5 o'clock; but if the Senator desires an executive session, I will refrain from doing so.

Mr. STONE. There is a general desire to have a short executive session and then to adjourn.

Mr. SMOOT. Very well, I shall not object to that course being followed.

Mr. STONE. I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of executive business.

The motion was agreed to, and the Senate proceeded to the consideration of executive business. After five minutes spent in executive session the doors were reopened, and (at 4 o'clock and 35 minutes p. m.) the Senate adjourned until to-morrow, Thursday, April 20, 1916, at 12 o'clock meridian.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES.

WEDNESDAY, April 19, 1916.

The House met at 11 o'clock a. m.

The Chaplain, Rev. Henry N. Couden, D. D., offered the following prayer:

O Thou great Spirit, ever present, working in and through the hearts of Thy children, help us to open wide the portals of our souls that we may be guided in the duties of this day and render faithful service in the working out of the purposes Thou hast ordained, and thus be worthy of the gifts Thou hast bestowed upon us and merit the "Well done, good and faithful servant." In the name of Thy Son, Jesus Christ. Amen.

The Journal of the proceedings of yesterday was read and approved.

EXTENSION OF REMARKS.

Mr. LINTHICUM rose.

The SPEAKER. For what purpose does the gentleman from Maryland rise?

Mr. LINTHICUM. To ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the RECORD by inserting a letter from James W. Helme, of Lansing, Mich., and my reply thereto, on House resolution 137.

The SPEAKER. Who is the man?

Mr. LINTHICUM. James W. Helme, of Lansing, Mich.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Maryland [Mr. LINTHICUM] asks unanimous consent to extend his remarks in the RECORD by printing a letter from James W. Helme, of Lansing, Mich. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE.

A message from the Senate, by Mr. Crockett, one of its clerks, announced that the Senate had passed without amendment resolution of the following title:

House concurrent resolution 30.

Resolved by the House of Representatives (the Senate concurring), That the two Houses of Congress assemble in the Hall of the House of Representatives on Wednesday, the 19th day of April, 1916, at 1 o'clock in the afternoon, for the purpose of receiving such communication as the President of the United States shall be pleased to make to them.

SUGAR TARIFF BILL.

Mr. KITCHIN. Mr. Speaker, I call up for consideration the conference report on the bill (H. R. 11471) to amend an act entitled "An act to reduce tariff duties and to provide revenue for the Government, and for other purposes," approved October 3, 1913.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from North Carolina [Mr. KITCHIN] calls up the conference report on the sugar tariff bill, H. R. 11471, which the Clerk will report. Is it a complete report?

Mr. KITCHIN. It is a disagreeing report as to one amendment.

The conference report was read as follows:

CONFERENCE REPORT (NO. 573).

The committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 11471) to amend an act entitled "An act to reduce tariff duties and to provide revenue for the Government, and for other purposes," approved October 3, 1913, having met, after full and free conference have agreed to recommend and do recommend to their respective Houses as follows:

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate to the title, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In the last line of the Senate amendment to the title strike out the words "manufactures of sugar" and insert in lieu thereof the words "other articles"; and the Senate agree to the same.

The committee of conference has been unable to agree on the amendment of the Senate to the bill.

CLAUDE KITCHIN,
HENRY T. RAINEY,
J. W. FORDNEY,
Managers on the part of the House.

F. M. SIMMONS,
WM. J. STONE,
H. C. LODGE,
Managers on the part of the Senate.

The statement is as follows:

STATEMENT.

The managers on the part of the House at the conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 11471) to amend an act entitled "An act to reduce tariff duties and provide revenue for the Government, and for other purposes," approved October 3, 1913, submit the following written statement in explanation of the effect of the action agreed upon by the conferees and recommended in the accompanying conference report:

The House recedes from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate to the title of the bill with an amendment which makes the title broad enough to cover all the articles provided for in paragraphs 177 and 178 of the sugar schedule of the tariff act of October 3, 1913, and covered by the bill.

The committee of conference has been unable to agree on the amendment of the Senate to the bill providing that the present rates of duty upon sugar and kindred articles shall remain in full force and effect until May 1, 1920, and placing the above articles on the free list after that date.

CLAUDE KITCHIN,
HENRY T. RAINEY,
J. W. FORDNEY,
Managers on the part of the House.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Speaker, I see the conferees agreed to an amendment of the title. I suppose there is no objection to that, because the title originally was erroneous. The original title was to amend an act. The Senate amendment is to change the title so as to amend a certain paragraph.

Mr. KITCHIN. We agreed to that with an amendment.

Mr. MANN. As a matter of fact, if the House has its way and passes the bill in the form it was originally passed by the House it is not an amendment of the tariff act at all. It is to repeal certain provisos and does not pretend to amend it.

Mr. KITCHIN. Yes; we agreed with the Senate conferees on something, with the hope that they would yield something to us. We were very fair about it.

Mr. MANN. Of course, whenever it goes into a law it will appear in either case as an act to amend a certain act, when it does not amend at all. It simply repeals certain provisions in the act.

Mr. KITCHIN. The act itself will show exactly what it does, in spite of the title.

Mr. MANN. As I understand, it is the intention of the gentleman to do what about the other provisions?

Mr. KITCHIN. I intend to move to further insist on the disagreement of the House. Mr. Speaker, I move the adoption of the report.

The SPEAKER. The question is on the adoption of the conference report.

The conference report was agreed to.

Mr. KITCHIN. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House further insist on its disagreement to the Senate amendment and ask for a further conference. The House understands well the attitude of the Senate and of the House.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from North Carolina moves that the House further insist on its disagreement and ask for a conference.

Mr. GORDON. Mr. Speaker, a parliamentary inquiry.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. GORDON. Would a motion to concur have precedence over the motion that the gentleman has just made?

Mr. MANN. Yes.

The SPEAKER. A motion to recede and concur would.

Mr. GORDON. I would like to make that motion, if it is in order.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Ohio [Mr. GORDON] moves that the House recede from its disagreement and concur in the Senate amendment. The question is on agreeing to that motion.

The question was taken, and the Speaker announced that the "noes" seemed to have it.

Mr. GORDON. Mr. Speaker, I demand a division.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Ohio [Mr. GORDON] asks for a division.

The House divided; and there were—ayes 7, noes 71.

Mr. GORDON. Mr. Speaker, I make the point that there is not a quorum present.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman makes the point that there is no quorum present. Evidently there is not a quorum present, and the Doorkeeper will close the doors, the Sergeant at Arms will notify the absentees, and the Clerk will call the roll. The question is on agreeing to the motion of the gentleman from Ohio that the House recede from its disagreement and concur in the Senate amendment.

The question was taken; and there were—yeas 27, nays 309, answered "present" 2, not voting 95, as follows:

The result of the vote was announced as above recorded.

The SPEAKER. A quorum is present. The doorkeeper will unlock the doors.

Mr. KITCHIN. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House insist on its disagreement to the Senate amendment and ask for a further conference.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from North Carolina moves that the House insist on its disagreement to the Senate amendment and ask for a further conference.

The motion was agreed to.

The SPEAKER announced the following conferees: Mr. KITCHIN, Mr. RAINEY, and Mr. FORDNEY.

ORDER IN THE GALLERIES.

The SPEAKER. The Chair wants to admonish the people in the galleries that they are here by the courtesy of the House, and that during the proceedings to-day they must not talk, or applaud, or read newspapers, or anything of that sort. If they do, the galleries will be cleared.

AGRICULTURAL APPROPRIATION BILL.

On motion of Mr. LEVER, the House resolved itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the further consideration of the bill (H. R. 12717) making appropriations for the Department of Agriculture for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1917, with Mr. HAMLIN in the chair.

The Clerk read as follows:

Nebraska National Forest, Nebr., $2,365; and to extend the work to the Niobrara division thereof, $5,000: Provided, That from the nurseries on said forest the Secretary of Agriculture, under such rules and regulations as he may prescribe, may furnish young trees free, so far as they may be spared, to residents of the territory covered by "An act increasing the area of homesteads in a portion of Nebraska," approved April 28, 1904, $7,365.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Chairman, I reserve a point of order on that paragraph.

I have no doubt that this paragraph may be of some value, but we have stricken out a provision for furnishing free cuttings, and so forth, in the arid regions of the Northwest from the other stations. Why is the item for the furnishing of trees in Nebraska left in the bill?

Mr. LEVER. I will say to the gentleman from Illinois that this item, if he will recall, was placed in the bill some four or five years ago, on the floor of the House, at the instance of the gentleman from Nebraska [Mr. KINKAID], and the committee has not seen fit to disturb it, inasmuch as this was the action of the House. My information is that there have been distributed during the fiscal year 112,110 trees—pine, box elder, ash, cottonwood, white elm, and so forth—to 746 applicants; and the testimony also is that the distribution has been very successful. In view of the action of the House itself the committee did not feel that it ought to disturb the item.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Chairman, I do not suppose that they are going to distribute very many white-pine trees from this nursery, and probably they will not distribute white-pine trees that are afflicted with the white-pine blister rust, yet it might be possible.

I received last night in my room, where it ought not to come—it ought to have come to the office—a letter which was not opened there, but opened by my secretary this morning with other mail of that kind, from the secretary of the Interstate Committee for the Suppression of the Pine Blister Rust. Very likely other Members received the same letter——

Mr. LEVER. I have a copy myself.

Mr. MANN. Because it is a manifold letter. This letter was dated April 15, 1916, which was last Saturday. It asks Members of the House to support the appropriation in the Agricultural bill for the investigation and suppression of the white-pine blister rust.

The Agricultural appropriation bill has been on the calendar now for several weeks. Last Saturday, after the bill had been on the calendar for several weeks, we passed the paragraph containing this appropriation. After the item was passed in Committee of the Whole, or about the same time, the secretary of this association sent out this letter to Members of Congress. How valuable his services are! After the matter has been on the calendar for weeks this association wakes up to the fact that an appropriation is proposed, after it has been passed; and in order that the association may have reason for paying the salary of the secretary, he writes a letter to the various Members of Congress asking them to support an appropriation that has already been agreed to. If the White Pine Blister Rust Association is as slow in reference to the white-pine blister rust as it is in reference to appropriations for its suppression, we will be waiting a long time for the suppression of that disease.

Mr. SLOAN. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MANN. Certainly.

Mr. SLOAN. I should like to ask where this secretary lives.

Mr. MANN. I do not know where he lives. The Interstate Committee for the Supression of the Pine Blister Rust has its office at 4 Joy Street, Boston, Mass.

Mr. SLOAN. I desire to say that the worst blisters are over toward the Atlantic Ocean and not in the middle of the continent. I think this is a proper appropriation. It has been granted for a number of years. It is for the northwestern part of Nebraska.

Mr. MANN. I thought the gentleman was talking about the rust blister.

Mr. SLOAN. I have disposed of that; I am talking about this appropriation. The facts are that the appropriation is asked for the northwestern part of Nebraska, where we have what little arid land the State possesses. Nebraska is known as the tree-planters' State, named so by our legislature. When it was admitted into the Union very few trees marked its plains. There were very few along its streams, but Nebraska perhaps has taken the lead in planting trees and developing forestry.

Nebraska sent to this Capital J. Sterling Morton, Secretary of Agriculture, who was the father of Arbor Day, and whose enthusiasm and enterprise for tree planting was the forerunner of Arbor Day, since adopted as a holiday by nearly every State in the Union. Nebraska year after year has been developing forestry. And this nursery instituted in this particular section and climate produces trees more likely to grow when transplanted in that locality than elsewhere and more likely to thrive than trees produced in other climates and localities.

Mr. HUMPHREY of Washington. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. SLOAN. Yes.

Mr. HUMPHREY of Washington. How many acres have you planted there?

Mr. SLOAN. Thousands of acres and millions of trees; new trees are being planted every year.

Mr. HUMPHREY of Washington. How large are the trees?

Mr. SLOAN. Oh, they do not compare with the trees in Washington nor the family tree of the gentleman from Washington, probably, but they are all growing. They have not become old enough or large enough to fall with ripeness and interfere with the lumber business. [Laughter.]

Mr. HUMPHREY of Washington. I want to ask if this is one of those reproductions where they testify in the hearings that it cost $10 to $12 an acre to plant them, and only 1 acre out of 3 lives.

Mr. SLOAN. That is not in Nebraska; that is in some other State.

Mr. HUMPHREY of Washington. I think the gentleman is mistaken, and perhaps he had better give this information, because the item is subject to a point of order.

Mr. SLOAN. This is not in my district; it is in the district of the gentleman from Nebraska, Mr. KINKAID, who is not on the floor, and I am speaking for him in his absence, with the lack, perhaps, of complete detail information. I have been through that country and I know and can assure the gentleman that arboriculture is there progressing.

Mr. HUMPHREY of Washington. According to the best information I have received as to the replanting of these small trees, none of them have ever reached a marketable size, and that it costs the Government $10 to $12 an acre in the first place, and that only 1 acre out of 3 grows; and if we are to judge by the rest of the forests in the forest reserve, 50 years from now they will pay 6 per cent on 17½ cents an acre.

Mr. SLOAN. I think the gentleman is looking through too pessimistic eyes. We do not expect, of course, to rival the State of Washington.

Mr. HUMPHREY of Washington. Take the great timber that we have in Washington, on the Pacific coast, under the forest-reserve system since it has been established. They have so conducted it—notwithstanding they have the most magnificent forests on the face of the earth—it only pays an income of 6 per cent on 17½ cents an acre. It has paid less than a cent an acre ever since they have conducted it.

Mr. SLOAN. If I may get by with this appropriation by agreeing that matters are not properly conducted in the State of Washington, I will subscribe.

Mr. HUMPHREY of Washington. They are not properly conducted anywhere as far as this reseeding or replanting is concerned. It is one of the greatest frauds that was ever attempted to be perpetrated by a Government bureau.

Mr. SLOAN. Outside of Nebraska it may be so.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Chairman, I withdraw the point of order.

Mr. HUMPHREY of Washington. Mr. Chairman, I renew the point of order, or, rather, I will reserve it.

Mr. LEVER. I am not sure that it is subject to a point of order. Does the gentleman make the point of order or reserve it?

Mr. HUMPHREY of Washington. The gentleman wants to make a few observations.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Washington is recognized.

Mr. HUMPHREY of Washington. Mr. Chairman, I have before me a copy of the hearings, in which they give the estimate of what it costs to replant these trees; and the estimate is that it costs $12 an acre. Then I see, turning over two pages, they say that only 1 out of 3 acres grows. So it costs about $30 an acre to replant an acre of timber that 50 years from now will be worth 17½ cents. Now, that is not unusual; it is characteristic of the whole Forestry Service.

Mr. Chairman, this particular provision is for the State of Nebraska; and Judge KINKAID, I understand, is not able to be on the floor of the House. If he were here and could not give any more specific explanation or information than has his colleague, I would certainly make the point of order. The only reason I am going to withdraw it is that he is not able to be here, and he might perhaps know something about it which no one else does know. I will withdraw the point of order, although I think I am not doing a public service in withdrawing it.

Mr. BENNET. Mr. Chairman, I move to amend by adding, after the word "for," in line 16, the words "or to any State."

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Page 35, after the word "for," in line 16, insert the words "or to any State."

Mr. LEVER. I reserve a point of order on that.

Mr. BENNET. It is not subject to a point of order. The rule is very clear. The paragraph itself, being subject to a point of order, having been permitted to remain in by the committee, it is subject to any germane amendment, and as I desire to speak to the amendment, if the gentleman proposes to make the point of order I hope he will make it now, so that I can be heard.

Mr. LEVER. I shall be constrained to make the point of order, and I call attention to the fact that the territory in which the trees are distributed is limited by the act itself to residents of the territory covered by the act increasing the area of homesteads in a portion of Nebraska.

The gentleman's amendment will open the gates wide and permit the distribution of these trees to any State in the Union.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. LEVER. Yes.

Mr. MANN. The gentleman does not pretend that the act referred to in this paragraph has anything to do with the distribution of trees?

Mr. LEVER. No.

Mr. MANN. That is the enlarged homestead act.

Mr. LEVER. Yes; but the gentleman's amendment——

Mr. MANN. Does the gentleman mean to say that where we describe a certain territory we can not reduce or increase it?

Mr. LEVER. As I understand the gentleman's amendment—as I caught it from the reading—it would permit a distribution from this particular nursery to any section of the country.

Mr. MANN. Certainly.

Mr. LEVER. I do not know whether I am right about it, because I am not a parliamentarian, but the point I make is that certainly it was the purpose of Congress to confine this distribution to a certain section.

Mr. MANN. But Congress has not yet expressed its purpose. This is the bill.

Mr. LEVER. I am perfectly willing, as far as I am concerned——

Mr. MANN. I am not in favor of the gentleman's amendment, but I do not think it is subject to the point of order.

Mr. LEVER. I am not in favor of the gentleman's amendment, and to save further time I will withdraw the point of order and take a vote upon it.

Mr. MANN. I do not think it is subject to the point of order.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from South Carolina withdraws the point of order, and the gentleman from New York is recognized for five minutes.

Mr. BENNET. Mr. Chairman, as this paragraph is in the bill it limits the free distribution of these trees to a certain portion of the State of Nebraska. There are certain States in the Union which are making great efforts in forestry, amongst others the State of New York. It is not so very long since that we had to import trees from Germany at a high price. Here are trees being grown in the United States, and therefore more suitable, in all probability, for New York than the imported trees from Germany, and it is not to be overlooked also that we can get these trees free, whereas we have to pay for them when we import them.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BENNET. Yes, although I am afraid if the gentleman interrupts me that he will do away with the seriousness of my remarks.

Mr. MANN. The gentleman from New York was ill the latter part of last week, or possibly the first of this week, and therefore is not aware of the fact that on page 22 of the bill we adopted a new policy, and cut out the free distribution of trees, under an item which carried an appropriation of $160,000, where heretofore we have distributed trees free, and that the House deliberately said it would not follow that policy hereafter.

Mr. BENNET. The gentleman is quite correct about my absence last week on account of illness, and I have no doubt that he is correct about what occurred last week. He is usually correct as to what occurred last week [laughter], but that does not interfere at all with the fact that here it is the purpose to distribute trees free to a certain part of the State of Nebraska, to wit, the district of our good friend Mr. KINKAID. If that is going to be done for Nebraska, and apparently it is, why should not States that are not engaged in the business of making a profit for themselves, as such, have as much right—not any more—but just as much as the good people who happen to live in this arid territory in western Nebraska, which has been so feelingly described by the gentleman from Nebraska [Mr. SLOAN]? I simply stand for the right of the individual State to have as much consideration as some other particular State, and also for the opportunity to improve the timber of the State of New York by getting these young trees from this nursery out in Nebraska. I have no feeling against the State of Nebraska. I suppose they can raise trees there. They raise other things.

Mr. NORTON. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BENNET. Yes.

Mr. NORTON. Does the gentleman want some of those trees in his district?

Mr. BENNET. Oh, the gentleman thinks that is humorous.

Mr. NORTON. Oh, no; I want a little information.

Mr. BENNET. I will say to the gentleman that in Van Courtland Park and in the Botanical Gardens in the district which I have the honor to represent there are more different kinds of trees than there are in the whole State from which he comes, and I would be very glad to add to them these Nebraska trees.

Mr. MILLER of Minnesota. Is there as great a variety of trees grown in the State of Nebraska as the gentleman states are grown in the Bronx? Are they going to try to grow as great a variety in Nebraska?

Mr. BENNET. Oh, no; but they are trying to grow a few trees, and I have no doubt that they grow good trees there and I would like to get them for the State of New York, and I can see no reason why Nebraska should not help us to spread those trees all over the United States.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Chairman, in the State of Nebraska there is a limited area of arid land that is not susceptible of cultivation under the ordinary methods which have been adopted in most places. A few years ago, where theretofore we had provided for homesteads of 160 acres, we passed what was known as the Kinkaid Act, granting homesteads of 640 acres within a certain limited area. Even that act was not very successful in getting people to take up this land. A large amount of it was taken up and a considerable amount of it was abandoned, and in the effort to get people on that land, homesteaders, to live there and cultivate it, the Government did inaugurate the policy of giving away willow trees or some other kind of trees, mostly poplars, probably, for there are not many kinds that will grow out there. In order to get people on that land we are offering them 640 acres and as an additional inducement planting trees, which are given to them. That does not apply to the States generally, much less to the State of New York.

Mr. MILLER of Minnesota. Will the gentleman yield for an inquiry?

Mr. MANN. I will.

Mr. MILLER of Minnesota. Is there any requirement in reference to young trees that are given to the settlers on this land? Is there any requirement on the part of the Government that compels the homesteader or settler to have a certain area covered by these trees? I have in mind the old tree claim.

Mr. MANN. I think not, as far as that is concerned, but they have a great many requirements.

Mr. MILLER of Minnesota. Then, as a matter of fact, is not perhaps the giving of the trees the hardship and a difficulty in respect to the settlement of the country rather than an aid?

Mr. MANN. Oh, no; people are not required to take the trees. There is no requirement in taking the homestead land that they shall plant any trees like there is under one of the laws in reference to the planting of trees. There is no such requirement; but they offer trees if they will plant them and take care of them on this land in an effort to prevent the shifting of the sand and to get people to till the soil and live upon it.

Mr. LEVER. Mr. Chairman, I ask for a vote.

Mr. KINKAID rose.

Mr. LEVER. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that debate on this paragraph and all amendments thereto close in 10 minutes.

Mr. MANN. The gentleman from Nebraska to have five minutes?

Mr. LEVER. Yes.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from South Carolina asks unanimous consent that all debate on this paragraph and amendments thereto close in 10 minutes, and that the gentleman from Nebraska [Mr. KINKAID] have 5 minutes of that time. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

Mr. KINKAID. Mr. Chairman, I have arrived barely in time to meet the pending question on the wing. I am most grateful to the membership for the courtesy shown me during my absence concerning the item of $7,325 to be expended on the two forest reserves in the Nebraska congressional district.

Mr. Chairman, the special provision in question was provided in behalf of my constituents, I might say in behalf of entrymen under the Nebraska one-section homestead law, that they should be granted free young trees from the Government nursuries operated in that same territory. Several years ago when it was being debated whether or not an experiment should be tried for reforesting in the sand-hill country, which grew pine trees centuries ago, it was proposed to the Secretary of Agriculture—the very distinguished, accomplished, and experienced Mr. Wilson, of Iowa, who did so much for agriculture in the United States and in the world—that the settlers would cooperate with the Government in planting young trees and thus proportionately relieve the Government of the expense of planting these young trees and the care of them for a number of years until they could take care of themselves, and thereby determine whether the experiment of reforesting Nebraska sand hills could be made a success. The proposition was made to Secretary Wilson by me, and he agreed it was logical and economical that the settlers in that locality be afforded opportunity to cooperate with the Government, and he then and there recommended that such a clause as the one now in question be inserted in the next Agricultural appropriation bill, and each Agricultural appropriation bill has since contained such a provision, and the settlers have been cooperating with the Government, and they have succeeded well in growing these pine trees, usually jack pine, upon their homestead claims in the territory tributary to the Government nursery.

The result is that the country is being beautified and the climate improved by these trees, which are set out upon every 640-acre homestead and upon farms and ranches to which the title has passed.

The provision has proven a decided success. There is an object lesson on pine-tree growing existing in the county of my residence, the county of Holt, where these pine trees were planted 18 years ago under the auspices of the State, and that experiment has been sufficiently successful to commend a more extended experiment on the part of the Government, and it was on the warrant, in the main, of this object lesson that the Government entered upon the experimentation of pine-tree reforesting in a national way.

Trees covering about 2 acres are to be found in a patch or a little grove, and those trees now approximate the size of saw timber; in fact, they would make a small saw log and promise in time to make pine saw logs; so that the reforesting of that sand-hill country, where it has been centuries since there were any pine trees or any other trees grown, can be made a success; and, in my very candid judgment, this provision is very worthy and should be sustained.

Mr. STEENERSON. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. KINKAID. I will.

Mr. STEENERSON. How much has been reforested in the State of the gentleman?

Mr. KINKAID. Oh, 25,000 acres, more or less.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. LEVER. Mr. Chairman, I do not desire to consume any time on this amendment, although I hope it may be defeated. I ask for a vote.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from New York.

The question was taken, and the amendment was rejected.

The Clerk read as follows:

Nez Perce National Forest, Idaho, $10,120.

Mr. HUMPHREY of Washington. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word. I would like the attention of the chairman for a moment. How many employees have they in that forest?

Mr. LEVER. I will say very frankly to the gentleman I do not have the information in reference to that at my finger tips, but I can easily get it.

Mr. HUMPHREY of Washington. What I want to know is this: The chairman will probably recall when this bill was under consideration two sessions ago, I think it was, I called attention to the fact that as near as we could obtain the information they had a bookkeeper for each one of these national forests.

Mr. LEVER. That is not the information that has come to the committee. I understand they have an accountant, a bookkeeper, at each forest district.

Mr. HUMPHREY of Washington. Well, now I see by looking at the hearings here that it costs one dollar out of every thirty-seven to keep account of it.

If that is true, it seems to me that that is something that ought to be corrected. What would be thought of a private establishment that would pay $1 out of every $37 for the purpose of having somebody keep account of it?

Mr. LEVER. A little closer observation would have shown the gentleman the error of his figures; but I may say that the gentleman from Oregon brought some information out before the committee on that proposition. The explanation of the Forester was to the effect that he was required under acts of Congress to keep a very elaborate accounting system, probably more elaborate than any other bureau or department of the Government.

Mr. McLAUGHLIN. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. LEVER. Let me finish my statement. And that necessarily the accounting expense was a good deal heavier than would be expected in private business. If the gentleman will refer to page 702 of the hearings, the statement of Mr. Adams, in charge of this particular line of work, he will find a rather full explanation of the situation. Mr. Adams says:

> This item of accounting covers the handling of appointments, which involves quite a large amount of work—far more than would be required in any private concern. In comparing Government expenditures with those of private concerns it should be borne in mind that we are compelled to observe many laws, civil-service rules, and departmental regulations, which force us to do a very large amount of work that no private concern is required to do. It is hardly fair to the Government to compare Government costs with costs in private concerns in this kind of work. There is a very large amount of administrative cost keeping which is necessary if we are going to be able to make these reports to Congress in the manner prescribed and keep track of the unit cost of work performed by different units of the organization and by different individuals, so that we can compare them and detect instances of inefficiency. The records of unit costs furnish the basis, in a large measure, for the inspection work of the service—

And so on.

Mr. McLAUGHLIN. Will the gentleman yield to me for a moment?

Mr. LEVER. I will.

Mr. McLAUGHLIN. And he goes on to say:

> On the basis of the total amounts appropriated, the cost would be only a little over 1 per cent; but if the total amount of the receipts is included, the percentage of cost is less than 1 per cent.

Mr. HUMPHREY of Washington. I notice that is what he said, but I do not see how you can figure it out that $1 in $37 is only 1 per cent. If the statement made further on in the hearing is correct, then it costs approximately $150,000 a year for the Government to have bookkeepers to tell them what is being done with the money in the Forest Service.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Washington has expired.

Without objection, the pro forma amendment will be withdrawn, and the Clerk will read.

The Clerk read as follows:

Ochoco National Forest, Oreg., $6,451.

Mr. HUMPHREY of Washington. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word. Is the chairman of the committee prepared to say that they do not have a bookkeeper for each one of these national forests?

Mr. LEVER. I am prepared to say this to the gentleman from Washington, that no bookkeeper or accountant, as such, is detailed to each of these forest units, but they very likely have a clerk there, an individual who keeps accounts, who not only does the clerical work proper, the accounting work proper, but also has supervision and control over the machinery and tools and things of that kind used in that particular forest. And, in addition to that service, he does other work. But there is no bookkeeper, as such, there.

Mr. HUMPHREY of Washington. What is the other service that he performs? He does not act as forest ranger, does he?

Mr. LEVER. I do not think so, but he keeps tract of the tools of the Forest Service and these other odds and ends. I do not know just what they are.

Mr. HUMPHREY of Washington. My recollection is that in some of these national forests they have as low as four or five employees, and out of those employees is one who receives perhaps $1,200, and that all the duty he performs is to keep track of what the others do, bookkeeping, and keeping track of the various transactions.

Mr. LEVER. I am not sure but that the gentleman states that about correctly. I was trying to——

Mr. HUMPHREY of Washington. I want to call the attention of the committee to this, and it seems to me that they ought to take some step to compel the Forest Service to remedy that condition. Think of the absurdity and the imposition it is upon this Government to have one employee out of every five or six for the purpose of keeping an account of and watching what the others do, and paying him $1,200 a year.

Mr. LEVER. I do not think the gentleman is quite fair to the department. I do not think it true that this man has nothing to do except to keep the accounts and watch what the others are doing. There is somebody there at the head of the service and in that particular forest unit, but there is no man there, as I understand it—although I may be wrong—whose only business it is to keep account and keep track of the work of the rest of the men employed.

Mr. HUMPHREY of Washington. You take it in Alaska, and there are probably 8 or 9 or 10 men up there, and out of that 10, or whatever number it is, you have a bookkeeper, and you pay him at the rate of probably $1,200 a year. And all the work that that man does could be done by a bookkeeper in two days for the entire year. No private concern would think of conducting their business in that way. It is impossible to get information from the Forest Service itself. Therefore I do hope before this bill comes in here again that the chairman will get some definite information.

Mr. HAUGEN. I would like to ask the gentleman a question.

Mr. HUMPHREY of Washington. Yes.

Mr. HAUGEN. Is the gentleman's statement based on personal knowledge? The gentleman has been on these forest reserves and is familiar with what is being done. The gentleman understands the committee has no personal knowledge of the administration. It accepts the statement of the forester and those who represent him. I assure the gentleman that the committee will welcome any information founded on facts.

Mr. HUMPHREY of Washington. The gentleman from Iowa is one of the gentlemen to whose attention I called this matter before, and I have every confidence in the gentleman, but I can not get that information. It is no use to submit an inquiry to the Forest Service. They either do not know or they will not give you any information. I have tried for years, and I could not get from them definite information on any question.

Mr. HAUGEN. Then the gentleman will appreciate the difficulties that the committee is laboring under. It is as difficult for the committee to get information as it is for any other Member to get it.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Washington has expired. The pro forma amendment will be withdrawn, and the Clerk will read.

The Clerk read as follows:

Okanogan National Forest, Wash., $9,994.

Mr. HUMPHREY of Washington. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Washington moves to strike out the last word.

Mr. HUMPHREY of Washington. Mr. Chairman, I want to say further to my friend from Iowa that when this matter was brought up before, as nearly as I could get the information, that was found to be substantially correct—that there was a bookkeeper at each one of these national forests, and it is no wonder that it costs one dollar out of every thirty-seven for bookkeeping. I remember I asked the gentleman at that time if they would not ascertain the facts; and the proper way to ascertain the facts is to have the forester come before the committee and find out from him what the facts are.

Mr. LEVER. Mr. Chairman, I am sure the gentleman has not read the statement found on page 702. Let me read it for the gentleman's information. I read:

> On the basis of the total amounts appropriated the cost would be only a little over 1 per cent; but if the total amount of receipts is included the percentage of costs is less than 1 per cent.

That is the statement of Mr. Adams, who has charge of that branch of the work.

Mr. HUMPHREY of Washington. I do not know what it costs in percentages, but I do know that there is no necessity for having a bookkeeper for every four or five individuals; and if the statement is correct that they have a bookkeeper for each one of these national forests, I think it would be safe to say that you have a bookkeeper for every 9 or 10 men in the service.

Mr. LEVER. I do not think the gentleman's statement is correct.

Mr. HUMPHREY of Washington. I do not know. I can not find out.

Mr. LEVER. I have given the gentleman the best information I have.

Mr. HUMPHREY of Washington. I have asked the question of the gentleman for the last three years, and he has had ample opportunity to find out, and the power to find out. I hope when he comes in here the next time he will have the desired information.

Mr. LEVER. The trouble is that the gentleman will not accept the information that is furnished him.

Mr. HUMPHREY of Washington. I never had any opportunity to get information, either from the gentleman or from the Forest Service.

Mr. LEVER. I am inclined to think the gentleman would not understand it if he got it. [Laughter.]

Mr. HUMPHREY of Washington. I probably would not understand what the gentleman thinks is information, if what he has given to the House just now is considered to be information; and I think I have a majority of the House with me when I make that statement.

Mr. LEVER. The gentleman is the only man who has ever said that. I think the committee is well prepared to answer questions concerning this bill. But we can not make people understand things that they refuse to understand when the information is given to them.

Mr. HUMPHREY of Washington. The gentleman makes that statement, but I think I can understand information as well as he can give it.

Mr. LEVER. Sometimes I think the gentleman does not want to understand information upon this proposition.

Mr. HAUGEN. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. HUMPHREY of Washington. Yes.

Mr. HAUGEN. I think the gentleman, if he will read the hearings, will have to concede that the committee has done its part. The committee tried to get the information. The gentleman will find that in the hearings all sorts of questions have been asked. The chairman of the committee has stated just what information the committee has had.

Mr. LEVER. I can not understand what the gentleman says.

Mr. HUMPHREY of Washington. I can not understand accurately what the gentleman from South Carolina says.

Mr. LEVER. Perhaps we are talking at cross-purposes.

Mr. HAUGEN. I was stating to the gentleman that we have obtained all the information that is obtainable, and that if the gentleman will read the hearings, covering some 1,700 pages, he will admit that the committee has done its part. It is possible that the committee has not all the information that is desired and which it should have, but we have done our best.

Now, if the gentleman has inside information, and undoubtedly he is more familiar with these projects than I am, the committee would welcome any information that he or any other gentleman has to contribute.

Mr. HUMPHREY of Washington. Mr. Chairman, inasmuch as the gentleman is using time that was yielded to me, I wish he would talk loud enough for me to hear him.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Washington has expired. The pro forma amendment will be withdrawn. The Clerk will read.

The Clerk read as follows:

Oregon National Forest, Oreg., $12,560.

Mr. HUMPHREY of Washington. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Washington moves to strike out the last word.

Mr. HUMPHREY of Washington. Mr. Chairman, if I can get a little more information from the gentleman from Iowa I would be willing to pass this particular item. Now, I do not think it is incumbent upon every Member of this House to read all these hearings. The committee members ought to read them. I will ask the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. HAUGEN] if he knows whether or not they do employ a bookkeeper for each one of these national forests?

Mr. HAUGEN. Mr. Chairman, I stated that the only information the committee had is what we get from the departments.

Mr. HUMPHREY of Washington. What is that information?

Mr. HAUGEN. We got all the information possible, and the chairman of the committee has stated what information the committee has. The chairman of the committee has stated that the cost of bookkeeping is 1 per cent. The gentleman from Washington says it is 37 per cent. I concede that the gentleman from Washington has more inside information on this subject than any member of the committee has. He lives in the vicinity of these forests, and undoubtedly has inside knowledge. All the information we have is simply the information furnished by the department.

Mr. HUMPHREY of Washington. Now, just let me ask the gentleman this question, without confusing it with any other: Do you have a bookkeeper for each one of these forest reserves?

Mr. HAUGEN. The chairman stated that he has not that information. If bookkeepers are employed they are not classified as such. It has not been possible for the committee to get that information. When questions were asked by Members as to the number of employees, discussion generally drifted into percentages and other discussions.

Mr. HUMPHREY of Washington. Now, Mr. Chairman, after taking up 15 minutes of the time of the House we get the information that they do not know. After asking the question over and over again as to whether or not they have one bookkeeper for each one of these national forests we finally find out that they do not know. I would like to ask whether that question was asked of the men who were before the committee. Does the gentleman from Iowa know whether it was asked?

Mr. HAUGEN. The chairman of the committee [Mr. LEVER] answered the gentleman's question a minute ago. He stated that questions were asked, and he stated what information was given. He stated that one man was assigned to keep accounts. What other work he does I do not know; but accepting the statement of the Forester, we assume that his time is occupied to good advantage.

Mr. HUMPHREY of Washington. After all the committee got just as much information from the Forest Service as a Member of the House can get. In other words, they can not get any.

Mr. ANDERSON. If the gentleman will yield, I will say that the department estimated for the current year for nine forest clerks at $1,200, two forest clerks at $1,100——

Mr. HUMPHREY of Washington. I refuse to yield further, because I am not asking about clerks. I am asking about bookkeepers.

Mr. ANDERSON. These gentlemen are bookkeepers.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman declines to yield further.

Mr. HUMPHREY of Washington. If the gentleman will answer the question, I will yield. If the gentleman from Minnesota [Mr. ANDERSON] is prepared to answer the question I have asked the other members of the committee, as to whether or not they have a separate bookkeeper for each one of these national forests, I will yield for an answer.

Mr. ANDERSON. I will take time in my own right.

The CHAIRMAN. Without objection, the pro forma amendment is withdrawn, and the Clerk will read.

The Clerk read as follows:

Olympic National Forest, Wash., $16,598.

Mr. JOHNSON of Washington. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word, in order that I may refer to line 22, the appropriation for the Olympic National Forest Reserve, which I notice has been reduced from $17,178 to $16,598, and I wonder why.

Mr. LEVER. It was stated in the hearings that this decrease of $580 results from the removal of the supervisor's office to the Federal building, this making a decrease of the amount hitherto allotted for rent and quarters' expenses.

Mr. JOHNSON of Washington. The saving is in the rent at the city outside of the reserve where the headquarters are?

Mr. LEVER. That is the statement I have.

Mr. JOHNSON of Washington. This is a reserve where promises have been made from the start that something would be done for the benefit of the community. This reserve covers nearly 1,000,000 acres of the land of one county, leaving not enough outside taxable property for the proper advancement of that county. I might add for the information of those concerned that out of the 25 per cent returned to the State of Washington as its share of the sales in the forest reserve, that money to be doled around among the forest-reserve counties, the amount in lieu of taxes is less than one-half cent per acre. That is how the wonderful 25 per cent pans out. This great Olympic Forest Reserve has not yet received one five-cent piece from the 10 per cent fund. In this reserve there are homesteaders who went into the valleys and took up agricultural lands 25 years ago, and they are still waiting for roads. Their post routes have fallen down. The parcel post does not go to them unless an extra 2 cents is paid on every pound. The forest reserve has seared the hopes of these settlers.

Now, what has it done on the outside? The holding of all that Federal timber for conservation—for posterity, if you please—has resulted in some of the owners of the half of the timber on the outside being compelled to go into an extensive process of liquidation. In other words, the Government holds its timber. The private owners must cut their timber to pay their taxes. In one county, as shown by an exhibit before the Federal Trade Commission, the increase in taxation on the property outside of the reserve in 10 years went up 405 per cent, while the valuation went up about half that. Who can hold timber at that rate? Does anyone call that conservation? Why, gentlemen, if we continue to conserve the Government's part and make our people slaughter their part, what will happen? The time may come when Congress will have to take over the rest of the lumber industry or provide some scheme by which it shall not be taxed to death and absolutely frozen out in an effort to conserve something for the people who will be here 100 years from now.

The CHAIRMAN. Without objection, the pro forma amendment is withdrawn, and the Clerk will read.

The Clerk read as follows:

Payette National Forest, Idaho, $10,537.

Mr. POWERS. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the RECORD on the subject of immigration by printing a short and well-written article by Dr. Ryan, professor of economics in one of our universities.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Kentucky asks unanimous consent to extend his remarks in the RECORD on the question of immigration by the printing of the document to which he refers. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. ANDERSON. Mr. Chairman, the gentleman from Washington [Mr. HUMPHREY] asked for certain information with respect to the number of bookkeepers employed at the different forest stations. So far as I know, there are no bookkeepers estimated for as such; but the estimate does show that there were 9 forest clerks estimated for at $1,200 each; 2 forest clerks, at $1,100 each; 2 clerks, at $1,200 each, for three months; 1 clerk, at $1,020, temporary; 38 clerks, at $900, for from 1 to 8 months; 13 clerks, at from $120 to $840 each, from 6 to 10 months. These are the only men that are estimated for outside of Washington who could be employed in bookkeeping work. I think this answers the question of the gentleman from Washington, because there being something more than 150 forests there can not under this estimate be one clerk or one bookkeeper for each national forest.

Mr. LEVER. Mr. Chairman, I move that the committee do now rise.

The motion was agreed to.

Accordingly the committee rose; and the Speaker having resumed the chair, Mr. HAMLIN, Chairman of the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, reported that that committee had had under consideration the bill H. R. 12717, the Agricultural appropriation bill, and had come to no resolution thereon.

LEAVE OF ABSENCE.

Mr. JOHNSON of South Dakota, by unanimous consent, was given leave of absence, for four days, on account of sickness.

WITHDRAWAL OF PAPERS.

Mr. KINCHELOE, by unanimous consent, was given leave to withdraw from the files of the House without leaving copies papers in the case of George Price, H. R. 5779, Sixtieth Congress, no adverse report having been made thereon.

RECESS.

Mr. KITCHIN. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that the House stand in recess until 12.55 p. m.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from North Carolina?

There was no objection.

Accordingly, at 12 o'clock and 47 minutes p. m., the House stood in recess until 12 o'clock and 55 minutes p. m.

JOINT MEETING OF SENATE AND HOUSE.

At the expiration of the recess the House resumed its session and was called to order by the Speaker.

At 12 o'clock and 56 minutes p. m. the Doorkeeper, Joseph J. Sinnott, announced the Vice President of the United States and the Members of the United States Senate.

The Members of the House rose.

The Senate, preceded by the Vice President and their Secretary and Sergeant at Arms, entered the Chamber.

The Vice President took the chair at the right of the Speaker, and the Members of the Senate took the seats reserved for them.

The SPEAKER. On the part of the House, as a committee to wait on the President and escort him into the House, the Chair appoints the gentleman from North Carolina [Mr. KITCHIN], the gentleman from New York [Mr. FITZGERALD], the gentleman from Virginia [Mr. FLOOD], the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MANN], and the gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. COOPER].

The VICE PRESIDENT. On behalf of the Senate, the Vice President appoints the Senator from Indiana [Mr. KERN], the Senator from New Hampshire [Mr. GALLINGER], the Senator from Missouri [Mr. STONE], the Senator from Kentucky [Mr. JAMES], and the Senator from Iowa [Mr. KENYON].

At 12 o'clock and 59 minutes p. m. the President of the United States, escorted by the committee of Senators and Representatives, entered the Hall of the House and stood at the Clerk's desk amid applause on the floor and in the galleries.

The SPEAKER. Gentlemen of the Senate and House of Representatives, I present to you the President of the United States. [Applause.]

ADDRESS OF THE PRESIDENT (H. DOC. NO. 1034).

The PRESIDENT. Gentlemen of the Congress, a situation has arisen in the foreign relations of the country of which it is my plain duty to inform you very frankly.

It will be recalled that in February, 1915, the Imperial German Government announced its intention to treat the waters surrounding Great Britain and Ireland as embraced within the seat of war and to destroy all merchant ships owned by its enemies that might be found within any part of that portion of the high seas, and that it warned all vessels, of neutral as well as of belligerent ownership, to keep out of the waters it had thus proscribed or else enter them at their peril. The Government of the United States earnestly protested. It took the position that such a policy could not be pursued without the practical certainty of gross and palpable violations of the law of nations, particularly if submarine craft were to be employed as its instruments, inasmuch as the rules prescribed by that law, rules founded upon principles of humanity and established for the protection of the lives of non-combatants at sea, could not in the nature of the case be observed by such vessels. It based its protest on the ground that persons of neutral nationality and vessels of neutral ownership would be exposed to extreme and intolerable risks, and that no right to close any part of the high seas against their use or to expose them to such risks could lawfully be asserted by any belligerent government. The law of nations in these matters, upon which the Government of the United States based its protest, is not of recent origin or founded upon merely arbitrary principles set up by convention. It is based, on the contrary, upon manifest and imperative principles of humanity and has long been established with the approval and by the express assent of all civilized nations.

Notwithstanding the earnest protest of our Government, the Imperial German Government at once proceeded to carry out the policy it had announced. It expressed the hope that the dangers involved, at any rate the dangers to neutral vessels, would be reduced to a minimum by the instructions which it had issued to its submarine commanders, and assured the Government of the United States that it would take every possible precaution both to respect the rights of neutrals and to safeguard the lives of non-combatants.

What has actually happened in the year which has since elapsed has shown that those hopes were not justified, those assurances insusceptible of being fulfilled. In pursuance of the policy of submarine warfare against the commerce of its adversaries, thus announced and entered upon by the Imperial German Government in despite of the solemn protest of this Government, the commanders of German undersea vessels have attacked merchant ships with greater and greater activity, not only upon the high seas surrounding Great Britain and Ireland but wherever they could encounter them, in a way that has grown more and more ruthless, more and more indiscriminate as the months have gone by, less and less observant of restraints of any kind; and have delivered their attacks without compunction against vessels of every nationality and bound upon every sort of errand. Vessels of neutral ownership, even vessels of neutral ownership bound from neutral port to neutral port, have been destroyed along with vessels of belligerent ownership in constantly increasing numbers. Sometimes the merchantman attacked has been warned and summoned to surrender before being fired on or torpedoed; sometimes passengers or crews have been vouchsafed the poor security of being allowed to take to the ship's boats before she was sent to the bottom. But again and again no warning has been given, no escape even to the ship's boats allowed to those on board. What this Government foresaw must happen has happened. Tragedy has followed tragedy on the seas in such fashion, with such attendant circumstances, as to make it grossly evident that warfare of such a sort, if warfare it be, can not be carried on without the most palpable violation of the dictates alike of right and of humanity. Whatever the disposition and intention of the Imperial German Government, it has manifestly proved impossible for it to keep such methods of attack upon the commerce of its enemies within the bounds set by either the reason or the heart of mankind.

In February of the present year the Imperial German Government informed this Government and the other neutral governments of the world that it had reason to believe that the Government of Great Britain had armed all merchant vessels of British ownership and had given them secret orders to attack any submarine of the enemy they might encounter upon the seas, and that the Imperial German Government felt justified in the circumstances in treating all armed merchantmen of belligerent ownership as auxiliary vessels of war, which it would have the right to destroy without warning. The law of nations has long recognized the right of merchantmen to carry arms for protection and to use them to repel attack, though to use them, in such circumstances, at their own risk; but the Imperial German Government claimed the right to set the understandings aside in circumstances which it deemed extraordinary. Even the terms in which it announced its purpose thus still further to relax the restraints it had previously professed its willingness and desire to put upon the operations of its submarines carried the plain implication that at least vessels which were not armed would still be exempt from destruction without warning and that personal safety would be accorded their passengers and crews; but even that limitation, if it was ever practicable to observe it, has in fact constituted no check at all upon the destruction of ships of every sort.

Again and again the Imperial German Government has given this Government its solemn assurances that at least passenger ships would not be thus dealt with, and yet it has again and again permitted its undersea commanders to disregard those assurances with entire impunity. Great liners like the Lusitania and the Arabic and mere ferryboats like the Sussex have been attacked without a moment's warning, sometimes before they had even become aware that they were in the presence of an armed vessel of the enemy, and the lives of non-combatants, passengers and crew, have been sacrificed wholesale, in a manner which the Government of the United States cannot but regard as wanton and without the slightest color of justification. No limit of any kind has in fact been set to the indiscriminate pursuit and destruction of merchantmen of all kinds and nationalities within the waters, constantly extending in area, where these operations have been carried on; and the roll of Americans who have lost their lives on ships thus attacked and destroyed has grown month by month until the ominous toll has mounted into the hundreds.

One of the latest and most shocking instances of this method of warfare was that of the destruction of the French cross-Channel steamer Sussex. It must stand forth, as the sinking of the steamer Lusitania did, as so singularly tragical and unjustifiable as to constitute a truly terrible example of the inhumanity of submarine warfare as the commanders of German vessels have for the past twelvemonth been conducting it. If this instance stood alone, some explanation, some disavowal by the German Government, some evidence of criminal mistake or wilful disobedience on the part of the commander of the vessel that fired the torpedo might be sought or entertained; but unhappily it does not stand alone. Recent events make the conclusion inevitable that it is only one instance, even though it be one of the most extreme and distressing instances, of the spirit and method of warfare which the Imperial German Government has mistakenly adopted, and which from the first exposed that Government to the reproach of thrusting all neutral rights aside in pursuit of its immediate objects.

The Government of the United States has been very patient. At every stage of this distressing experience of tragedy after tragedy in which its own citizens were involved it has sought to be restrained from any extreme course of action or of protest by a thoughtful consideration of the extraordinary circumstances of this unprecedented war, and actuated in all that it said or did by the sentiments of genuine friendship which the people of the United States have always entertained and continue to entertain towards the German nation. It has of course accepted the successive explanations and assurances of the Imperial German Government as given in entire sincerity and good faith, and has hoped, even against hope, that it would prove to be possible for the German Government so to order and control the acts of its naval commanders as to square its policy with the principles of humanity as embodied in the law of nations. It has been willing to wait until the significance of the facts became absolutely unmistakable and susceptible of but one interpretation.

That point has now unhappily been reached. The facts are susceptible of but one interpretation. The Imperial German Government has been unable to put any limits or restraints upon its warfare against either freight or passenger ships. It has therefore become painfully evident that the position which this Government took at the very outset is inevitable, namely, that the use of submarines for the destruction of an enemy's commerce is of necessity, because of the very character of the vessels employed and the very methods of attack which their employment of course involves, incompatible with the principles of humanity, the long established and incontrovertible rights of neutrals, and the sacred immunities of non-combatants.

I have deemed it my duty, therefore, to say to the Imperial German Government that if it is still its purpose to prosecute relentless and indiscriminate warfare against vessels of commerce by the use of submarines, notwithstanding the now demonstrated impossibility of conducting that warfare in accordance with what the Government of the United States must consider the sacred and indisputable rules of international law and the universally recognized dictates of humanity, the Government of the United States is at last forced to the conclusion that there is but one course it can pursue; and that unless the Imperial German Government should now immediately declare and effect an abandonment of its present methods of warfare against passenger and freight carrying vessels this Government can have no choice but to sever diplomatic relations with the Government of the German Empire altogether.

This decision I have arrived at with the keenest regret; the possibility of the action contemplated I am sure all thoughtful Americans will look forward to with unaffected reluctance. But we cannot forget that we are in some sort and by the force of circumstances the responsible spokesmen of the rights of humanity, and that we cannot remain silent while those rights seem in process of being swept utterly away in the maelstrom of this terrible war. We owe it to a due regard for our own rights as a nation, to our sense of duty as a representative of the rights of neutrals the world over, and to a just conception of the rights of mankind to take this stand now with the utmost solemnity and firmness.

I have taken it, and taken it in the confidence that it will meet with your approval and support. All sober-minded men must unite in hoping that the Imperial German Government, which has in other circumstances stood as the champion of all that we are now contending for in the interest of humanity, may recognize the justice of our demands and meet them in the spirit in which they are made. [Long-continued applause.]

At 1 o'clock and 15 minutes p. m. the President retired from the Hall of the House.

Thereupon the Vice President and the Members of the Senate returned to their Chamber.

AGRICULTURAL APPROPRIATION BILL.

Mr. LEVER. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House resolve itself into Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the further consideration of the bill H. R. 12717, the Agricultural appropriation bill.

The motion was agreed to.

Accordingly the House resolved itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, with Mr. HAMLIN in the chair.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will read.

The Clerk read as follows:

Pend Oreille National Forest, Idaho. $10,320.

Mr. NORTON. Mr. Chairman, I would like to inquire of the chairman of the committee as to whether the Department of Agriculture or the Forest Service makes a report to Congress on each of these items, or does it merely report that there is a certain balance of the amount appropriated for each forest reserve?

Mr. LEVER. The department is required under the law to give a detailed statement of each appropriation. Whether they have done that or not in each forest I do not know.

Mr. NORTON. Does the gentleman's committee receive a statement from the department giving each item? Take the item just read. There is an appropriation of $10,320. Does the department report in detail how that amount is expended?

Mr. LEVER. All matters of expenditure in the Department of Agriculture are referred to the Committee on Expenditures in the Agricultural Department. It would not come properly before this committee.

Mr. SMITH of Michigan. There is a Committee on Expenditures on Agriculture and they have a report with an itemized statement of every dollar expended.

Mr. NORTON. I am trying to find out whether the Committee on Agriculture has before it a report to which it can refer to ascertain how each item has been expended, whether it has been expended for bookkeepers or clerks or for men actually at work in the forests.

Mr. LEVER. It has before it this Book of Estimates, which gives very full information as to the details of expenditures proposed in the items and also a statement in detail of the manner in which the expenditures have been made for the fiscal year.

Mr. NORTON. I will say to the gentleman that for the most part the Indian Bureau reports in detail how each appropriation is expended, and the Committee on Indian Affairs knows, when an appropriation of $10,000 has been made and is expended, just how it has been expended, and knows each item for which expenditure under the appropriation was made.

Mr. LEVER. The gentleman's first question of me was whether or not the committee received or Congress received a detailed report, and my answer to him was that our committee as such did not receive that report, but that it went to the Committee on Expenditures in the Agricultural Department; but the Committee on Agriculture itself has had before it a detailed statement of the various purposes for which this money is to be expended, but it did not come to us in the nature of a report. We got it in the way of testimony.

Mr. NORTON. The itemized statements, of course, are made to Congress and not to a particular committee.

Mr. LEVER. Yes.

Mr. NORTON. What I want to know is whether such an itemized statement is made each year to Congress by the Forest Service, and whether it is available to your committee?

Mr. LEVER. We had a statement before the committee which we did not put into the hearings because it is enormously bulky, but it is at the service of the individual members of the committee and it showed in detail these expenditures.

Mr. NORTON. If that is true, then if the gentleman from Washington [Mr. HUMPHREY] desired to know just how the $10,320 appropriated under this item last year was expended he could refer to that itemized report?

Mr. LEVER. There is no doubt in the world about that. I will say to the gentleman that I personally have not had the slightest trouble in getting any information from the Forest Service, nor has the Committee on Agriculture.

Mr. NORTON. I had in mind that if such an itemized report was not made it should be made.

Mr. LEVER. It is made.

The CHAIRMAN. Without objection, the pro forma amendment will be withdrawn, and the Clerk will read.

The Clerk read as follows:

Pike National Forest, Colo., $10,165.

Mr. HICKS. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word, and I do so not because I am opposed to the item, but for the purpose of asking a few questions of the chairman, with his permission, and one of them is in regard to the Montezuma National Forest, carried in line 8, page 35. Is that a part of the Mesa Verde National Park?

Mr. LEVER. Mr. Chairman, I would say to the gentleman that I really do not know. There are 155 of these forest units, and it is almost impossible for members of the committee to remember just how the segregation is made.

Mr. HICKS. Wherever any of those great prehistoric ruins, such as are found in the Mesa Verde, are located in a national forest, are they taken care of under the appropriations we are making in this bill?

Mr. LEVER. No. They go to the Committee on Appropriations, and as I recollect it they are carried in the sundry civil appropriation bill.

Mr. HICKS. One more question. The great bulk of the foresters are paid just a little over $90 a month, as I understand it?

Mr. LEVER. Yes.

Mr. HICKS. Out of that amount do they not have to provide horses and fodder for their horses, as well as their own keep?

Mr. LEVER. Yes.

Mr. HICKS. And their own board?

Mr. LEVER. Yes.

Mr. HICKS. Does the department have any trouble in finding men to take those positions under those conditions?

Mr. LEVER. I think not. The department has been rather successful in getting a very high class of men in this service.

Mr. HICKS. I want to pay my tribute to those men. I have been among them; I have seen them on the range; and the enthusiasm, earnestness, and conscious pride with which they perform their work in the solitudes of those unbroken wildernesses is worthy of consideration and congratulation.

Mr. HAWLEY. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. HICKS. Yes; with pleasure.

Mr. HAWLEY. A great many of the men who do the work on the national forests are settlers in the forests or residents on near-by lands. During the summer months when they have leisure time they work on the national forests to get money with which to improve their claim or to make a living.

Mr. HICKS. Then they do not have to give all of their time to the service of the Government?

Mr. HAWLEY. A great many, the gentleman will remember, under the terms of the bill are employed for a service not exceeding six months.

Mr. HICKS. Does their pay stop when they quit work?

Mr. HAWLEY. Yes; they are paid for the months of service.

Mr. HAUGEN. They do trapping and hunting in addition, for which they get paid.

Mr. HICKS. Mr. Chairman, I withdraw the pro forma amendment and thank the gentleman from South Carolina for his courtesy.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will read.

The Clerk read as follows:

Selway National Forest, Idaho, $12,659.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word. I notice that most of the amounts in these forests items are changed, so that I suppose the intention is to have the appropriations for the ensuing year correspond with the expenditures for the past year. Of course they can not tell just what they are in the current year; but in this item there is carried an appropriation of $12,659 for the current year, and they still carry the exact amount. That is very close figuring—$12,659. They must figure these items very close if after a year's experience they find that it was just the right amount to appropriate—the odd thousands and $59 instead of $60.

Mr. LEVER. The gentleman will find that running though the entire department.

Mr. MANN. Oh, there are some places, but most of them are in round sums.

Mr. LEVER. In these forest items that is true, but in other items they have figured it out even to the cent.

Mr. MANN. Oh, no; not in many. Most of the appropriations are in round sums, in the large items.

Mr. LEVER. It is true that these are subject to the same criticism.

Mr. MANN. Oh, I have not made any criticism.

Mr. LEVER. I mean suggestion.

Mr. MANN. Not even a suggestion. I congratulate the service when they can figure out that it is going to expend $12,659, that that is the exact amount that they want two years hence, because that is what they have expended.

Mr. LEVER. I see the gentleman's point, and it may be well taken.

Mr. MANN. Oh, I say I congratulate the service.

The CHAIRMAN. Without objection, the pro forma amendment will be withdrawn, and the Clerk will read.

The Clerk read as follows:

Targhee National Forest, Idaho and Wyo., $5,956.

Mr. McCRACKEN. Mr. Chairman, I desire to offer the following amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Page 37, line 12, strike out "$5,956" and insert in lieu thereof the following: "$80,756: Provided, That of the foregoing sum $75,000 shall be used for the construction and improvement of the highway from the southern boundary line of the Targhee and Madison National Forests into Yellowstone Station on the west border of the Yellowstone National Park and commonly known as the Utah-Idaho-Yellowstone Highway."

Mr. LEVER. Mr. Chairman, reserving the point of order. I would like to ask the gentleman how much time does he desire?

Mr. McCRACKEN. Not more than five minutes.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Idaho.

Mr. McCRACKEN. Mr. Chairman, perhaps more people traveled through the Yellowstone Park last year than ever traveled through that great scenic region before. Many of them had made the trip all the way by automobile from the Atlantic coast, traveling over the Lincoln Highway as far west as San Francisco, and then upon their return eastward they took the side trip from Pocatello and Salt Lake City over this highway, known as the Utah-Idaho-Yellowstone Highway. Now, I want to say to the gentlemen of this House, that this road, which is nearly 300 miles in length, has been constructed by the counties of Idaho which lie between Salt Lake City and the Yellowstone National Park. Fifty miles of this highway run through the Targhee National Forest, and I think that the Government of the United States ought to bear its part in its construction.

The people along the highway in the different counties have expended thousands of dollars in the upkeep and repair of the road. Now, all I ask you to do is to permit the Forestry Bureau to expend the small sum of $75,000 in the reconstruction of that part of the highway which runs through the Targhee National Forest, a distance of approximately 50 miles.

Last summer, when I was in the Yellowstone National Park, I met men from Maine, New Jersey, Texas, Oklahoma, Missouri, Nebraska, Illinois, and Florida, who had traveled all the way from their homes in their automobiles, passing over this highway to and through the Yellowstone Park, and it seems to me that this amendment deserves consideration by this House.

Since the people of my State have gone to the expense which they have to construct a highway which is fitted for the people of your States to travel upon after they have reached that section of the country, surely the Government of the United States ought to construct a highway through its own forest, and that is all we ask you to do. I earnestly ask the consideration of the committee at this time for the adoption of this amendment. It will only be a short time until the proceeds from the Targhee National Forest will be sufficient to repay the Government for the money which it should now expend in the construction of this highway. Why should not this matter receive consideration by the gentlemen of this House? There are men from your own States who will travel over that highway this year and who will travel over it next year. Automobiles were only permitted to pass through the park last year, yet something like 6,000 automobiles went through it in the month of August. By the building and improving of this highway you would thereby teach your people to "see America first," rather than spend their money in Europe. Why, when this war broke out in Europe there were 3,000,000 American citizens over there on sight-seeing excursions. Last year they could not go to Europe, and as a result many of them went to San Francisco, and while en route either to or from the fair they visited the Yellowstone National Park, and in that way obtained a knowledge of this country which they never had before. I insist that the point of order ought not to lie as against this amendment, and I hope that it may be adopted.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that the gentleman may have five minutes more.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Illinois asks unanimous consent that the gentleman from Idaho may proceed for five minutes. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Chairman, I want to ask the gentleman in reference to this road; just where is the Targhee National Forest?

Mr. McCRACKEN. The Targhee National Forest is in the southeastern part of the State of Idaho, and it borders upon a portion of the west side of the Yellowstone National Park.

Mr. MANN. It is on the western border of the Yellowstone National Park, on the west side?

Mr. McCRACKEN. It borders on about one-half of the west boundary of the park.

Mr. MANN. Does it run north as far as the park runs north?

Mr. McCRACKEN. No, sir.

Mr. MANN. Where is the Madison National Forest?

Mr. McCRACKEN. The Madison National Forest is in the State of Montana, and borders on the west boundary of the Yellowstone National Park.

Mr. MANN. Lies between the park line and Montana?

Mr. McCRACKEN. Yes; to the north and west.

Mr. MANN. Is that north of the Targhee?

Mr. McCRACKEN. Yes, sir.

Mr. MANN. I will say to the gentleman that my only information on the subject is carried by the bill. You call it a highway. It is simple to me to call it a road. That is what it is, and not much of a road at that, possibly. How far does this road propose to run? How does it connect up with the Yellowstone Park, and what other entrances are there to the Yellowstone Park?

Mr. McCRACKEN. There is a north entrance to the Yellowstone Park, which is at Gardner, in the southern part of Montana; the east and south entrances are in Wyoming, and the west entrance on the west boundary of the park, located at Yellowstone, Mont., just over the Idaho line, which is the terminus of the Yellowstone Branch of the Oregon Short Line Railroad.

Mr. MANN. And people go in there now?

Mr. McCRACKEN. Oh, yes; during the summer season.

Mr. MANN. How?

Mr. McCRACKEN. By wagon and by automobile.

Mr. MANN. How do they go there by automobile?

Mr. McCRACKEN. They go into the park over the road which I have just referred to, and which runs from Salt Lake City, through Utah and Idaho, to the west entrance on the boundary line of Yellowstone Park.

Mr. MANN. What kind of road is it?

Mr. McCRACKEN. For the most part it is a dirt road and is in good condition. At one point on this road and within the Fort Hall Indian Reservation, the State of Idaho expended $40,000; and this is the road for which I now ask for $75,000 to be used at certain points in the Targhee Forest which need improvement and repair. It is located in the mountains where the altitude is some 8,000 feet, and the gentleman will understand that the melting of the heavy snows in that region in the spring of the year causes washouts in the road which must be repaired before auto tourists can travel them. These repairs are made in part at least by the employees in charge of the Targhee National Forest.

Mr. MANN. I have been led to believe from the reading of the forestry experts—that is a sort of a fad of mine—that wherever we had a forest the mountain streams from the range were never permitted to wash gullies or anything of the kind on the land or the roads. That is one of the chief reasons for having a forest reserve.

Mr. LEVER. Has the gentleman concluded?

Mr. MANN. Yes.

Mr. McCRACKEN. I would like to ask the gentleman from South Carolina [Mr. LEVER] if he proposes to insist upon the point of order against my amendment?

Mr. LEVER. I will say to the gentleman that I shall insist on the point of order. It is clearly subject to the point of order, and I will say to him that there are a number of bills pending before the Committee on Agriculture which look to the character of work that the gentleman proposes to do, and I assure the gentleman as soon as this bill is finished I hope to have a report from one of the subcommittees on that proposition. There may be a bill reported from the committee, but I do not know. So for the present I am constrained to make the point of order.

Mr. McCRACKEN. Does the gentleman refer to the bill introduced by Representative TAYLOR of Colorado?

Mr. LEVER. It is a bill collaborated in by Mr. TAYLOR and Mr. MONDELL and other gentlemen from the West.

Mr. McCRACKEN. And does that bill seek to permit the Forestry Department to apply receipts from the forest reserves to the construction of roads within the forests?

Mr. LEVER. Yes.

Mr. McCRACKEN. Where is that bill?

Mr. LEVER. It does a little more than that. The bill provides that in addition to that the funds out of the Federal Treasury to be used for the building of roads in the national forests are to be repaid into the Treasury out of receipts from the national forests from time to time. The subcommittee has been appointed on that bill and others.

Mr. McCRACKEN. Does the gentleman think there is a fair prospect for the passage of the bill?

Mr. LEVER. There is a good prospect for the consideration of the bill by the committee.

I make the point of order, Mr. Chairman.

The CHAIRMAN. The point of order is sustained, and the Clerk will read.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word. I have always been known as a park man.

I think I have never voted against a park or the creation of a park. I believe in national parks and national forests, but what has just been said leads me to make a remark: There is a tendency on the part of many people to think that whatever they have must be fully improved at once. Some people, if they build or buy a house, want to go to a store and buy all the furniture to fill it up at once. That is not the way to furnish a house; it is not the way to improve a park.

To set aside a piece of ground as a park or a forest, so that it will not be taken for other purposes, with a view to its future improvement, is one thing, but to say that the national forests which we run at a loss all the time, which we hold in the interest of a succeeding generation, so that we may have timber owned by the General Government when much of the privately owned timber has been disposed of, and then to say that in addition to all that we shall expend all the money we receive from the sale of timber in those national forests to build roads through them for the benefit of sightseers is to me a preposterous proposition. If we have these great national forests and great national parks throughout the country saved for the future, it ought not to be expected that we will so improve them now that people will see everything in them from an automobile passing by. The truth is that one does not really enjoy a park or a forest unless he goes through it under hardships. For a man to really enjoy a forest, he must walk through it, climbing over logs, up the hillsides, over the rocks, swimming a stream now and then, and walking through the wet morass.

Mr. JOHNSON of Washington. That is the way the mails are delivered to us. [Laughter.]

Mr. HAWLEY. It sounds beautiful.

Mr. MANN. Now, there is an association of automobilists throughout the country attracting the attention of everybody toward the building of highways—a laudable and proper function for them. They have the idea that they can stampede the country into having the Government build automobile roads wherever anybody's fancy may lead him to want to go. I do not deny that there ought to be such roads constructed in many places, but I object decidedly to the idea carried in some of the bills which have been introduced that where the Government has retained for the future a large area of land, for development in the future for the pleasure and profit on the one side and the other of the people, that that puts us under an obligation at once to put it in shape as though it were a parlor in our homes. There will be people here when we are dead and gone. Let them do some work and have some of the pleasure of improving these great forests and parks. [Applause.]

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Illinois has expired. The pro forma amendment is withdrawn. The Clerk will read.

The Clerk read as follows:

Additional national forests created or to be created under section 11 of the act of March 1, 1911 (36 Stat. L., p. 963), and lands under contract for purchase or for the acquisition of which condemnation proceedings have been instituted for the purposes of said act, $67,000.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Chairman, I reserve a point of order on the paragraph.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Illinois reserves a point of order on the paragraph.

Mr. MANN. What authority is there now for us to make an appropriation for the purchase or the acquisition by condemnation proceedings of additional land in these Appalachian forests?

Mr. LEVER. I will ask the gentleman from Georgia [Mr. LEE] and the gentleman from Oregon [Mr. HAWLEY], members of the National Forest Commission, to take care of this item.

Mr. HAWLEY. There is yet an unexpended balance of the appropriation made some years ago for the purpose of making purchases of land.

Mr. MANN. I know that appropriation has been made.

Mr. HAWLEY. Yes.

Mr. MANN. But what authority is there to make an appropriation for that purpose now? This makes an appropriation for that purpose.

Mr. HAWLEY. This makes an appropriation to care for the forests after they have been acquired by the Government and placed under the supervision of the Forest Service in the Department of Agriculture. This is not to buy any land, but to care for the land after it is purchased, just as the other national forests are cared for.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MANN. Oh, I see the purpose. This is to be read in connection with the original paragraph. It is not for the acquisition of lands, but just for the care of lands already acquired?

Mr. HAWLEY. Yes.

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman yield?

Mr. MANN. I do not yield to anybody just at present.

There was expended on this Appalachian system last year a total of $1,139,141.26. I have handled in a way real estate all my life, and bought and sold, but I can not say very profitably, but it has not sent me to the poorhouse yet. Maybe it will. Now, I find the expense to the Government of buying this property amounts practically to about 20 per cent of the amount that is paid—maybe not—for Forest Service salaries, $108,000. Maybe that includes the care; but out of the $1,139,141.26 expended for this service $916,000 was expended for the purchase of land and for salaries and solicitors' offices and things of that kind, and there was expended the sum of $160,000 plus $62,000, which amounts to nearly 20 per cent of the total expenditure.

Well, I suppose the titles down there are not very perfect. Perhaps we ought to exercise a great deal of care about them. But I should say that $51,000 for legal expenses in addition to traveling expenses, the two combined amounting to over $62,000 for legal expenses in connection with the purchase of a million dollars' worth of property, was a very high rate of lawyer's fees.

Mr. HAWLEY. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MANN. Certainly.

Mr. HAWLEY. As I recall, part of that legal expense paid this last year was for land that had been bought some years ago. The titles to such lands as we buy in the Appalachian Mountains are very frequently seriously imperfect. The measures necessary to secure adequate title are frequently expensive, and the expenses were made in this year, but the purchase of the land had been previously authorized.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Illinois has expired.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Chairman, I ask for five minutes more.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the gentleman's request?

There was no objection.

Mr. MANN. Undoubtedly that has been the case, but these legal expenses have continued from year to year about the same. Much of the legal expense of the land bought last year was incurred the year before, and the year before that. I do not know just how far they go to the expense up here of finding title from the time of Queen Anne or Henry VIII, tracing it down, and knowing who lived on the land, or looked at it; but I suppose they are very careful, because there is no limit to the amount of money which can be paid to them for such expenses.

Mr. HAWLEY. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MANN. Certainly.

Mr. HAWLEY. The gentleman was entirely correct in his remark a moment ago that the titles, especially in the South, are very imperfect, and it has been the practice of the Department of Justice to accept nothing that does not vest title without doubt in the Government. It must be an absolutely good title or they do not accept it.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Chairman, a title guaranty company would have examined these titles and given a guaranty to the Government of the validity of the titles for half of the expense that the Government has incurred, paying its own examiners of titles, and we have no guaranty now. They will find out that some of these titles will fail——

Mr. HAWLEY. The gentleman would not hold the commission chargeable with that? The law fixes the way in which the titles shall be passed.

Mr. MANN. Oh, I am not holding the commission chargeable for any of this. I hope the distinguished gentleman from Oregon [Mr. HAWLEY] and the other distinguished gentleman from Georgia [Mr. LEE], members of the commission, will not think I am criticizing the commission. In the first place, the commission do not know and can not know a great deal about the details of things of this sort, except as presented to them in a general way. They are not paid anything extra for their services, which have been rendered willingly, freely, and with great effect on this commission. But, of course, all this work is not done under the direct eye or hand of the members of the commission. It seems to me that it is a rather high expense. I do not know why the Government should be much more particular in buying farm land of the poorest kind——

Mr. LEVER. Forest land.

Mr. MANN. Oh, well, whatever you call it, it is farm land, for farm purposes. There is no forest to speak of on most of it. The forest has been cut off. I do not know why the Government should be much more particular than an ordinary citizen who buys that land; but if a citizen down there buying this land, or if the purchasers of timberlands—and there have been a great many species of timberlands purchased in Virginia and south of there—should spend 10 per cent of the cost of the land on attorney's fees, they would think they were going to the poorhouse. If anyone should propose that, they would drop dead from heart disease. I will ask the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. FORDNEY], whom I never asked about it, whether anyone expects in buying timberland to pay 10 per cent attorneys' fees for examining the title.

Mr. FORDNEY. It is absurd.

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman insist on his point of order?

Mr. MANN. No; I withdraw the point of order.

The CHAIRMAN. The point of order is withdrawn.

Mr. TILSON. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word, for the purpose of asking for some information in regard to the lands purchased under the act referred to in this paragraph. I was very much interested in the passage of that act, and should like to know in a general way just what has been done under it, whether the lands that have been purchased have been designated as national forests, whether these forests have a name as well as a habitation, and, in general, what has been done with the land that has been purchased under the act?

Mr. HAWLEY. The land that has been purchased under the act has been divided into national forests, but is administered at present under one general appropriation in the bill. These forests are known by names, both in the New England States and in the Southern States. They have individual names.

Mr. MANN. If the gentleman will get House Document No. 130, of this session of Congress, he will find a pretty full description, including maps giving the location of all of these forests.

Mr. TILSON. Does it show the White Mountains as well as the Appalachians?

Mr. MANN. Yes.

Mr. HAWLEY. There is a map of the White Mountain region.

Mr. LEE. It gives the area, the acreage, and the price.

Mr. TILSON. My question was directed especially to what is being done with these lands now. Does anybody live on them?

Mr. HAWLEY. They are cared for the year round by supervisors who have charge of them, and special fire protection is given to them during the summer months. The supervisors of the forests are supposed to remain at or near them at all times, to take charge of them.

Mr. TILSON. Were any clearings or cabins included in the lands purchased in the southern Appalachians?

Mr. HAWLEY. Occasionally a clearing where it was in the body of a larger purchase, with some old buildings on it, but no buildings of any value have been acquired. We have paid for nothing except the value of the land, and whatever forest products there might be on it.

Mr. TILSON. Is there much good standing timber on the lands in the Appalachians?

Mr. HAWLEY. We have bought occasionally some hardwood like oak or poplar and occasionally a virgin forest of spruce and some pine, but generally the lands have been cut over at least once, the better timber being taken off.

Mr. TILSON. Mr. Chairman, referring to the large expense of securing title to lands, I happen to know something of the difficulty of securing title to some of those lands, especially in the southern Appalachians. Before I left that country it was my business, as a sort of avocation, to survey, and I did survey for private individuals some of the lands in the region where are now some of those reservations in the southern Appalachians. I know for a fact that many cases like this occurred. One man would make an entry and receive a State grant for a tract of mountain land. Then some one else, disregarding the first entry, would enter again upon the same land. Later on, a squatter would come along and settle upon the land and hold it under adverse possession for a number of years. Then there would be a contest between the first man entering, the second man entering, and the squatter who had come on later and that held the whole or a part of it under adverse possession for a number of years. So I can readily understand how the difficulty of straightening out the titles in that region might be somewhat great.

Mr. JOHNSON of Washington. Will the gentleman yield for a question?

Mr. TILSON. Certainly.

Mr. JOHNSON of Washington. Did these disputes bring in an agent of the Interior Department as well as an agent of the Agricultural Department at the same time?

Mr. TILSON. I know nothing at all about the difficulties that the United States has had. My own experience in the matter was prior to the time when the Government began to acquire land there. I was speaking of the general difficulties of titles in that part of the country. Probably the Department of Agriculture has had to contend with some of those difficulties, but personally I know nothing about the difficulties which have been encountered.

Mr. FORDNEY. The great difficulty in the titles to those lands is chiefly where records were destroyed during the Civil War, breaking the chain of title. State laws have been enacted which permit those titles to be put through the court of chancery to confirm the title, and it is done very quickly and cheaply in that way in the average Southern State.

Mr. TILSON. In addition to the other difficulties referred to, some of these mountain lands have not been profitable always, and sometimes have not yielded anything, and many of them have been sold for taxes, so very often a tax title enters into the problem to complicate it.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Chairman, the gentleman asked whether anything was being done with these lands that were purchased, whether we were taking care of them. We are appropriating half a million dollars a year to take care of them. The total appropriation was——

Mr. HAWLEY. Eight million dollars.

Mr. MANN. I was thinking it ran up into the neighborhood of $15,000,000, but evidently I was mistaken. Well, we buy land worth $8,000,000 and spend a half million dollars a year to take care of it. That is a pretty high expense.

Mr. HAWLEY. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MANN. Certainly.

Mr. HAWLEY. The amount appropriated in this bill for taking care of the forests purchased under the so-called White Mountain and Appalachian law is $67,000.

Mr. MANN. The gentleman is correct and I am wrong.

Mr. HAWLEY. For the maintenance of the district service for these forests there is appropriated $14,900.

Mr. MANN. I was figuring for the moment that these districts were for the Appalachian Reserve, but they are not. They are for the general service. If we are only expending $67,000 on the Appalachian and White Mountain Reserves, I think we are doing very well. Although I was mistaken in regard to the amount, I was right in thinking it was an extravagance.

Mr. LEE. If the gentleman will pardon me, I think it costs 5 cents an acre to protect these lands a year.

Mr. JOHNSON of Washington. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MANN. Yes.

Mr. JOHNSON of Washington. Does the gentleman know what has been spent for fine automobile roads in the forest reserves behind Biltmore and why we should be burdening future generations with our roads in the country where there is no hope of resource in the form of timber?

Mr. MANN. I know I have been to Asheville several times, and in my judgment about the only thing a large share of the land around there is good for is to raise forests. I think it is suitable for that, and if I was running a place down there I would have an automobile road to connect with the Biltmore Road, so that the many, many people who go to Asheville for their health—for a tuberculosis cure—could get out and have a chance to ride on those roads.

Mr. JOHNSON of Washington. And let the Government pay the bill.

Mr. MANN. Let the Government pay a very small part.

Mr. HAWLEY. The automobile road in Mount Pisgah National Forest was there when the Government bought it. We do not own the Biltmore Forest, but we do own the forest known as Pisgah, which is just across the French Broad River from the Biltmore Forest. Mr. Vanderbilt had constructed a fairly good mountain road from the end of the county road up to Buck Springs Lodge on the summit and down on the other side of the mountain.

Mr. MANN. And we did not build the road.

Mr. HAWLEY. It was there when we bought the Pisgah Forest.

Mr. MANN. And we have not torn it up yet. [Laughter.]

Mr. HAWLEY. I hope we never will.

Mr. LEVER. Let me say further that the amount of money that may be expended for road building is fixed by law.

Mr. MANN. How much is it?

Mr. LEVER. It is 10 per cent of the general appropriation and 25 per cent of the proceeds of the forests.

Mr. MANN. That is what we donate to the county and State. I do not recollect of any law that fixes the amount that the National Government can appropriate.

Mr. HAWLEY. Ten per cent of the receipts from the forests are used by the service in building roads and trails in the forests, and then on page 41 there is a further appropriation for $400,000 for roads and trails through national forests.

Mr. MANN. Oh, yes; but there is no provision of law that restricts the amount that may be expended for road building.

Mr. HAWLEY. Only that it provides for the expenditure of these sums and does not provide for the expenditure of additional sums.

Mr. MANN. I do not suppose that they can expend money unless it is appropriated.

The CHAIRMAN. Without objection, the pro forma amendment is withdrawn.

The Clerk read as follows:

In national forest district 2, $48,400.

Mr. MONDELL. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word. Yesterday there was some discussion, as there has been to-day, of the need of roads within the forest reserves. Attention was called to the fact that the need was so very great, the reserves being largely mountainous, road building difficult and expensive, that it was impossible to meet the demand for roads and to provide the necessary roads with the 25 per cent of the reserve income which goes to the State, and with the 10 per cent of the forest income which may be and is used for road building by the Secretary of Agriculture.

Early in the session I introduced a bill the purpose of which was to provide for an advance of funds, to be reimbursed, for the construction of roads in a forest reserve in the State of Wyoming to the extent of about $80,000.

Several bills were introduced later along the same line, having in view the construction of roads in forest reserves in various parts of the country. Later a general bill was introduced which has been referred to the committee, proposing a fund of $10,000,000—$1,000,000 to be appropriated annually in the way of advances for the building of these roads. I think the situation in the forest reserve for which I introduced a bill is a situation which will clearly illustrate not only the necessity for this road construction but the wisdom of it, with a certainty that if the funds are intelligently expended the Federal Government will be reimbursed within a reasonable time for its outlay.

In the reservation to which my bill applies the Government is now selling timber for which it receives about $60,000 per annum for stumpage. In order that the Government contractors, the contractors under the Government for this timber, may reach their timber, it has been necessary for the county to build and maintain a long, difficult, and expensive road. The county must bear that expense, because this road approaching the timber is not on the reserve, but in the open country adjacent to it, so the county actually builds and maintains the road, which in the main is used for the purpose of getting out the timber which the Government is selling at the rate of $60,000 per annum. These timber sales will continue for at least 20 years, according to the estimate of the Agricultural Department, so that ultimately the Government will receive from this source above a million dollars, if the estimate be correct. Beyond where the county maintains the road is a very considerable stretch of road running through the reserve that is not only needed by the Forest Service, but is a very important highway, reaching from the headwaters of the Wind River to the headwaters of the Snake River, a road of very great importance from the standpoint of the reserve and the people on both sides of the forest reserve. It is very clear that the 10 per cent fund available for that construction, which would only amount to about $6,000 a year, would not build the road within the reserve, some 35 miles in length, in time to make it of any value to this generation.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Wyoming has expired.

Mr. MONDELL. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to proceed for two minutes.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. MONDELL. On the other hand, the Government may safely advance funds for the construction of that particular road, at least, by reason of the assurance that the department has that the sales of timber in this immediate locality in the next few years will reimburse the Government expenditure. It is proposed in the bill which is now before the committee, and which we are assured will receive careful, and we hope favorable, consideration, that out of the appropriations that are made the Secretary shall select roads where conditions exist necessitating road building for the benefit of the Forest Service and the surrounding community, and where the conditions are such as will reasonably insure an early return of the investment made by the Government. By making these advances we very greatly aid the Government in the disposition of its resources in the reserves; we make the roads available in the near future when, if we followed the line of procedure which we have been following in the past, the roads would not be useful during the period when most needed by the Government for the disposition of the forest products. We hope that this bill will be favorably considered and passed at an early date.

Mr. BENNET. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last two words; and I would like to have the attention of the chairman of the committee. What is the understanding of the chairman of the committee as to what constitutes a forest district?

Mr. LEVER. The total forest area of the United States is divided up into seven forest districts, with headquarters at certain points. The headquarters of forest district No. 1 is at Missoula, Mont., and of No. 2 at Denver, Colo., and so on. Each of these seven districts has its capital, so to speak, and concentrated there are the men who are the experts in the various lines of activities carried on by the Forest Service. You have your grazing experts, the timber experts, and the like of that, and in addition to that you also have your disbursing officer and your law clerk, who passes upon permits and titles to entries and the like of that.

Mr. BENNET. Then each one of these national forests that we have been passing over here in the last day or two is in a forest district?

Mr. LEVER. That is correct.

Mr. BENNET. Then I want to call the attention of the gentleman to what seems to me is a very great danger of bad administration; and I say this with some experience in both State and city affairs. Here are comparatively large sums for necessary miscellaneous expenses incident to the general administration of the Forest Service. Then these other items, commencing on page 31, are for salaries, and field and station expenses, and so on, including maintenance—in other words, the same general character of service, to a certain extent, as that contemplated under these latter items.

It has been my observation in the city of New York, in the State of New York, and in the Government that wherever you give a department a chance to duplicate or have two offices, each of whom can do the same thing, that two or three things are certain to follow. First, there is a duplication of work, and, second, if the power that controls the purse strings attempts to curtail the doing of the work through a particular official, then the work is shifted over onto the other official, where there has not been so much scrutiny, and the result is a multiplation of appropriations and a duplication of work, and, what is more serious than either, a decrease in efficiency.

Mr. HAWLEY. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BENNET. Yes.

Mr. HAWLEY. The suggestion I was going to make related to the first part of the gentleman's remarks relative to the forest districts. If the gentleman is interested and would apply to the Forest Service, they will send him a map of the United States with the forest districts marked on the map, showing how the country is divided into forest districts.

Mr. BENNET. I can not say that I am particularly interested in the geographical distribution, but I am interested because of some extensive experience in administration affairs.

Mr. HAWLEY. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield on that point?

Mr. BENNET. Yes.

Mr. HAWLEY. Take, for instance, the forest district which consists of Oregon and Washington. There is a forest office of a general character in Portland. Then, for the administration of the several forests there is a supervisor's office at Albany, about 90 miles south of Portland; another at Eugene, still farther south; another at Roseburg, 200 miles south; and another at Grants Pass, about 300 miles south; and there are many others in the two States. But I am speaking of those now on the west side of the Cascade Mountains in Oregon, a part of which I have indicated. The forest work is administered from these subordinate offices. The central office has supervision of all the work, approves of sales of timber, grazing leases, other contracts, and on other business arising out of the forests sent by the local officials from the local divisions.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. BENNET. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that I may proceed for three minutes.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from New York? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

Mr. HAWLEY. So that the money is not all expended from the forest district office, but is expended from the subordinate offices as well, so the danger of duplication of work is somewhat eliminated by reason of that, each office having appropriated to it or available for its expenditure the money available for the forest over which it has control, or that portion of it.

Mr. BENNET. As I caught the gentleman's statement there are about seven of these suboffices, is that right?

Mr. HAWLEY. In the district?

Mr. BENNET. Yes.

Mr. HAWLEY. There are more than that; I only named a few.

Mr. BENNET. How many forests are in that district?

Mr. HAWLEY. In Oregon and Washington there are some 28.

Mr. JOHNSON of Washington. If the gentleman is going to include Washington, he has not detailed the offices in western Washington.

Mr. HAWLEY. I only named a few for the purpose of illustration to show how the work is divided. There are how many forest reserves in Washington?

Mr. JOHNSON of Washington. In the district I have the honor to represent, 3, and 11 in the State. The district forester always has an office outside of the forest reserve, and he has a head officer at some large central point, near the forest reserve, and then you have the ranger station, where these fellows hide out all winter, hibernate.

Mr. BENNET. What you might call duplicating offices would be in connection with a particular set of transactions, we will say. There is the ranger office, an office in the forest, and the district superintendent's office. He has two offices.

Mr. JOHNSON of Washington. The district superintendent of Oregon and Washington is, I believe, at Portland; but the supervisor of the Olympia National Forest has his office at Olympia, Wash.; and, then, there is an office at Denver, Colo., I take it.

Mr. BENNET. Then comes Denver, Colo.

Mr. JOHNSON of Washington. That is where the supplies come from.

Mr. HAWLEY. All these district officers, of which there are seven, have direct relation with the Forest Service Office in Washington.

Mr. BRITT. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. HAWLEY. I have not the floor.

Mr. BENNET. I will yield to the gentleman from Oregon to answer the question.

Mr. BRITT. The seven forestry districts to which the gentleman from Oregon refers—are they provided by statute or departmental regulation?

Mr. HAWLEY. These districts are created by the Forest Service to accomplish the administration of the forests in the most economical and efficient way according to their judgment. Then, they are appropriated for by Congress upon the division made by the service.

Mr. BENNET. Then, the answer is they are created by the department and not by statute.

Mr. BRITT. One other question. There is a list of forest reserves provided for specifically, commencing page 31 and ending page 38. Now, then, those in my district, five in number, are not included here. Do I understand the provision for their maintenance and operation is included in the general district——

Mr. HAWLEY. The gentleman means the Appalachian Forest?

Mr. BRITT. Yes.

Mr. HAWLEY. The gentleman will find them provided for on page 38, lines 10 to 15. Now, if the gentleman will yield further, in the administration of the national forests, the first man who comes in contact with anyone who desires to do business with a forest is a ranger. Somebody will want a permit to graze sheep, cattle, or horses on the reserve, or cut some timber. They see the ranger, talk it over with him, and a temporary agreement is made. This goes to one of these local offices where the facts are stated. If there is a dispute, an investigation is made of that matter, and the question at issue settled. A contract is then made at the local office for grazing, the selling of timber, or whatever the subject matter may be.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has again expired.

Mr. HAWLEY. Mr. Chairman, I am very much opposed to this motion to strike out the last word, and I ask to be recognized for five minutes.

Mr. BENNET. Mr. Chairman, I will yield the floor and let the gentleman take the floor.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Oregon? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

Mr. HAWLEY. Then the local office passes upon the contract—the tentative contract entered into by the ranger. That contract after being passed on by the local office is then sent to the division office in Portland for its information and approval when necessary. They have the authority to enforce the contract. This arrangement has been made by the Forest Service, I believe, from the standpoint of efficiency and to prevent improper contracts being made and to provide some general supervision of the entire work. Rangers, in making agreements for grazing, might admit too many on the forest or too few. There are continually complaints arising. There are also complaints of the price charged for timber, or where a trespass occurs. Complaints are made that the charge for trespass is in excess of the damage done.

Mr. BENNET. There is no man in the House who is better equipped on this subject, and I gather it that the gentleman thinks there is a necessity for all this machinery?

Mr. HAWLEY. We have the national forests and desire to protect them, to sell products from them, and administer them generally as property of the Government. We must have machinery with which to accomplish that. Whether this is more expensive than it ought to be can not be told until some different system that is just as effective has been installed and tried out.

Mr. BENNET. I think there is a defect in the gentleman's logic. The gentleman belongs to one of the finest committees of the House, that has grown up with the forest problem. Does the gentleman think it worth while, now that the attention of the House has been called to the extent of the machinery, to investigate and see whether there is not too much of it? I was out of the House for four years——

Mr. HAWLEY. I will say in answer to the gentleman's question on that point that I have investigated, and as the expense for the administration of forests is increased——

Mr. BENNET. The greater the deficit?

Mr. HAWLEY. The greater the deficit, possibly; and the committee has been trying to avoid it. I have traveled over the forests, but I am not prepared to recommend a different system. The only way to establish a standard is to establish another system and see which one of the two is the best.

Mr. BENNET. There are great forests in private ownership. Do they have as cumbersome a system as the Government of the United States does in connection with its national forests?

Mr. HAWLEY. So far as the privately owned forest or timbered lands are concerned, there is no attempt to care for them on such a scale or plan. They were formerly cared for so little in our State that the legislature passed a law requiring one of two things, that the individuals form an association for the protection of their lands under the supervision of the State forester and pay an assessment for the care of them, or, if they did not do so, the State cared for them at the expense of the owner, and the cost of caring for them was put on the tax roll of the county in which the lands were situated and collected as a part of the annual tax.

Mr. BENNET. That was a protection against fire?

Mr. HAWLEY. I say that there had been no systematic attempt on the part of the private owners to care for their timbered lands to the same extent as is done by the Government.

Mr. MANN. Does the gentleman know how the cost of caring for the national forests of the West compares with the cost of caring for the Bronx National Forest in the gentleman's district?

Mr. BENNET. Ours is much more expensive.

Mr. HAWLEY. I suppose the Bronx serves purposes our forests do not serve.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. I wanted to ask the gentleman from New York, in the time of the gentleman from Oregon, whether they confine themselves in the Bronx forest reserve to one kind of trees?

Mr. BENNET. Oh, no; and neither do they in Oregon. They have a lot of trees in Oregon, of all kinds and conditions.

Mr. MANN. They send some tall timber here. [Laughter.]

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. They do; a Woodman of the World.

The CHAIRMAN. Without objection, the pro forma amendment will be withdrawn and the Clerk will read.

The Clerk read as follows:

In national forest district 3, $55,200.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word.

I agree with the gentleman from Illinois that there ought to be a little speeding up of the business of the House, and it seems to me that this would be a good place to begin. We have dealt with this national forest reserve situation now for two or three days, and it seems to be the troublesome section of the bill. It is unfortunate the Committee on Agriculture is not in the position the Committee on Rivers and Harbors found itself in in a matter of this kind. One of the difficulties in passing the rivers and harbors bill was the discussion that constantly ensued over flood prevention, relating to appropriations along the Mississippi and its tributaries. That was the backbone of obstruction to the rivers and harbors bill in former sessions of Congress, as the national forest reserve seems to be the cause for annual discussion in this bill, which ought to pertain solely to agriculture.

I would not for a moment remove forests from agriculture, generally speaking, or attempt to differentiate——

Mr. FESS. With the gentleman yield?

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. Yes.

Mr. FESS. Is not this the main trouble, in dealing with these bills, that one has too much water in it and the other has not enough water?

Mr. MANN. The trouble there was a flood of water and here is a——

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. Flood of eloquence. I want to ask the forceful chairman of the committee, the gentleman from South Carolina [Mr. LEVER], why he does not resort to some such method as the gentleman from Mississippi [Mr. HUMPHREYS] did in his treatment of the troublesome problem in the rivers and harbors bill, namely, induce some one, our friend from Washington [Mr. JOHNSON], for instance, to come before the House with a rule to create a new committee—a committee on forestry—which would relieve the Committee on Agriculture from this eternal discussion of tall trees?

Mr. JOHNSON of Washington. I desire to state to the gentleman from Pennsylvania that I have made many efforts to secure the indorsement of those chiefly interested in this executive management, of not only the committee but the departments of the Government itself. It stands to reason that if these great Federal resources, including mines, water power, and forests, are of the value that it is contended they are, they deserve more consideration than they get, even though this is as good as can be designed under present workings.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. No committee likes to lose its hold on some of its important adjuncts, and I presume that forestry is an important feature of the Agricultural bill.

Mr. JOHNSON of Washington. The trouble is that part of the forestry problems are in the Agricultural Department and part in the Interior Department.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. What would happen if we separated forestry from the Committee on Agriculture and created a new committee?

Mr. LEVER. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman from Pennsylvania yield to the gentleman from South Carolina?

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. I do.

Mr. LEVER. Let me say to the gentleman from Pennsylvania that, while I can not speak for the Committee on Agriculture, I myself would look rather favorably upon the proposition to create such a committee as he suggests, or as the gentleman from Washington [Mr. JOHNSON] suggests.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. I thought the gentleman probably would look with favor upon the proposition.

Mr. LEVER. The chairman of the Committee on Agriculture has no ambition to stretch his authority or keep hold of this proposition. But that is a matter that we have not considered at all; it was not a matter for us to consider.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Pennsylvania has expired.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to proceed for five minutes.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the gentleman's request?

There was no objection.

Mr. MANN. Will the gentleman yield for another interruption?

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. Yes.

Mr. MANN. I doubt if any considerable number of Members are here who were here when the Forestry Service was placed in the Department of Agriculture. The fact is that there was a bitter fight between the Department of Agriculture and the Department of the Interior. As I recall the matter, it was a very bitter fight, and finally it resulted in an armed peace, because Congress took hold of it.

I question whether the gentleman from South Carolina or any other member of the Committee on Agriculture would be willing to transfer the Forest Service out of the Agricultural Department. That is where it would go if they took it out of the Agricultural appropriation bill. It may be easy to talk about it; but when somebody proposes to do it you will find the Committee on Agriculture, which is always one of the ablest and strongest committees of this House, lined up in solid opposition to the proposition, and I will be on their side if I am here.

Mr. LEVER. As I said a moment ago, the Committee on Agriculture has never given any consideration to the matter of transferring the Forest Service from the Department of Agriculture to the Department of the Interior, from which it was originally taken, as I recollect it. I would like to know from the gentleman from Illinois whether my impression is correct that the Committee on Appropriations used to have jurisdiction over the forests?

Mr. MANN. I think so, but I am not sure.

Mr. LEVER. It had, probably. The Forest Service has given the Committee on Agriculture more concern, probably, than any other service with which it has to deal. It is an enormously big problem, and we try as nearly as we can to meet the situation squarely and fairly, and we do the best we can. There are conflicting views in this country as to what the policy of the Government ought to be. The committee has tried to follow as nearly as it can what seems to be the proper policy.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. Now, Mr. Chairman, I shall have to proceed in order to place the views I have before the committee.

Mr. JOHNSON of Washington. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield there?

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. I yield.

Mr. JOHNSON of Washington. I want to say in this connection that I have introduced a bill in this and in the previous Congress calling for the transfer of the Bureau of Forestry to the Department of the Interior.

Mr. LEVER. What committee did that go to?

Mr. JOHNSON of Washington. Well, it seems to be a sort of hot potato, but I think it is now resting in the Committee on Public Lands. I would like to have it referred to the Committee on Agriculture, in view of the statement of the chairman.

Mr. LEVER. I do not want the gentleman to think that I have committed myself on that subject.

Mr. JOHNSON of Washington. I was about to extend congratulations on the committal that the gentleman has just made.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. I observe, with sympathy and concern, the anxiety of the gentleman from South Carolina to pass his bill. His committee has worked hard and worthily in order to bring out a great national measure, and it seems a shame that half of the time usually allotted to a bill of this kind should be taken up with one phase of it.

Those who are interested in forestry might find it greatly to their advantage to create a new committee. A change of that character was made in the Committee on Rivers and Harbors when we created the Committee on Flood Control. Under the old system the Committee on Rivers and Harbors seldom took out in a regular way more than $8,000,000 for purposes of flood control, but on the creation of the Committee on Flood Control the members of that committee, taking more interest in their work and having looked over the field, they now come into Congress and propose to ask not $8,000,000 per annum but a total of $45,000,000.

So it might be advisable for forestry to take itself out of agriculture and come into the House with a committee of its own.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Pennsylvania has again expired. The Clerk will read.

The Clerk read as follows:

In national forest district 4, $50,400.

Mr. MONDELL. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Wyoming moves to strike out the last word.

Mr. MONDELL. Mr. Chairman, the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. MOORE] bears testimony to the effect of creating new committees or transferring services from one committee to another, as illustrated in river and harbor and flood-control appropriations. I am somewhat responsible for the transfer of the forest reserves from the Interior to the Agricultural Department. I introduced a bill for that purpose which became a law. The largest sum we had ever appropriated for the forests under the Interior Department was $365,000, if I recollect rightly, about the sum we now expend annually for the maintenance of these district offices. The appropriations have grown as the service has grown and as the necessities of the service have grown, and in the main I think the funds have been economically expended.

But I am not so sure about this matter of the forest districts. I very well remember when the forest districts were first created. I believed at that time that I was justified in saying that they were created largely for the purpose of making the forestry policy popular in certain localities where it had been very unpopular. I am sure that certain of the communities in the West where there had been a very great deal of adverse criticism of the Forest Service suddenly became very favorable to the Forest Service when arrangements were made for the payment of large sums in rent and the creation of a large official force in those communities. I have never been fully satisfied that all these district offices were necessary or that they were economically administered; and I want to ask the gentleman from South Carolina if the committee in its hearings, this year or last year or in the recent past, has gone carefully into the question of the expenditures of the sums that we appropriate for the various district offices?

Mr. LEVER. Mr. Chairman, as I said in the early part of the day, the matter of expenditures would come necessarily before the Committee on Expenditures in the Department of Agriculture. The Committee on Agriculture has looked generally into the expenditures, and has had testimony before it which in its judgment justifies the recommending of the appropriations.

Mr. MONDELL. I assume the gentleman will not say that it is not the province of the Committee on Agriculture, in holding hearings relative to appropriations, to go into the question of how the appropriations are spent.

Mr. LEVER. The committee has done that, and I am trying to differentiate, if I can, the jurisdiction of the Committee on Expenditures in the Department of Agriculture and of the Committee on Agriculture itself. We have called the Forester and the various chiefs and subchiefs of the department, and have inquired of them the character of the work they are doing, and how much they are spending for various items. We have examined the statement of work as set out in this volume here. I myself have gone through various and sundry volumes of statements of the department, of the Forest Service, as to what it is doing. The committee likewise has done that. The hearings before the committee make a volume of 1,700 pages this year, and we think, as a matter of fact, that we have gone fully enough into the expenditures in making these estimates.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. MONDELL. I ask for five minutes more.

Mr. LEVER. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that the debate on this paragraph and amendments thereto close in five minutes.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from South Carolina asks unanimous consent that debate on this paragraph and amendments thereto close in five minutes. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Wyoming asks unanimous consent that he may proceed for five minutes. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. MONDELL. Mr. Chairman, I understand the chairman of the committee to say that the committee have gone into the question of expenditures in the district offices sufficiently to satisfy the committee that these sums are needed and have been economically expended. Yet I remain rather unconvinced that it is necessary to spend $362,000 per annum for these offices.

For a number of years after the Forest Service was well under way the service got along without district offices, and the various superintendents and supervisors reported directly to Washington. I realize that is not in all respects and at all times an entirely satisfactory method. There are questions which need to be decided that should be decided more quickly than they can be or would be if referred to the Washington office; but I have never been convinced that it was necessary to maintain six different expensive offices as intermediaries between the local supervisors and superintendents and the office at Washington.

Mr. LEVER. I think the gentleman will agree with me that the reason for the decentralization of the supervisory work of the Forest Service probably came about more because of the criticism upon the floor of the House of the large-sum appropriations for supervisory expenses and the concentration of the work in the city of Washington than for any other reason. In addition to that the Forest Service thought they could get a much more economical administration, and much more satisfactory from the standpoint of the people in the West, by a decentralized system of administration than they could possibly get by a centralized system such as they used to have.

Mr. MONDELL. I do not desire to be understood as saying that these offices should be abolished—certainly not all of them—but I am of the opinion that the forces maintained at and in connection with these offices are larger than they need to be, and that these various districts throughout the country could very considerably reduce the amount expended without harm to the service.

Mr. McLAUGHLIN. I have no doubt that what the gentleman says is true, that the Government does not carry on its work economically, that in many departments clerks could be dispensed with, and that the entire work could be carried on with less expense. Now, as to the question of the administration of the forests in districts, the committee did consider that matter, and we have the explanation of the forester as to the reason for creating the districts. He said:

> The administration of the national forests is decentralized as much as possible.

And further on he says:

> We aim to have as much of the business transacted in the field as possible, and as little of the detail and routine work come to Washington as possible, in the interest of prompt transaction of business and the convenience of those who do business with the Forest Service.

And all the forester told us in regard to the working of the service indicated and satisfied us that the work is more satisfactorily done, if not more economically done, more conveniently done, with better opportunity for the transaction of the business with more convenience to those who have business with the service, than if the only headquarters of the service were in Washington.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. MONDELL. I ask unanimous consent for one minute.

The CHAIRMAN. Debate was closed by order of the committee. Without objection, the pro forma amendment will be considered withdrawn, and the Clerk will read.

The Clerk read as follows:

> In national forest district 5, $70,100.

Mr. MONDELL. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word. I do not desire to be understood as advocating the abandonment of the district office system. I have no doubt that there are many benefits to the people and the service following from that system. But from the beginning I believed that the system was one which was likely to lead to extravagances, and, having made some little inquiry, I am inclined to think that it has tended that way. Three hundred and sixty-two thousand dollars is a pretty large sum to expend, beside what we expend here in the Washington office and what is spent on and around the reserves.

Mr. COX. The gentleman from Wyoming has given this considerable study. What officers would he eliminate?

Mr. MONDELL. I have not gone into the matter carefully enough to have an opinion on that point, and therefore I do not care to express one. Here is an expenditure of $64,000, $48,000, $55,000, for the maintenance of district offices, which is pretty large when you take into consideration that all that they do is to act as an intermediary between the office here and the local reserves. There are some questions settled in the district office, a good many questions, that could not be settled on the reserve, but it would be very easy to modify the administration so as to give the local officials more authority, possibly retaining a little more here, and thus reduce the expenses of these various district headquarters.

Mr. COX. The gentleman lives in the country where most of these reserves are. Has he ever talked with these people who have immediate charge with a view of seeing what persons could be eliminated?

Mr. MONDELL. No; I have not. I have not felt the responsibility that I should feel if I was a member of the Agriculture Committee, but I did have some opinions when this policy was adopted. I expressed some views relative to it, and the expense has been about as I anticipated. Then we were told that if we would only wait a short time the expense of the district offices could be largely reduced, but we have gone on paying rent and employing many clerks and maintaining very fine establishments, a part of which we need and some we do not need at all.

Mr. COX. Does the gentleman hope to live long enough to see the force decreased?

Mr. MONDELL. I am not expressing that faith.

Mr. JOHNSON of Washington. Did the gentleman ever hear a forest ranger, or any officer connected therewith, state that he ought to be separated from the office for the good of the service?

Mr. MONDELL. No; nor any Congressman. [Laughter.]

Mr. FESS. Seriously, does the gentleman from Wyoming think that an establishment that is actually a losing one will ever be discontinued?

Mr. MONDELL. The Forestry Service, in my opinion, eventually will be a paying service. If I live as long as I hope to live, I expect to see the Forestry Service a paying service without laying undue and improper burdens upon the people of that locality.

Mr. MANN. Make it as long as you want to live and you are safe.

Mr. FESS. Mr. Chairman, I rise in opposition to the amendment. I want to ask the chairman of the committee a question. What proportion of the activity of the Forestry Service is devoted to the reforestation of denuded places?

Mr. LEVER. If the gentleman will defer that question until we get to it, and it is on page 41 of the bill, I shall be very glad to go into it fully.

Mr. FESS. I will do that.

Mr. HAWLEY. If the gentleman will permit me, I was going to say that on pages 239 and 240 of the program the work in part is reforestation, and the sum of $165,000 is used.

Mr. FESS. There has been $5,000,000 altogether expended, and $165,000 would be a very small proportion. Is the most of this to care for forests already in existence and to market the timber? I am now speaking of the $5,000,000.

Mr. LEVER. It is used for a number of different purposes which are set out in the bill. We have one appropriation for fighting forest fires, $150,000. Another for the purchase and maintenance necessary for the office, laboratory supplies, instruments, and so forth, $150,000. There is another item of $135,000 in reference to the distillation of wood alcohol and another item of $400,000 for permanent improvements, and so forth. All of these are covered by the sum mentioned.

Mr. FESS. But the amount that is applied to reforestation is rather small in comparison with the total amount.

Mr. LEVER. Yes; $165,000.

Mr. FESS. I have never visited any national forest for the purpose of studying it, but I have been over much of the ranges in Pennsylvania, which are purely State forests. Most of that activity is for reforestation, and I wondered whether the National Government was doing much in that line.

Mr. LEVER. The total reforestation for the past year was 18,000 acres.

The CHAIRMAN. Without objection, the pro forma amendment is withdrawn.

MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE.

The committee informally rose; and Mr. RUSSELL of Missouri having taken the chair as Speaker pro tempore, a message from the Senate, by Mr. Waldorf, one of its clerks, announced that the Senate had agreed to the amendments of the House of Representatives to the bill (S. 683) prohibiting the use of the name of any Member of either House of Congress or of any officer of the Government by any person, firm, or corporation practicing before any department of the Government.

The message also announced that the Senate had agreed to the amendments of the House to the concurrent resolution (S. Con. Res. 20) authorizing the appointment of a representative of the United States Government to appear at the celebration of the landing of Sir Francis Drake on the coast of California with a further amendment, as follows: Strike out the numerals "20" after S. J. Res. and insert "121."

The message also announced that the Senate had disagreed to the amendments of the House of Representatives to the bill (S. 4876) to provide for an increase in the number of cadets at the United States Military Academy, had asked a conference with the House on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses thereon, and had appointed Mr. CHAMBERLAIN, Mr. HITCHCOCK, and Mr. DU PONT as the conferees on the part of the Senate.

AGRICULTURAL APPROPRIATION BILL.

The committee resumed its session.

The Clerk read as follows:

In national forest district 6, $61,400.

Mr. HUMPHREY of Washington. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word. I want to call the attention of the committee to a change of front in regard to the Forest Service with reference to why it was necessary to create these great reserves in the West. We were told for a good many years that it was necessary to create forest reserves in order to protect the public domain from private individuals. That was the great cry away back in the days of Pinchot, that private interests were going to grab the great forests of the West and make immense fortunes out of them. That was given as the reason why we should create the forest reserves, and they continued to make that cry and create these reserves until the Congress prohibited it.

Now they are singing a new tune and coming before Congress and asking that new reserves be created, because private capital can not afford to own these great forests. I have in my hand a communication sent by the Secretary of Agriculture to Senator MYERS under date of February 24, 1916, and it is very interesting to see the change that has come over the spirit of their dreams. I want to read a few extracts from this letter:

The interest on the capital invested in the timber, together with the taxes levied upon it and the necessary cost of protection from fire, constitute an annual carrying charge averaging probably 7 per cent on the first cost. The effect of such a yearly carrying charge, compounded, is to double the cost of the investment every 8 or 10 years. No matter how cheaply timber may be obtained in the first instance it can not be carried many decades under these conditions without acquiring a high cost, and the success of such investments is necessarily predicated upon a steady increase in the market value of timber as well as a steady growth of timber sufficient to at least offset its steadily increasing cost due to the carrying charges.

Mr. JOHNSON of Washington. Mr. Chairman, will my colleague yield there?

Mr. HUMPHREY of Washington. Yes.

Mr. JOHNSON of Washington. I would like to introduce in that connection a statement made by Mr. Henry S. Graves, the Chief Forester, published in the digest of the hearings of the Federal Trade Commission, in which the Chief Forester himself says, speaking of our Northwest country, that many sawmills are operated there at an actual loss because carrying charges on their indebtedness would not permit them to close down, and that about 132 mills were idle altogether. That was about the time the Underwood law went into effect and that sent down about a hundred of them.

Mr. HUMPHREY of Washington. Mr. Chairman, I desire to continue to read a little further, because I have heard here so much on the floor of the House and read so much in the saffron magazines about the grabbing of the great resources of the West for the purpose of building up great private fortunes that it is quite a relief to find the head of the service making these statements.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Washington has expired.

Mr. HUMPHREY of Washington. Mr. Chairman——

Mr. LEVER. Oh, will not the gentleman let the next line be read?

Mr. HUMPHREY of Washington. Very well.

The Clerk read as follows:

In national forest district 7, $14,900.

Mr. HUMPHREY of Washington. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word. I continue to read:

Far-sighted men in the Northwest are already urging that the Government take back the less accessible timber previously acquired out of the public domain, thus assuming the function of carrying this resource, in which private ownership has plainly broken down. No such opportunity to apply this policy will ever again be afforded as is now presented by the Oregon and California lands. Considerable amounts of this timber can undoubtedly be sold to advantage from time to time to existing mills, as there is legitimate demand for it for immediate exploitation, under the same principles which govern the disposition of timber on the national forests.

Then he ends up this portion of the letter by saying:

In this way timber sales may be made without disturbing the industry, while at the same time easily yielding sufficient revenue to liquidate completely the railroad's equity within the 10-year limit suggested by the Attorney General as well as the advance made to the State covering delinquent taxes. Otherwise the timber should be held and protected by the Government, with the time of its subsequent removal left discretionary with the responsible executive department.

As one man from the West I am glad to see this change of front in those who have been saying so much about the public domain being robbed by private enterprise.

Mr. McLAUGHLIN. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. HUMPHREY of Washington. Yes.

Mr. McLAUGHLIN. Does the gentleman believe that private interests would not acquire this property because they could not afford to hold it and carry it?

Mr. HUMPHREY of Washington. I am reading from the report of the Secretary of Agriculture.

Mr. McLAUGHLIN. But the gentleman expresses no opinion on it himself?

Mr. HUMPHREY of Washington. I am not expressing any opinion. I am reading what the head of the Forest Service says now, as against what they have been preaching for the last 15 or 20 years, during which time they have been insisting that these reserves must be created by the Government, otherwise great private fortunes would be built up. They now come in and argue the Government must take these forests, because private individuals can not afford to own them.

Mr. DOOLITTLE. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. HUMPHREY of Washington. Yes.

Mr. DOOLITTLE. Has the gentleman any opinion on it himself?

Mr. HUMPHREY of Washington. Have I an opinion on what?

Mr. DOOLITTLE. On what the gentleman is discussing, the view of the Chief Forester?

Mr. HUMPHREY of Washington. I think the Secretary of Agriculture in this letter is much nearer right than those who have gone before, who filled the country and the magazines full of this howl about the resources of the West being seized and exploited for private profit.

Mr. McLAUGHLIN. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield further?

Mr. HUMPHREY of Washington. Yes.

Mr. McLAUGHLIN. If the private interests were unable to acquire or hold them, what becomes of the argument so often made by the gentleman himself and his colleagues, Mr. JOHNSON and Mr. HAWLEY, that if this Forest Service did not obtain, the local communities out there would receive taxes to the extent of millions and millions of dollars. If private interests could not afford to own them, they could not afford to pay the taxes.

Mr. HUMPHREY of Washington. That is another statement in which the gentleman is wrong. I will give him an illustration, and perhaps it will please him. When Mr. Pinchot was forester, or just after he went out, I do not remember which, he wrote an article for Pearson's Magazine which was widely published, in which he contended that the State of Washington ought to be very much pleased with the returns we were receiving from the forest reserves in lieu of the taxes. I had occasion to look it up. At that time we received in lieu of taxes in the State of Washington $14,400 a year from the Forest Service. If it had been in private ownership, we would have received over $7,000,000 a year if we had taxed it the same as private holdings.

Mr. McLAUGHLIN. But the gentleman said private interests could not afford to hold them.

Mr. HUMPHREY of Washington. I am reading what the Secretary of Agriculture said; and one of the reasons he said they can not afford to own them is because they are being taxed, and, of course, the Government can own them, because they are not taxed; and neither do they cut off the timber or sell it or do anything except to let it stand in the forests and rot.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Washington has again expired.

Mr. JOHNSON of Washington. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last two words.

Mr. LEVER. I wonder if the gentleman will not wait until we reach the next item?

Mr. HUMPHREY of Washington. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to proceed for five minutes.

Mr. LEVER. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that debate on this paragraph and all amendments thereto close in 10 minutes.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will recognize the gentleman from Washington [Mr. HUMPHREY].

Mr. HUMPHREY of Washington. Mr. Chairman, while I am on my feet, for the benefit of the gentleman from Michigan, who seems to have a hazy idea about conditions in the West in regard to these forest reserves, I think I will give him a little history about these great private holdings. I wonder if the gentleman knows that the foundation for the great holdings of the Weyerhauser Co. came through the assistance of the Forest Service? I wonder if he knows that 750,000 acres of railroad land in the State of Washington—barren mountain tops, rocks, and glaciers; absolutely worthless—was included in the forest reserves, and the railroads were permitted to make an exchange, acre for acre, for the best timberland of that State, and then the railroads sold to Weyerhauser? That was the foundation of the great Weyerhauser holdings in the State of Washington; and yet we hear these gentlemen talk about we must have these forest reserves to conserve the resources and keep private capital from seizing all the lands of the West.

Mr. LEVER. Of course the gentleman will say that the instance to which he refers did not occur under the present Forestry Service?

Mr. HUMPHREY of Washington. No; it did occur during the time when my friend Gifford Pinchot was just coming to be recognized as the head and front of the great conservation movement of this country.

Mr. CULLOP. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. HUMPHREY of Washington. Certainly.

Mr. CULLOP. I would like to ask the gentleman from Washington how long Mr. Graves has been connected with the Forestry Service?

Mr. HUMPHREY of Washington. Well, I can not tell the gentleman from Indiana.

Mr. LEVER. Five or six years, I think.

Mr. CULLOP. Now I would like to ask another question. In this exchange of land, about which the gentleman from Washington has been talking, the consideration to the Government was wholly inadequate as to the value of the property transferred, was it not?

Mr. HUMPHREY of Washington. In most cases it was practically nothing.

Mr. CULLOP. Now, is there anything under that view of the case to prevent the Government from suing and recovering this land back and restoring to the other party this worthless land that the Government received in exchange?

Mr. HUMPHREY of Washington. Well, that is a legal question which I am not competent to answer. I have been trying for a good many years to get some investigation of this Forestry Service to see whether that might not be done, but the gentleman from Indiana knows that this service has been held sacred for a good many years, and no man has dared lift his voice upon the floor of this House against it but what he would be a target of all the yellow magazines of the United States.

Mr. CULLOP. Then I would like to remind the gentleman from Washington, if he will permit——

Mr. HUMPHREY of Washington. Certainly.

Mr. CULLOP. That it grew up under the administration of his party, that it was installed there.

Mr. MANN. Everything in the Government did that.

Mr. CULLOP. Oh, no; the gentleman from Illinois is much mistaken.

Mr. HUMPHREY of Washington. Since my friend's party has gotten in power they have not made a step toward correcting it, and although it has been called to their attention repeatedly they have taken no action whatever; so, evidently, his party looked with favor upon what had been done. Now, I never did have very much regard for that argument where a man tried to excuse himself for doing wrong because somebody else had done wrong.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has again expired.

Mr. JOHNSON of Washington. Mr. Chairman, I shall use five minutes to discuss whether the large holders of private timber are not, many of them, now in favor of a movement to revert large timber holdings to the Government, and to the inquiry made by the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. McLAUGHLIN] as to what then becomes of the question of the need of taxation. After great quantities of the timber had gone into the reserves, which was followed by the great magazine hue and cry that the United States would soon be without timber, the mere fact of reserving so much of the timber area helped to create a value for the outside timber, caused it to rise in price. That resulted in heavy taxation—to a point now that taxes on timber are so high as to force liquidation in some cases. I know of one $50,000,000 concern that is cutting off every tree they own, regardless of the price received. Now, if the large reserved tracts were privately owned a much lesser rate of taxation would be sufficient for all State and county needs.

For instance, here is an illustration of the taxation problem, taken from statements before the Federal Trade Commission: In the year 1906 a small tract of timberland was assessed at $20,000 and taxed for $696. In the year 1914 it is assessed at $35,000 and taxed $1,170. That is a sample of the way taxes are growing. I was interrogated yesterday as to the actual cost and the actual selling price. Here is a statement covering the period from 1906 to the year 1914, giving the cost of conversion, including logging, the cost of manufacturing, insurance, interest on the operating investment, depreciation, and general expenses, not counting selling expenses and not counting the cost of the logs themselves that the operation started with. In 1906 the cost was $11.05, selling price $15; 1907, cost $12.85, selling price $17; 1908, cost $10.91, selling price $14; 1909, cost $11.53, selling price $13.10, and so on.

In 1914 the cost was $12.95, or practically $13, and sold for $14.79, or call it $15, and not a cent for the selling expense. The difference—in round numbers, $2—represents all that can possibly be paid for the log. Owners of large tracts who themselves own mills are putting their logs into those mills at an estimated value of about 69 or 70 cents and paying taxes considerably above that. If that is conservation, I would like to have it explained to me.

Mr. McLAUGHLIN. Will the gentleman answer a question?

Mr. JOHNSON of Washington. Yes.

Mr. McLAUGHLIN. It has been suggested that the day is coming when the private owners will wish to give up their property and not seek to acquire more. Does not the gentleman think that the land then would be acquired very promptly by private interests?

Mr. JOHNSON of Washington. Well, there have been many changes in ownership.

The CHAIRMAN. All time has expired. The Clerk will read.

The Clerk read as follows:

In the District of Columbia, $127,730.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word. I do this for the purpose of asking the gentleman from South Carolina [Mr. LEVER] if he will not put in the RECORD the location of these national forest district offices?

Mr. LEVER. In forest district No. 1 the capital is Missoula, Mont.; district No. 2, Denver, Colo.; district No. 3, Albuquerque, N. Mex.; district No. 4, Ogden, Utah; district No. 5, San Francisco; district No. 6, Portland, Oreg.; and national forest district No. 7, Washington City.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. They are all west of the Rocky Mountains except the headquarters in the District of Columbia. The total expense of keeping these offices is what?

Mr. LEVER. Upward of $300,000.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. And that is expended largely for salaries?

Mr. LEVER. Well, yes; largely.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. Mostly salaries.

Mr. BENNET. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last two words.

It seems to me, Mr. Chairman, that we have developed a defect in relation to this Forest Service that requires more attention than possibly it is receiving, and that is the evident and probable duplication that there is in connection with these two methods—that is, the forest districts and the 135 individual forests, each with its own officers and its own rangers.

The chairman of the Committee on Agriculture said, "We have no jurisdiction. We are purposing to protect the Committee on Expenditures in the Department of Agriculture." Now, there is a Committee on Expenditures in the Department of Agriculture. It is composed of Mr. DOUGHTON, of North Carolina; Mr. ASWELL, of Louisiana; Mr. Moss, of Indiana; Mr. KINCHELOE, of Kentucky; Mr. KING, of Illinois; Mr. HUTCHINSON, of New Jersey; and Mr. REAVIS, of Nebraska. But one of the defects of the operation of this House—and it is not entirely incident to the Department of Agriculture—is the difficulty of getting any proposition like this followed up.

Now, the gentleman from Oregon [Mr. HAWLEY], who lives out in that country, and the gentleman from Washington [Mr. JOHNSON] and others do not attempt to say but that there is duplication, and unnecessary duplication, and therefore unnecessary expenditure of Government funds.

Mr. LEVER. If the gentleman will permit, I did not understand the gentleman from Oregon [Mr. HAWLEY] to make that statement.

Mr. BENNET. I said he did not attempt to say there was not. The gentleman from Oregon is from that section of the country. And, oh, well, he would not want to get very rambunctious about it. He is one of the most honest men on the footstool. He did not get up and say and will not get up and say that there is no waste in the service.

Mr. LEVER. I do not believe there is any more waste in this service than there is waste incidental to every Government service. If so, it has not come to our attention.

Mr. BENNET. And the gentleman from South Carolina [Mr. LEVER], who is a good, conscientious man, does not say that there is no waste, and yet nothing is going to be done about it. I hope I am going to be a very poor prophet. I have deliberately read upon the floor of this House the names of the members of that committee, so that they will look at the RECORD of to-day and see what has been brought before this Congress in relation to duplication in expenditure.

Mr. ANDERSON. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BENNET. Yes.

Mr. ANDERSON. Of course, the gentleman is a good parliamentarian and he knows this committee has not any legislative jurisdiction. What would the Committee on Expenditures in the Agricultural Department do about it if they found there was a duplication of work?

Mr. BENNET. The gentleman simply emphasizes my point. Everybody is passing it along. The Committee on Agriculture says, "We have no authority. There is the Committee on Expenditures in the Department of Agriculture."

Mr. ANDERSON. I think the Committee on Agriculture has jurisdiction, but it certainly has no jurisdiction in this bill.

Mr. BENNET. I agree with that.

Mr. LEVER. I think the gentleman misinterpreted my statement. I said I was trying to differentiate the jurisdiction of the two committees.

Mr. BENNET. For what purpose was the gentleman attempting to differentiate the jurisdiction of the two committees?

Mr. LEVER. I do not remember the connection in which I was speaking.

Mr. BENNET. Other Members were calling the attention of the chairman of the committee to the fact that there was patent duplication here, an opportunity for duplication in the building up of bureaus, one of the curses of our Government, and the gentleman said, "Well, we have a Committee on Expenditures in the Department of Agriculture."

Mr. MANN. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BENNET. Yes.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from New York has expired.

Mr. BENNET. I ask unanimous consent to proceed for three minutes.

Mr. HAUGEN. Mr. Chairman, I ask for five minutes.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman asks unanimous consent that the gentleman from New York be permitted to proceed for five minutes. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. MANN. The Committee on Expenditures in the Agricultural Department is one of the expenditure committees, since I have been here, at least, that has made a good many investigations and has done a good deal of work about expenditures in the Agricultural Department and has never been able to find out any improper expenditure in the Forestry Service.

Mr. BENNET. Mr. Chairman, I have not been here as continuously as the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MANN], but if that is the condition I accept his statement that that is so.

Mr. LEVER. The gentleman may remember that Mr. Littlefield, of Maine, made a very thorough examination into this service and all of the branches of the service under the Department of Agriculture.

Mr. HAUGEN. Oh, that was 10 or 15 years ago.

Mr. BENNET. Mr. Chairman, if my recollection is correct, the investigation made by Mr. Littlefield, of Maine, was made before these district offices were created. Is that correct? Gentlemen say that is so. At the time Mr. Littlefield, of Maine, made his investigation there were no such things as district offices.

Mr. LEVER. The gentleman said that these investigations did not disclose anything wrong in connection with the Forest Service.

Mr. BENNET. The distinguished gentleman from Maine, Mr. Littlefield, could not have made discoveries of any duplication between the offices in the separate forests and the offices in the forest districts two or three years before the forest districts were created.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Chairman, I do not wish to be understood as saying that the committee had ever investigated the Forest Service. I do not know whether they did or not, but both during Mr. Littlefield's time and since Mr. Littlefield's time that committee has done quite a lot of investigating in the Department of Agriculture, and they never discovered anything in the Forest Service that was improper. I do not know how extensively they investigated the Forest Service. Maybe their attention was directed elsewhere. But it has been one of the active expenditure committees in the past.

Mr. BENNET. Mr. Chairman, I hope the present committee will keep up the good reputation of its predecessors.

Mr. HAUGEN. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BENNET. Yes.

Mr. HAUGEN. I would like to ask the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MANN] if he has any knowledge of reports made by the Committee on Expenditures in the Department of Agriculture, except Mr. Littlefield's report, and also the investigation of Dr. Wiley?

Mr. MANN. I do not know whether any reports were made. Mr. Littlefield did not make any report that I know of or that I recall.

Mr. BENNET. I think the gentleman is in error about that. I think Mr. Littlefield, of Maine, did make a report.

Mr. HAUGEN. They published the hearings.

Mr. MANN. Oh, yes; they published the hearings, but I am talking about reports.

Mr. McLAUGHLIN. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BENNET. Yes.

Mr. McLAUGHLIN. The gentleman insists that there is duplication of officials, but he does not particularize. The Committee on Agriculture is industrious, but they need help. I ask the gentleman to point out the particulars. The gentleman says broadly and generally that there is opportunity for duplication. Particularize; point out something.

Mr. BENNET. Mr. Chairman, that sounds well on the floor of the House.

Mr. McLAUGHLIN. Oh, these general charges sound well in the ears of some men.

Mr. BENNET. I pointed out, and nobody has denied it, that there is here an opportunity for duplication. I have asked Member after Member if the existing system did not lend itself to duplication, and nobody denies that it does lend itself to duplication.

Mr. HOWELL. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BENNET. Yes.

Mr. HOWELL. I would like to call the attention of the gentleman to the fact that the forestry area embraces something like 160,000,000 acres of land. If each of those districts had an equal proportion of that 160,000,000 acres of land, it would administer something like 20,000,000 acres in each district. The expense of administration, according to these figures, is less than one-fourth of a cent per acre. Does not the gentleman from New York think that it is due the people utilizing those forests to have the administration of the forests convenient and accessible to its patrons, when in any event, the cost does not much exceed one-fourth of a cent per acre?

Mr. BENNET. Well, when I am informed that the forests are operated at an annual deficit of $2,500,000 and that there is no immediate prospect of that expense being materially reduced, it seems to me that the House has a perfect right to ask some of the committees that have jurisdiction over this subject to investigate to find out if the best methods are being pursued.

Mr. LEVER. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that all debate on this paragraph and amendments thereto close in five minutes.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the gentleman's request?

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. Mr. Chairman, I would like to have that five minutes in which to ask a question solely for information.

Mr. LEVER. Mr. Chairman, I will withdraw my request for the limitation of debate on this paragraph and amendments thereto to five minutes and let the gentleman from Missouri have full opportunity.

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. Five minutes is plenty.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Missouri [Mr. CLARK] is recognized for five minutes.

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. I want to ask the chairman of this committee [Mr. LEVER] or the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. HAUGEN] or anybody else who has the information, How much is this appropriation for forests?

Mr. LEVER. About $5,500,000.

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. How much do we get back?

Mr. LEVER. Two million nine hundred thousand.

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. My understanding is that the German Government makes a handsome revenue every year out of the forestry business. There is more timber in Germany now than there was when Frederick the Great was on the throne of Prussia, and yet they have used timber all the time to a very large extent. Now, what is the reason why the German Government can make a very handsome profit out of forestry, and we run into the hole every year two and one-half million dollars? If any gentleman here can answer that I would like for him to do it.

Mr. BORLAND. I think I can answer that question for the gentleman.

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. What is the answer?

Mr. BORLAND. The reason is that the area of the national forests includes a large amount of waste land that has no timber on it at all; but that waste land has to have foresters and rangers and all the expenses of administration that go in connection with it. The timberland that is actually used does not produce the necessary revenue, and we have a large amount of land included in forest reserves that is not productive.

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. What is the sense of having rangers and foresters and all the rest of it in that part of the forest reserves that is of no earthly use?

Mr. BORLAND. That goes back and involves the question of whether a good deal of that area ought originally to have been withdrawn and inclosed in the forest reserves.

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. Is it the expectation that this double-headed performance of appropriating over $5,000,000 a year and losing $2,500,000 is going on in perpetuity?

Mr. BORLAND. I think we have been increasing the amount that we have made out of the forests. The amount of the return from the forests has been growing.

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. I will tell you what I am in favor of doing. As soon as this war across the sea is over I am in favor of appointing a committee of three sensible, industrious, honest men, to go to Germany and stay there and study their forest system until they get it absolutely pat, and then come back here and tell us about it and introduce it. [Applause.] There is no sense in our experimenting on how to do a thing when somebody else has already learned thoroughly to do it.

Mr. BOOHER. I want to say to my colleague that he would not have to send to Germany. He can go up into Canada and find that that Dominion, with one-third the number of acres of land in forest reserves that we have, put into their treasury last year $2,000,000 in the way of profit from their forest-reserve system.

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. Then, let that committee go around by way of Canada.

Mr. HUMPHREY of Washington. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. In a moment. I understand that the German Government will not permit a man to cut down a tree in that country unless he plants four trees of a certain designated kind——

Mr. COX. Two.

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. Unless he plants two in place of the one he cuts down.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. I will yield first to the gentleman from Washington, as he was first up.

Mr. HUMPHREY of Washington. I was just going to ask the distinguished Speaker if he did not recall the fact that our friend Gifford Pinchot was educated largely in Germany, and certainly my friend would not assume that anybody knows more about forestry than Gifford Pinchot does.

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. Yes; I would. I would assume that without any hesitancy whatever. [Laughter and applause.]

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. Will the gentleman from Missouri yield?

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. Yes.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. I have personally been in the celebrated Stillewald forest, just outside of the city of Zurich, in Switzerland, and perhaps it constitutes the best example of forest regulation in the world. I should like, for the information of the gentleman, to read an extract from a report——

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. BENNET. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that the time of the gentleman be extended five minutes.

The CHAIRMAN. The time was fixed by the committee.

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. I have said everything I wanted to say.

Mr. HAUGEN. I will yield my time to the gentleman.

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. If we are going on at this rate, we might as well quit the whole thing.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. The gentleman has opened up a very interesting subject——

The CHAIRMAN. All debate on this paragraph and amendments thereto is closed.

Mr. MANN. I ask unanimous consent that the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. HAUGEN] have five minutes.

Mr. LEVER. I think he ought to have it.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Illinois asks unanimous consent that the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. HAUGEN] have five minutes. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. HAUGEN. I desire to say to the gentleman from New York [Mr. BENNET] and to every Member of this House that all Members are entitled to information that has been asked for. It can also be said without reflecting upon the integrity or the industry of members of the Committee on Agriculture that it has not all the information it should have. I believe it can also be said that they have done everything that could be done and that can be expected. That committee, as all other committees do, gets its information from the department. It gets its information from the same source as other committees do—from Government officials. With few exceptions, if any, the members of that committee have no personal knowledge of these various forest districts or how the money is being expended throughout the country. Therefore it must rely upon the information it gets from the department. I approve of the suggestion made by the Speaker, and the suggestion made by Members here, that we should have a committee to investigate this subject and make it possible to furnish this House with the information which it is entitled—not to go to Germany, but to go on the ground, to go into the various districts, and then examine the books and to ascertain if the money is wisely expended. I have suggested it a number of times. I believe provision should be made for that. I believe that members of the Committee on Agriculture could devote part of their time to good advantage in visiting various forest districts in investigating and reporting, so that Congress might have first-hand information, the information which it is entitled to.

Mr. STEENERSON. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. HAUGEN. Yes.

Mr. STEENERSON. Does the department claim that they will in the near future make this Forest Service self-sustaining?

Mr. HAUGEN. Oh, they have claimed that from the very first. I think in the beginning Mr. Pinchot said that inside of six years the Forest Service would be self-supporting, but the further we go the further we get away from that. We are now out $2,500,000 a year.

Mr. STEENERSON. And this sum is increasing.

Mr. HAMILTON of Michigan. Instead of sending a commission abroad, at considerable expense to the country, would it not be a good idea for that committee to begin to figure on reducing expenditures in the administration of the Forest Service right here now? That is within their reach.

Mr. HAUGEN. I am not in favor of sending a committee abroad. It is not necessary, in my opinion. Send them out into the United States and let them examine witnesses and investigate and report as to our own national forests and if money expended is properly and wisely expended.

Mr. STEENERSON. Why does not the Committee on Agriculture call witnesses outside of the department and find out about this matter? The committee is not limited to information furnished by the department, nor is any other committee of this House.

Mr. HAUGEN. The committee has been ridiculed for gathering too much information of the kind furnished. We have 1,700 pages of it here. What is needed is for some one to visit the various districts to investigate and report facts as they exist for the information of Congress. Either the chairman of the Agriculture Committee should appoint a subcommittee or Congress should appoint a committee giving it authority to summon witnesses, investigate, and report.

The CHAIRMAN. Without objection, the pro forma amendment will be withdrawn, and the Clerk will read.

The Clerk read as follows:

In all, for the use, maintenance, improvement, protection, and general administration of the specified national forests, $1,800,508: Provided, That the foregoing amounts appropriated for such purposes shall be available interchangeably in the discretion of the Secretary of Agriculture for the necessary expenditures for fire protection and other unforeseen exigencies: Provided further, That the amounts so interchanged shall not exceed in the aggregate 10 per cent of all the amounts so appropriated.

Mr. McLAUGHLIN. Mr. Chairman——

Mr. LEVER. I ask unanimous consent that debate on this paragraph and amendments thereto close in 10 minutes.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. May I have five minutes?

Mr. LEVER. Yes.

Mr. CARAWAY. Reserving the right to object, I wish to offer an amendment.

Mr. CANNON. I should like to have five minutes.

Mr. MANN. We need 20 minutes on this side.

Mr. LEVER. I ask unanimous consent that the debate on this paragraph and amendments thereto close in 25 minutes.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from South Carolina asks unanimous consent that debate on this paragraph and amendments thereto close in 25 minutes. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. McLAUGHLIN. Mr. Chairman, there have been a good many criticisms of the administration of the forests, that it was costing too much, and for other reasons, but those who recall how the forests were in the first place established will recollect that it was not possible to have their exterior lines defined, and that large sums of money have been necessarily expended in order to learn the proper description and to define the limits of the forests. It may be said that the plan first employed was not the proper one in the laying out of the forests, that there should not have been so much haste; but at the time there seemed to be a necessity for haste because there was a continuous and persistent effort made by private interests to acquire the forests, and there was strenuous opposition to the establishment of any kind of a forest policy.

All money carried by this bill is not to be spent directly in ordinary forestry or for the care of forests. In some years we have spent as high as a million dollars for fighting fires. A hundred thousand dollars is provided in the bill for the purpose of selecting and setting aside lands more suitable for agriculture than for forestry, opening these lands to homestead entry; $400,000 in this bill is appropriated for building roads, and the department has already constructed 22,000 miles of trails, 2,500 miles of road, and 20,000 miles of telephone. The extent of the work can be gathered from these expenditures, that would not have been necessary in a foreign country which does not compare in size, character, or operations with this country.

There is $135,000 carried in this bill for the purpose of assisting and maintaining a forest laboratory at Madison, Wis., where the work is done in cooperation with the University of Wisconsin. That is charged to the Forestry Service, although it is not strictly applicable to the Forestry Service or for the care of the forests.

Mr. HUMPHREY of Washington. Can the gentleman tell us the total amount expended for salaries?

Mr. McLAUGHLIN. I can not, but I was calling the attention of the House to some of these unusual expenses, ordinarily not expenses for the care of the forests.

Millions of money have been spent every year for the purpose of building houses, laying out trails, putting up telephone and telegraph lines, and all that—making permanent improvements. Expenditures along these lines will not be necessary hereafter, except for maintenance.

Mr. BORLAND. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. McLAUGHLIN. Yes.

Mr. BORLAND. The gentleman is more familiar with forestry than I am, but last summer when we were in the national forests we were told that the forest fires, to a certain extent, were normally a good thing; that when the fires had occurred they kept down the insect pests, and since the fires had decreased the insects had been increasing wonderfully; that the fires did not destroy the ripe, green timber, but did destroy the old, dead stock and kept down the increase of the insects. Is there anything in that?

Mr. McLAUGHLIN. The gentleman's statement is interesting, whether it is true or not. I have not time to answer him.

Mr. HAMILTON of Michigan. Did the gentleman get that from a magazine article?

Mr. BORLAND. No; it was not taken from a magazine article; it was told us out there.

Mr. McLAUGHLIN. There was an expenditure of $700,000 in 1914 for fighting forest fires, and last year the system of fighting fires had been so perfected and was so much more efficient that only $207,000 were necessary, while the fires were almost as numerous as in the year before. Many appropriations carried in this bill are for preliminary work—getting ready for proper care of the immense forest area of more than 160,000,000 acres—for experiments and for investigations not necessary in foreign countries, and for work not strictly in the line of forestry.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. Mr. Chairman, the Speaker of the House, Mr. CLARK, a little while ago threw into the discussion one of the most interesting problems in connection with forestry. Some of us who have been abroad can appreciate its importance. This is the most wasteful country in the world in many things. We have not learned the lessons of the Old World in forestry, although we have tremendous areas in the United States, which do not prevail in European countries. They have to be more careful in Europe with respect to their food supplies, as well as to timber and other resources. This war has proven that more than anything else.

So far as the forests of Germany are concerned, they are protected and well protected. Germany did not cut and sell any standing timber, but purchased wherever she could for years. I was in the Black Forest and gained a great deal of information in respect to Germany's economic policy in the matter of trees and lumber.

It is true that where a tree was displaced, even to the extent that one might be struck by lightning, a tree was generally planted to take its place. The supply was kept up. They have regulations to cover this point. In Switzerland, where there is still less area than in Germany, the problem becomes more acute. They are necessarily more economical. The forest I made reference to a while ago is just outside the city of Zurich. It contains 2,000 acres. It is easy to understand why conditions there would not apply to the situation in the United States, where the forests are so much greater. But the city of Zurich exercises great care over its 2,000 acres. It is watched over almost with the care that the housewife in America watches over her flower garden. There is a forester and his assistants, and they are constantly checking up the trees, marking every one; they can tell the age of them from year to year. When the trees are ripe there is a cutting in a limited area of, say, 100 acres. When that is cut over, then another 100 acres, and so on. Meanwhile the rest of the forest is growing in a sort of graduated scale of 100-acre tracts. There is a constant growth and replacing of the trees that are taken away. Then there comes the distribution. They cut their trees into lumber and dispose of it for the benefit of the city. It is sold, so far as they think it wise to dispose of it. Nothing is lost, even to the twigs, which are turned into the brooms that sweep the highways of the city. Everything is accounted for and checked up to such a nicety that the system would be enormously expensive if applied to the great forests of the United States. It may be true that we are wasteful; it is true that they are economical; but our problem is vastly different from theirs. We can probably never equal their economic system unless we reduce our forest area and increase our population.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Pennsylvania has expired. The gentleman from Arkansas [Mr. CARAWAY] is recognized.

Mr. CARAWAY. Mr. Chairman, I yield back my time and will ask recognition on the next paragraph.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Illinois [Mr. CANNON] is recognized.

[Mr. CANNON addressed the committee. See Appendix.]

The CHAIRMAN. Without objection, the pro forma amendment will be withdrawn.

There was no objection.

The Clerk read as follows:

For the selection, classification, and segregation of lands within the boundaries of national forests that may be opened to homestead settlement and entry under the homestead laws applicable to the national forests, $100,000.

Mr. CARAWAY. Mr. Chairman, I desire to offer the following amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amend, page 39, at end of line 14, by inserting the following:

"That hereafter 50 per cent of the proceeds of sales of timber cut from the national forest reservations in the State of Arkansas shall be, and is hereby, appropriated to promote the teaching of agriculture, domestic economy, animal husbandry, and dairying within the State of Arkansas. The sum so appropriated shall be divided equally among the four district agricultural schools of said State and the College of Agriculture; that is, 20 per cent of such sum so appropriated shall go to each of the five institutions herein named and shall be devoted exclusively to instruction in agriculture, animal husbandry, dairying, and household economics, and for experimental and demonstrative purposes in the aforesaid sciences; that the dean of the College of Agriculture and the president of each of the four district agricultural schools herein mentioned shall report direct to the Secretary of Agriculture annually the sum so obtained under this appropriation, and the uses to which it has been put, and furnish the Secretary with any and all other information that he, within his discretion, may require."

Mr. LEVER. Mr. Chairman, I reserve a point of order on the amendment.

Mr. CARAWAY. Mr. Chairman, I hope the gentleman from South Carolina [Mr. LEVER] will not press his point of order. Eighty per cent of the people in my State are engaged in agriculture, and necessarily they must continue in that occupation. There is an arbitrary freight zone conforming to the center of the Mississippi River, extending north and south. All shipments west of the river carry such an enormously increased rate that it prohibits manufacture to a very considerable extent. Therefore, if not by choice by necessity, our people are compelled to remain farmers, and this condition must remain until we get an adjustment of our freight rates, which I hope will be soon. But since we are engaged in agriculture we want to become the best farmers in the world, the most expert tillers of the soil. In furtherance of this ambition we have established agricultural schools, in which agriculture, animal husbandry, household economics, and dairying are successfully taught. These institutions need increased appropriations more than the State is able to make at this time. This amendment seeks to aid these institutions and the college of agriculture. There are 20,000,000 acres included in the Arkansas National Forest Reserve—that in round numbers. There were two and one-half million acres, but recent withdrawals left about 2,000,000 acres. The average assessed valuation of land in our State is $14.85 per acre. These lands included in the national forest reserve are not so valuable. I think, however, an assessed valuation of $10 per acre would be not unreasonable. Therefore you will perceive there are $20,000,000 worth of public property in that State that bears no part of the burdens of maintaining schools, building roads, or in any other way supports any of the State's varied activities. For the purpose of maintaining schools we levy an assessment of 7 mills. This is a voluntary act, and affects all private property, real and personal. If this $20,000,000 worth of property were to be assessed the same amount for the same purpose, it would yield the sum of $140,000 toward the support of education. It now yields but little, and what it does pay to various counties in support of roads and schools this amendment does not seek to change. It merely seeks to have 50 per cent, which does not touch the 35 per cent the counties now receive, appropriated toward the support of the schools in which agriculture is taught.

The amendment seeks to grant to the College of Agriculture the same proportional amount of funds that each of the agricultural schools would receive. However, our College of Agriculture—one of the land-grant schools—while established more than 40 years ago, is situated in the northwest part of the State and where conditions of climate and soil are entirely different from that of the great body of the State. So six years ago, by act of the legislature, the State was divided into four districts and in each district was an authorization for the establishment of an agricultural school. For the founding of these schools only $160,000 was appropriated. The location of the school in its district was awarded to the community which would contribute most of its private means toward the erection of suitable buildings and providing lands upon which the school should be located. These private donations were much in excess of what the legislature gave of the State's funds. The schools have prospered in spite of adverse conditions, and last year, which was the fifth year, they had an annual enrollment of more than 2,000 pupils. Most of these were boys and girls from the county. I shall discuss more particularly the school located in my home town, Jonesboro. I am more familiar with it than I am with the others. It is, I think, one of the most useful schools in this country. Despite the limited appropriations and without a dollar for advertising, either by solicitation or publication, it has more pupils than it can accommodate. When I left home last December there were many boys sleeping in the barns, because the dormitories could not contain them, and both boys and girls had been denied entrance for this season. In its last year's enrollment were boys from seven different States. Our faculty, likewise, is made up of men and women from many States. The president, Mr. Kays, and one of the best school men I ever knew, is from Illinois. Two of the teachers are from the State of Pennsylvania, and one, I remember, comes from South Carolina, so you will perceive that we are not sectional in the selection of our faculty nor in admitting pupils.

Stock-judging teams from this school, though their entrance requirement is only that of the eighth grade and the course four years, took first honors in Kansas City and third place at the international stock shows at Chicago.

We must farm. That is our occupation both by choice and necessity. What we produce that is not necessary to feed and clothe our own people goes out to help feed the people of other sections. The more we produce, the more surplus we have, and the more we can contribute toward clothing and feeding the world. Now, we ask that 50 per cent of the proceeds arising from the sales of timber from the national forest reserve situated in our State be given us for the purpose of teaching the boys and girls—the men and women of the coming generation—the art of agriculture, dairying, animal husbandry, and household economics. Their skill so acquired will add to the wealth of the world. These forests now yield from all sources $37,800 per year.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Arkansas has expired.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that the time of the gentleman be extended five minutes.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Pennsylvania asks unanimous consent that the time of the gentleman from Arkansas be extended five minutes. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. CARAWAY. I yield.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. I wish before the gentleman closes he would make some reference to the effect of the passage of his amendment as a precedent to be considered by other States.

Mr. CARAWAY. Really, whatever I might say about that would be a matter of conjecture. I believe, however, it will lead to a like demand and good results in them.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. The law at the present, I think, is that only 25 per cent shall be applied for school purposes.

Mr. CARAWAY. Yes, sir.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. And if you adopt this, it would take Arkansas out of the general run.

Mr. CARAWAY. It would. I recognize that it is a special appeal for a special purpose. It will give to these five institutions a little more than $18,500 a year. In the years that are to come, of course, the income will be much greater.

As an illustration of the interest our people have in this subject, our present governor, in a spirit of economy, vetoed more than half the appropriation made by the last legislature for the support of these agricultural schools. Our people in the districts in which the schools are located are keeping them up. Under the law there is not a dollar available in either district for the payment of teachers' salaries, and will not be for another year. The people have met this emergency by guaranteeing the salaries of the teachers, and are thereby keeping these schools open.

Mr. BORLAND. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. CARAWAY. Yes.

Mr. BORLAND. If I am right, Arkansas has grown wonderfully in agricultural resources in the last decade, has she not?

Mr. CARAWAY. It is a revolution.

Mr. BORLAND. My observation as to Arkansas is that she is going to have a magnificent future as a cotton State.

Mr. CARAWAY. Yes.

Mr. BORLAND. I think all the section from the gentleman's territory east is going to be the garden cotton State in the Union.

Mr. CARAWAY. Yes; we are trying to realize our opportunities. When this agricultural school about which I am now talking was established there was not a silo in my whole district. The first silo that many of the people ever saw was built at that agricultural school. There were more than 50 erected in my county last year, and you must remember that the school is but five years old. We now have improved live stock and have adopted the most improved farming methods. The people are awake not only to the methods of scientific farming but are also improving their homes. Last week from one of the local papers published in Cross County in my district appeared an article which shows the advancement that is being made along these lines. The gentleman whose name is mentioned there I know well. I wish to have the article included in my remarks.

Mr. JOHNSON of Washington. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield there?

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman from Arkansas yield to the gentleman from Washington?

Mr. CARAWAY. Yes; I yield.

Mr. JOHNSON of Washington. Did I understand the gentleman a moment ago to say that they were without funds to provide school-teachers in some of the counties?

Mr. CARAWAY. No; I was referring to the agricultural schools. The law of our State requires appropriations to be made for specific purposes. The legislature appropriated for these agricultural schools $85,000, divided into two items, one of $40,000 and one of $45,000. The $45,000 item contained the provision for the teachers' salaries; that is, the teachers in these agricultural schools. The governor vetoed that item, and by that act took away the appropriation for the salaries of the teachers in these schools.

Mr. JOHNSON of Washington. It does not apply to county schools?

Mr. CARAWAY. It applies to agricultural schools, and to these only. These schools are open to the boys and girls of every State on the same terms as they are to the boys and girls in our own State. The only cost of attending these schools is the price of the food they eat and the clothing they wear. There is no charge made for rooms, heat, light, or tuition. As I said before, we now have pupils in this school in my home town from seven different States, and we extend to them the exact advantages and at the exact cost that our pupils receive and pay.

Mr. COX. Do not these outside students pay a cent?

Mr. CARAWAY. I believe they pay $5, a nominal sum.

Mr. MANN. Do they not pay board?

Mr. CARAWAY. I did not intend to convey that impression. They pay the exact cost of the food as it is served on the table, but they pay nothing for rooms.

Mr. MANN. Does that include rooms? I understood the gentleman stated that they did not pay anything for light and rent.

Mr. CARAWAY. They do not pay anything for rooms, light, heat, or tuition.

Mr. MANN. Does the State pay for the rooms?

Mr. CARAWAY. The State bears the expense of rooms, heat, and light, and where the State fails to do it our people have generously helped out the appropriation. The sum we here seek from the National Treasury is small, and yet we feel that the advantages will be incalculable. We realize that the national forest is the property of the National Government, and therefore the property of all the people of the Nation, and yet since the State must maintain the Government, must build the highways, must furnish opportunities for education, must feed and clothe the people who are the owners of these forests, and further that these forests are withdrawn for all time from the assessed wealth of the State, we feel that it is but just that this amendment should pass. After all, the Government has no property except what it holds in trust for the people, and owes no duty except to administer that trust in the interest of the people. Since all people must be fed and clothed, and the cost of the things they eat and wear is necessarily affected by the cost of the production, the people—and by the people I mean all the people—will be benefited by the education, scientifically, of the men and women who produce the things that feed and clothe us all. Therefore it does no injustice to those residing in other States, the joint owners with us of these funds, that they be appropriated for the teaching of agriculture, animal husbandry, dairying, and domestic economy in the schools that will benefit by this appropriation.

AN IDEAL FARM.

Much good has been accomplished and many valuable lessons taught by the diversified farm campaign waged in Cross County during the past two years; but there is one farmer whose work along this line stands out as an object lesson to all tillers of the soil in this section. We have reference to our good friend Mr. W. A. Faulkner, who resides 2 miles northeast of Cherry Valley. This editor had the good fortune to spend the day at his place on Tuesday of this week, and the things that we saw were in the nature of a revelation to us. Little lacking in every detail was the one we found nestling among the hills of old Crowleys Ridge on this bright spring morning.

The drive from this city was made in company with Mr. R. J. Jackson in his car, and shortly after our arrival at Mr. Faulkner's place we were escorted by that gentleman and his son, I. H. Faulkner, on a sight-seeing trip around his place. We will first describe his home. Situated at the foot of a gently sloping hill, with a beautiful oak grove in front, the house is one of those old imposing southern structures, with a wide hallway running between. On the inside we found all the modern improvements that one would expect to find in some swell home in the city. But there are porcelain bathtubs, kitchen sinks, hot and cold running water, and pretty chandelier suspended from the ceiling to accommodate the gas-lighting system.

Out in the yard close by is the pumping station which supplies the house and barns with an abundant supply of fresh water from a deep well. The pumps are driven by a gas engine of large size, which is also used to drive the wood saw, grist mill, washing machine, churn, and, in fact, everything on the place that requires power for its operation.

Next we were shown over the fields, orchards, and herds of sheep, cattle, and hogs. Mr. Faulkner's main hobby is pure-bred stock, and we saw some of the finest that it has ever been our pleasure to inspect.

By this dinner was announced as ready by Mrs. Faulkner, who supervises that detail of the household duties, and let it be said right here that from the variety and quantity of edibles placed before us, she is a thorough and capable manager. But the most important feature in connection with that sumptuous meal is the fact that every article on the table with the exception of sugar and coffee was produced there on the place.

Just after being seated at the table, we were served with a glass of delightful homemade grape wine. One taste of it would make some of California's boastful native sons turn green with envy. And then there were real yellow-legged chickens, fish, country-cured ham, and all the necessary delicacies, such as preserves, jam, pickles, and canned fruit. Even the fish served were home raised, having been taken that morning from a private pool near by, which had been stocked several years ago with black bass and crappie.

It is not often that a hungry editor has an opportunity to enjoy a visit with all the delights, such as we found on this trip, and it came in the nature of a most pleasant surprise to us.

Mr. Faulkner some yeas ago pictured in his mind's eye a model farm, equipped with every modern convenience. He set about to make his vision a living reality, and whether he has succeeded or not one only has to go and see. Mr. Faulkner is our idea of a prosperous farmer. Would that we had more like him.

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman from South Carolina [Mr. LEVER] insist on his point of order?

Mr. LEVER. I regret very much, Mr. Chairman, that I must insist on my point of order.

The CHAIRMAN. The point of order is sustained.

Mr. JOHNSON of Washington. Mr. Chairman, I offer an amendment on this paragraph.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Washington offers an amendment, which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. JOHNSON of Washington: Page 39, line 14, after the word "forests," strike out "$100,000" and insert "$300,000."

[Mr. JOHNSON of Washington addressed the committee. See Appendix.]

Mr. LEVER. Mr. Chairman, the amount carried in the bill is the amount estimated for by the department, and I trust the amendment will be defeated.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment of the gentleman from Washington [Mr. JOHNSON].

The amendment was rejected.

Mr. EDWARDS. Mr. Chairman, you frequently hear demagogues say, "Congress has done nothing for the farmers of the country." This untrue statement needs no denial, for the intelligent farmers of the country know the charge is false, and they also know that it generally eminates from some self-serving politician who has an eye on a congressional seat, and the purpose of the criticism is apparent.

We have passed the good-roads bill, carrying $25,000,000 for roads, and numerous other bills that directly effect and benefit the farmers of the country, but no bill that comes before Congress is so truly "the farmers' bill" as the one now being considered.

This bill carries $24,501,093 for agricultural development, and with which the Agricultural Department is to give aid to American farmers. This is the farmers' bill, and the Agricultural Department is the farmers' department.

We have of late heard much about "preparedness." This bill is a "preparedness" measure, for the armies and navies of the world, with guns and other necessary equipment, would be useless and helpless without food and clothing. Food and clothing come, along with a big share of the great wealth of the world, from the soil as the result of the "sweat from the farmer's brow."

Except those who actually investigate, few realize the largeness of the Agricultural Department and the many important things it is doing for the upbuilding and development of the country. No money to be appropriated at this session of Congress will be spent for more useful purposes than will the sum carried in this bill. It is interesting to note the estimates and the amounts carried in this bill, which are as follows:

Every item is for a useful purpose and will help in the building of a greater country.

As will be seen from this table, the amount carried in the Agriculture appropriation act for 1916 is $22,971,782; in addition, sums aggregating $225,000 appropriated by special acts and $395,000 by the recent urgent deficiency bill will be expended during the present fiscal year, making a total, aside from the permanent annual and deficiency appropriations, of $23,591,782. The sum carried in the appropriation bill for 1917, as reported by the committee, is $24,501,093, an increase over the amount carried in the appropriation act for the present fiscal year of $1,529,311.

By comparing the appropriations for the preceding year we see that Congress is doing more and more each year to develop agriculture, and with the increased appropriations the department grows and its usefulness to agriculture and to the American people extends and expands.

The scope of the activities of the Agricultural Department may be classed as follows:

(1) Research work, which includes the scientific study of the fundamental problems of agriculture.

(2) Educational or extension work, which aims to make available to the rural population the results of the department's experiments and discoveries.

(3) Regulatory work, which includes the administration of the following statutes: Meat-inspection act, cattle-quarantine act, diseased-animal transportation acts, 28-hour act, virus-serum-toxin act, food-and-drugs act, insecticide and fungicide act, plant-quarantine act, seed-importation act, Lacey game act, migratory-bird act, and the cotton-futures act. The administration of the national forests also may be included under this heading.

This is the ninth Agricultural bill I have helped to enact, and I am proud of my record.

Money spent as is proposed under this class of legislation is an investment and returns good dividends to the Nation. Almost every phase and subject relating to agriculture is dealt with by the department, and there ought not to be any objection on the part of anyone to the prompt passage of this bill. The benefits are, of course, directly to the farmers of the country, but the whole American people, regardless of class or avocation, are benefited through the splendid results being achieved by this department. The legislation is not sectional. It should not be sectional.

The South, the greatest agricultural section of the country in point of rich and undeveloped possibilities, will be more beneficially affected by these appropriations than any other section unless it is the great western section. All internal improvements help our country and make our people more independent and prosperous. As our people prosper our country prospers, too. All internal improvements as proposed in this bill, and like building good roads, improving transportation by navigation and otherwise, is money well spent in the interest of increased productions, easier and cheaper marketing, and as our harbors are opened up and the markets across the waters are opened to our products, increasing the demand for what we produce to sell, the prices will correspondingly increase to the American producer.

Congress, since I have been a Member, has taken a keen interest in the development of American agriculture, which may be called the backbone of all preparedness plans, because it enables us to prepare otherwise.

Those gentlemen from city districts who criticize "free seeds" and agricultural appropriations are ignorant of the great wrong they are guilty of. Those same gentlemen are ready to vote hundreds of millions for the Army and the Navy and yet ignore the great mainspring of all true preparedness and howl "economy" when this bill, with only a few millions, is before Congress.

Every loyal American who believes in his country and who has his country's welfare at heart should applaud and help Congress in its efforts to help the American farmers.

The agricultural interests of this country will not come fully into its own, however, until we have a rural-credits act which will enable the American farmer to develop and finance his farming operations by securing long-time loans at low rates of interest. We want a real rural-credits act, such as will work to the advantage of the farmers and not against their interest. Friends of the rural-credits legislation will not be satisfied with a "makeshift" in this important subject. It is my purpose when the rural-credits subject is up in the House to have more to say on the subject, so I shall not discuss it further at this time.

You will find the Representatives from the South and, in fact, with few exceptions, from every quarter of the country, standing squarely behind this Agricultural appropriation bill, insisting upon its passage. It means much to the farmers and it means much to the whole American people, and should become a law as speedily as possible in order that the good work of this great department may proceed with its constructive service in building up the greatest industry of the world.

Mr. CARAWAY. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the RECORD on the Agricultural bill.

Mr. HICKS. I make the same request.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Arkansas [Mr. CARAWAY] and the gentleman from New York [Mr. HICKS] ask unanimous consent to extend their remarks on the Agricultural appropriation bill. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

The Clerk read as follows:

For the survey and platting of certain lands, chiefly valuable for agriculture, now listed or to be listed within the national forests, under the act of June 11, 1906 (34 Stat., p. 233), and the act of March 3, 1899 (30 Stat., p. 1095), as provided by the act of March 4, 1913, $85,000: Provided, That any unexpended balance of an appropriation of $85,000 to be expended "for the survey and platting of certain lands, chiefly valuable for agriculture," etc., provided by the act of March 4, 1915, entitled "An act making appropriations for the Department of Agriculture for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1916," be, and the same is hereby, continued and made available for and during the fiscal year ending June 30, 1917, for the purpose of this appropriation.

Mr. HERNANDEZ. Mr. Chairman, I offer an amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from New Mexico offers an amendment, which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. HERNANDEZ: Page 40, line 7, after the word "appropriation," insert the following:

"Provided further, That in making the surveys and plattings herein authorized the usual rectangular system or legal subdivisions shall be followed, and that not to exceed any 40 acres of each 160-acre tract shall contain more than 10,000 feet of merchantable timber, board measurement, thereon."

Mr. LEVER. Mr. Chairman, I reserve a point of order on that amendment.

Mr. HERNANDEZ. Mr. Chairman, my object in offering this amendment is to call the attention of the committee to the fact that in administering the forest homestead act of June 11, 1906, the Department of Agriculture, through the Forestry Bureau, has usually left the administration of the law entirely to the judgment of the local officers, called rangers. As far as my experience goes—and I have had some practical experience, for a good many complaints have been made through me to the department—an applicant for a forest homestead goes before the ranger at the ranger's station and notifies him that he wishes to make a filing on certain land. He fills out an application, which is supposed to go to the district forester, the man who has charge of the forests within two or three States. By him it is referred back to the supervisor and the local forester. By and by the applicant for the homestead is notified that his application has been accepted or rejected, as the case may be.

If it is accepted, in nine cases out of ten where he has made application for a homestead of 160 acres or 80 acres, he gets perhaps 35 acres, 18 acres, 26 acres, or any odd number like that. This is the manner in which this forest homestead act is being administered. When the applicant finds out he has been given only a small portion of the land that he expected to receive, he gets disgusted and goes away, and that is precisely what the Forestry Bureau, through the ranger, wants him to do. That has been my experience in the State of New Mexico in regard to the forest homestead law. Now, this amendment goes quite a long way toward curing that defect. It provides that, notwithstanding a certain tract of land, say of 40 acres, containing as many trees perhaps as half the number of gentlemen who are here in this Hall at the present time, the applicant shall have that land listed to him in a reasonable and sensible way, so that he can fence it up.

A great deal has been said here about forests out in the West, and I am glad to know that a good many people are changing their opinion about this thing and are finding out that we out there have been made the victims of a mistaken theory, which was impracticable to say the least, and that Members are coming around now and finding out that a good deal of the area that they supposed to be a boulevard was nothing but a desert.
